Jerusalem as a Late Tourist Saw It.

James M. Grady, Esq., who lately toured the Holy Land with a party of 650, anxious of course to see the sacred places told of in Bible story, relates his convictions, which we find in the Truth Seeker of July 4. Our clerical readers, anxious to know the truth about Jerusalem, "the throne of the Lord," will read with a blending of pleasure and mortification:

"We saw Jerusalem," says Mr. Grady, "to our hearts' content, and I venture to say, out of 650 passengers of the [steamer] Arabec who saw it, there is not one who would want to see it again. I have spoken with good Christian men and women of our party from many states, and the consensus of opinion is, one's faith, to put it mildly, is not strengthened by a visit to the Holy City.

"It may be well to state in this connection, the history of Jerusalem, unlike that of Rome, is not continuous. For fifty years after its destruction by Titus, the site of Jerusalem was a wilderness, and for many years thereafter it was a village of huts. Then the Emperor Hadrian rebuilt the city, or, rather, built a city on the site of the old. And it was a pagan city until Helena, the mother of Constantine, visited Jerusalem, some 300 years after Christ, and 'discovered' the holy places pointed out to the pilgrims of to-day by ignorant monks and more ignorant guides."

[It may be proper to interpolate right here with the fact that the pretended visit of the mother of Constantine, A. D. 326, to Jerusalem, is in all probability, a baseless fiction. The site of the "Holy Places" were selected in the times of the Crusades, during the 12th century; then, to gain the favor of royalty, and add glory to the fiction, and make the event seem more important, Helena, the mother of the great monarch, was made to journey over an almost impassable mountain road, with all its discomforts, in search of an empty sepulchre. The romantic story has done service a good while, but bubbles in time are always exploded.—Ed. Progressive Thinker.]

"I wish to make plain here," continued Grady, "that I write in no irreverent spirit; but when I saw armed Turkish soldiers doing sentry duty in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem, and in the Church of Nativity in Bethlehem, for the sole purpose of preventing Christian Monks from murdering each other, as they have done in the past for love of God, I confess I felt outraged.

"Outside the American colony, and the Garden of Gethsemane, JERUSALEM IS THE FILTHIIEST PLACE ON THE PLANET.

"* * A visit to Jerusalem is not conducive to one's enjoyment of the trip. Its mongrel population is the most degraded and filthiest it is possible to imagine. There is not one redeeming trait visible, either in the city, or its people, and we left Jerusalem joyfully happy to get away from it, yet glad we had seen it, for it was an experience never to be forgotten."

A General Organization Needed.

That well-known Catholic organ of New York, "The New World," says:

"Justice Gaynor of New York, seemed literally flying into [nomination] for the vice-presidency, at Denver, when it came out he was an apostate, and the fact crushed him."

Can the statement be true? Has the Catholic church gained such complete control of our free institutions it must be consulted to know whether candidates for office are apostates from that church? If so, it is time liberals of all classes were organizing their forces to co-operate and cast their ballots in such manner as to suppress bigotry. United, their numbers properly directed would give victory to any party

Invulnerable Facts, (No. 5.)

It was stated last week that in all probability the Phenicians, unwittingly and for centuries, had borne the name of Jews, an imposition imposed on an uneducated people, when letters were scarcely known, save by the monks in their cloisters, or to the priesthood. We find them with the revival of learning, with scarcely an exception, in those great commercial and business centers where they were at the beginning of our era. Spain was densely populated with Phenicians following the destruction of Carthage, from whence they had fled and remained, and increased in numbers until expelled by Ferdinand and Isabella, in 1492. Mingling with their remote ancestry in the Barbary States who had long been in contact with the colored population of Africa, a dark-haired people, the Moors, were the product, with whom the Phenicians, metamorphosed into Jews, had intermingled.

We find them again in the countries bordering on the Black Sea, just where commerce had taken them; but now they are Jews, and Christians are slaughtering them because "they killed Jesus."

The nonsense of the "ten lost tribes of Israel," by which Christians account for Jews so far north as the Caspian, should be told the marines. No scholar who has given thought to the subject will entertain the idea for a moment. Even in Egypt and Palestine, the Exploring Fund, which sought for many years to find evidence of Jews in those countries, save at Modin, mentioned in Maccabees 3; 25 to 30, did not find a solitary trace. Though the most strenuous efforts were made in Jerusalem, by long use of pick and spade, to find some remains of the foundation of Solomon's Temple, yet they gave up in despair, because, as they alleged, the Sultan would not allow them to undermine the Court of Omar, where the searchers finally concluded the ruins were secreted. There is where the ridiculous comes in.

We have proved by abundant Christian authority that the Septuagint, on which our ecclesiastical history and literature are based, is not what has been supposed; that the ablest church scholars concede it came from a "concealed fountain." We have proved that the supposititious Jesus, in all his citations of Old Testament texts, invariably drew upon the Septuagint for authority, as did the writer of the Gospels and Epistles, and the Fathers of the church. Of this seventy (the English of the Greek Septuagint) "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s edition of 1889, p. 2923, sec. 3, says:

"The language of the LXX. is the mould in which the thoughts and expressions of the Apostles and Evangelists are cast." As that rendering has proven to be a fabrication, no one able to tell from whence it came, does not a violent presumption follow that it is the lost history of the Phenicians, which tricksters have reconstructed to serve the purpose of upbuilding a new priesthood. The "mold," and the cast from it are alike worthless.

Don't forget it is not this writer who declared the Septuagint, on which the whole superstructure of Christianity rests, is fraudulent, and from an unknown source, but the citations quoted, every one of them, is from the highest Christian authorship. Let us recite, or quote anew a few passages; first from Kitto, article Septuagint."

"The OLDEST version of the Old Testament in ANY LANGUAGE is the Greek translation, commonly called the Septuagint. * * * Few notices of its origin are extant, and even such as do exist are suspicious and contradictory. * * The version was spread into Egypt, Northern Africa and Asia Minor. * * Philo and Josephus adopted it; and IT WAS UNIVERSALLY RECEIVED BY THE EARLY CHRISTIANS. * * * In the beginning of the 4th century Pamphilius and Eusebius copied the column containing the text of the Seventy, with the passages and scholia out of other translations, and the critical marks used by Origen. It is to be regretted this copy was soon extensively corrupted."

False and fraudulent as was this production it met the common fate of everything else which has come to us through Catholic hands; it was doctored to meet their needs. We are told that in every monastery there was one who could write Greek, and we know by the character of the literature which has reached us, they had no regard for truth, but, like Paul, gloried in lying for God.

To summarize: If it is true as alleged by Christian authors, many of whom we have quoted, that the learned Philo, himself reputed a Jew, who lived and wrote in the time credited to Jesus, used and quoted only the Septuagint, in place of the pretended Jewish Scriptures; if Titus, himself a Cæsar, aided by the wealth of the Roman empire, and her imperial army, was unable to find a genuine copy of the untranslated Hebrew Scriptures, to furnish his favorite, Josephus, who needed it to write his Antiquities of the Jews; if Josephus, by birth and education a Jewish priest, having the confidence of his own people, as well the friendship of the Roman general, could not find a copy of the Hebrew, but made use of this fraudulent Alexandrian translation in all his writings; if "our Lord," born, as Christians claim, within six miles of Jerusalem, and he "the eternal Son of God," always quoted from these bastard and corrupt Scriptures, translated where and by whom no one can tell, perhaps original frauds; if Paul brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, the latter a member of the Sanhedrim, and a grand-son of the learned Hillel, used the Septuagint only and quoted from it in all of his Epistles, one to the Hebrews themselves; if the Jews read this Greek and corrupt version in all their synagogues which became so numerous after the Antiochian dispersion, and even in their Temple at Jerusalem, after their restoration by the Romans to that city; if Origen, "after traveling for twenty-eight years, in quest of material, and meeting with six Greek translations," finally completed his great work in fifty volumes, only revised the Greek version, unable to find a Hebrew copy; if Eusebius, writing about the year 326, more than 600 years after the reputed Septuagint translation, was yet unable to find the original Hebrew Scriptures so made use of the Septuagint in writing his Ecclesiastical History; if Lucian, who attempted to correct the translation to agree with the Hebrew, "used the Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, not the Hebrew," as Kitto believes; if this Septuagint was translated into Latin, and became the Holy Scriptures in the Roman church, which Jerome tried to correct by comparing with hundreds of varying copies, and which floated down to the 8th century, and then partly gave way to another Latin translation purporting to have been made from Hebrew by this same "foul-mouthed Jerome," so designated by Mosheim; and if our ablest writers of modern times find the Septuagint agreeing in more than a thousand places with even the Samaritan Scriptures, wherein they differ with what now pass for Jewish, are we not justified in concluding the Septuagint is not a rendering of any Jewish Scriptures, but either an independent Alexandrian production; else, more probably, the Phenician, which all scholars agree disappeared at the fore part of the first century of our era.

The most unprincipled shyster who prowls in courts of law for human prey, who will resort to any artifice, however contemptible to gain his cause, will not controvert the points we have made in this series of articles. Bishop Grafton, so frequently cited, saying, "Ministers teach what the church instructs them to say, not what they believe," gives the key to their false inculcations. The church is a corporation without a soul, hence is without responsibility, and will experience no hell. Wonder if that dodge will avail the clerics anything in the final summing up at the Grand Assize, when, according to church teaching human actions are passed in review?

Enforce the Law.

The obtaining of money under false pretenses is a felony, punishable by a term of service in the penitentiary. Each person guilty of practicing a fraud as a medium, taking compensation therefor, is a felon and deserves the severest penalty of the law. It is evident the rascals will not cease their crimes until brought to justice. Every exposure, when proof is positive, should be immediately followed by a criminal prosecution, and no sympathy should be aroused in favor of the offender. A few convictions with prison doors closed on the cheats, others will take warning and the practice will cease. Unpunished they change the fields of operation, and with greater care go on with their deception. Prosecute every case to the full extent of the law.

Letter of Explanation.

To the Editor:—I noticed an item in The Progressive Thinker of July 8, comparing Shakers to "Holy Jumpers," which is not at the present time in the least appropriate.

Half a centutry since the likeness might have been in some respects more fitting, as in that far aback time much enthusiasm marked our "meetings," with some pretty noisy demonstrations in accompaniment, now and then, which were at times continued till far into the night.

Religious dances were engaged in (originating in Bible lore), leaping, shouting, shaking, etc., but nothing of a disturbing element, either within or outside our own domain. For the time being we enjoyed these exercises, and a "revival meeting" especially, was hailed with intense pleasure, spiritually speaking.

The foregoing practices were many years since discontinued, and at the present time a comparison with the good old-fashion quaker system of worship, would be far more fitting than the one which caused this letter to be written.

The practice of to-day is to enter the "chapel" very quietly, each sex seating themselves on their own side of the room. Then singing, speaking, etc., follows as the "spirit within" moves them to do. The organ is brought into exercise (which was not the case in the early times), and the printed music is mostly of local origin, that is the order at large.

Spiritualizing One's Self.

An Impressive Divine Lesson for Spiritualists to Consider—You Make Your Own Habits, Good or Bad, as You Will—Study This Lesson Well, and Profit Thereby.

Be there a habit of habits that is at once both good and ill [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] it is the habit of living in our habits and letting them look after us. In one of Prof. James of Harvard's luminous lectures he enjoins teachers to regard their pupils as parcels of habits with their brains and bodies going as they do automatically, with scarcely a word from their wills.

People sit in the midst of their habits like a man enveloped in machinery that goes without even his pressing the button. Whimsical passing forces, an errant, skipping breeze, a burst of waterfall, a flaming flare of sunlight suffices to turn on the current. The man in the middle is a thing apart and has nothing to say about it. Second nature, yes, second man, this automaton running mechanically out of the control of the proper original owner and original maker. Saint Paul describes it all when he writes of doing the things he would not and of not doing the things he would.

Perhaps some man has hunted up dietetics and their sciences and decided against meats for his bill of fare. But alas! for his wonted ways with the flesh pots. At the first sniff of porterhouse smothered in onions it is all over with the vegetarian regimen. The sniff was the outside stimulus needed to set in motion the machinery of his carnivorous habit. He is caught up in a swirl, sits down to his steak, and revels in the gory viands of yore.

Or the man resolves to preserve his equanimity of temper. But to what purpose? He has the habit of flying into a fury when he is annoyed. And the first provocation that arises is like the red flag to the bull. His rage is on him before he knows it.

Still for all that he will win out with both steaks and temper if he has the metal of a conqueror.

The whole philosophy of habit is crystallized in the simple law of repetition. Do something for the first time and you find it hard. The nerves and muscles are tackling a new trick. But a second time it is easier. A third or fourth or fifth time it does itself. A sixth it is second nature. The automatism has its good and economical uses, for it enables our wishes to be executed without any supervision from us. Such is the history of our sympathetic nervous system and of the other bodily apparatuses.

In the dim and distant bygones breathing had to be carried on by direct action of the will until after numberless repetitions practice made perfect and the round of processes was established automatically and the man was left free to busy himself with other matters. In that way he had a chance to cultivate the higher faculties he now uses.

This is the history of all our habits of good or ill. They began with our wish to do thus and so. Later on we may change our minds and will do otherwise. But the habit goes on as before. It is then that we realize the power of our habits and our own impotence. But after all we are not powerless. The rule works both ways. We can reign over our habits royally quite as easily as we can obey them in simple servility. We can break off the bad and make new the good. The same law of repetition that renders a bad habit fearsomely strong is its own undoing. We can set up a counter habit and practice it until it is perfect. We may fall ten thousand times, but every attempt wings us nearer our goal. Every practice leaves impress on nerve, muscle, brain, hand—makes it easier to work in the new way. At last the will filters into our finger ends and tongue tips and the machinery is running under the new regime. The more powerful our will the more speedily this is done.

It may prove a long and languishing and wearisome job. So was the building of all our habits. Some of them began longer and longer ago than all the adventures of the fairy tales. They were born in ages uncounted and unknown. We have our appendix in our physical body, a nuisance if anything. But long ago it was useful. It developed in the system when it served good ends. It is mischievous only because the body has outgrown the sane purposes of long ago. The horse has glands on his legs which point to his primeval life on the plains when he left the trail for his companions by the drops oozed from his big gland bags as he ran. Now they are only vestiges, and in his way. Some of our bad habits are moral and mental appendixes and leg glands. They are hurtful because they have outlived their purposes and impede the newer present order, antiquated machinery.

If we resolve upon a vegetarian habit it is because we are rising to a finer, daintier level of living and feed from more delicate nutriments than flesh foods can furnish. The flesh foods served their day. We merely have transcended these uses. Or if we are determined upon a habitually equable temper it is because we have outgrown the need of the rough devices to secure our ends, supplied by fits of anger, irritability and moodiness. But in our primitive days we would not have known how to employ the soft answer that turneth away wrath.

Many of our most vicious habits are the oldest. They point to past lives when we lived on earth as cruder creatures under men and women. They took long ages to grow and they are not going to vanish in a wink. Left to old Mother Nature, they eventually will pass away by the slow atrophy of gradual disuse, much as the appendix must some time pass. That is the way the flowers evolve out of their old forms into the higher and that is the way of the dogs, and the cats, and the singing birds and the savages. They grow by what their environment forces upon them as expedient for the moment and the fittest survive.

But reasoning men take a hand in the game. They ask Mother Nature for her secrets and manipulate her laws. They thus express the changes that take place as evolution proceeds between the reactions of organism and environment. In the earlier stages of evolution the environment plays the grander role. But they also can and do turn about and make the sort of environment that will produce the sort of men they want. The more advanced the man the more bigly he handles his environment, causes the wilderness to blossom as the rose, and fashions the rose itself to suit his fancy. He breeds dogs, birds, horses after models of his making; soon he will be breeding people, Apollos, and Venuses of body and of mind, too.

And still a slave to petty passions he disdains? Still a hireling to some fool habit? Not for long.

Habits may make the man. But the man can make the habits. The laws for habit making are clear as the laws for cross straining horses or tulips. And they are pregnant with possibilities too big to grasp. They render us architects not only of our fates and fortunes but of our characters, too, which underlie the outer fortunes. It is no excuse to plead that, "I have fallen into the habit of thus and so." We can rise into habits. We can build ourselves as we elect, deliberately choose our ideal, and erect it out of the fabric of our own lives. If the processes are long they also are sure, and they are no longer than the ages we have for building. If we have had the primeval past to build the present, so we have our immortal to-morrows for fulfilling to-day.

And the processes quicken apace. They say that it used to take six generations to make a gentleman and that now it needs but one. It used to require as many weeks, as many months to span the Atlantic as it now requires days. We use faster forces. If we are good and wise enough to lay hold of the right energy we can pluck out a bad habit in a day, like an appendix cleared away instantly on the surgeon's table. That means a colossal will, a magnificently powerful initiative, and dogged, everyday sort of perseverance.

JUDGE BLECKLEY'S AGNOSTICISM

His Life One That "Christians" Might With Modesty Imitate.

Judge Bleckley of the Supreme Court of Georgia, who has recently died, was an Agnostic. In an address which he delivered at the annual meeting of the Georgia Bar Association, held at Warm Springs in July, 1905, he said:

"I commenced thinking about religion when I was about 11 years old. I am not considered a religious man. Unfortunately my membership is in a larger church than people generally join. I am a member of the church universal. I don't want you to embrace my views, you understand, unless they become your views. Now, I can doubt the principles of any religion. To me there is no credible religion. There is no religion but what has incredible dogmas embraced in it. I am speaking with the candor of a man that is honest, and is courageous enough to speak what he thinks is truth. I might be silent on this subject, but there is no reason why I should not speak. I am coming to the time when I have got to face some religion. I have got to die by it. I can die by it, but of course I might be mistaken.

"I believe that the failure of any particular religion will not wreck things, for there is a religion which I define to be the essential relation of man to the source of his origin, just like I defined law to be the essential relation between facts. Religion, as I understand it, and that religion that you can rest on and be safe in standing by to the last, may be defined as the essential relation between man and the source of man; between man and the origin of man; between man and his Creator, without considering whether his Creator is a God or a person or anything else, but whatever it is, the relation between man and the thing or that collection of things, or that assemblage of forces, from which he decends or results, that's religion as I conceive it, and I am a member of that church. Now, it don't hurt the church to have more particular religions. I don't say that any of them are wrong. Some of them must be, or might be, but suppose they turn out to be wrong. Are we lost? Are we wrecked? I say no. If you put your faith in the right thing, whether you know the thing is or not, it don't matter whether you know what it is or not, if you have got faith that that whatever is right, and can be depended on to take you out of the world as well as to bring you into it, your hope may be equally broad with your faith. But if you restrict your faith until you narrow it down to one theory, be it Christianity, Buddhism or Mohammedanism or anything else, and that prop is taken away from you, your faith is destroyed, and therefore your hope has no chance to live. In order to have hope independent of mistake and error, you must have your faith broader than any particular religion. That don't lead to the inference that your religion is not the one, but it provides for the failure of your religion."

The Agnosticism of Judge Bleckley was further confessed in the following quatrain:

"And, Lord, do not regard me less,
And let it not augment my woe,
That I the naked truth confess,
Which is, I know I do not know."

The Atlanta newspaper, in a clipping from which we take the excerpts from his writings here given, pays this tribute to the character of the deceased jurist:

"Judge Bleckley's unattackable private life, his modesty, bordering at times on timidity, and his undeviating adherence to what he called the "law of right," make his religious views of great interest."

How often it occurs that the lives of Freethinkers are such that Christians may well keep them in view as examples while working out their own salvation in fear and trembling!

IMPORTANT LETTER OF INQUIRY.

The Notorious Doctor Kingsley, Who Figured Conspicuously in Indianapolis and Chicago, and Who Afterwards Committed Suicide at Minneapolis, Minn., is Supposed to be Dr. Leslie Monck, of England.

To the Editor: I act as solicitor for the family of Dr. Francis Ward Monck, who was born in the year 1843 and who left Portsmouth (England) in 1881, and from that year to 1883 lived in Brooklyn, where he was well known as a Spiritualistic medium. Since 1883 he has been lost sight of; but it has recently been suggested that a Dr. Leslie Day, otherwise Dr. Leslie R. Kingsley, clairvoyant, who committed suicide at Minneapolis in December last, was in fact Dr. Monck, and that you may be able to give assistance in clearing up the question of identity.

Dr. Day, I understand, was a clairvoyant and pastor of the First Spiritualist church in Indianapolis; whence he proceeded to Denver and afterwards to Chicago, at which latter place he lectured on Spiritualism at Kimball hall. While in Indianapolis reference to him appeared in your paper, The Progressive Thinker; I should be glad if you could favor me with any information which may tend to show whether Dr. Day and Dr. Monck were the same person.

Yours truly, A. W. MILLS.

"Text Book, Ritual, Valuable Data, and Selected Poems."

To the Editor:—At last our new "Text-book, Ritual, Valuable Data and Selected Poems", is ready for distribution and all who have ordered the same in advance will be supplied as rapidly as possible. As advertised in another column, it is cloth bound, price 50 cents, postage 5 cents extra. Special prices to individuals and organizations taking larger amounts. Address all orders to the undersigned. This book is especially valuable to state associations, local societies, all workers in the movement and wide-awake laymen.

At the last convention Missouri took the lead in highest educational qualifications concerning the history, science, philosophy, phenomena, etc., of Spiritualism. After the discussion Occasioned by the report of the committee on ordination, it was decided among other things that the secretary should correspond with the leading Spiritualist papers and booksellers to ascertain the best publication through which our workers could prepare themselves. After a lengthy correspondence it was ascertained that the kind of book we needed was not in existence, and that to cover our requirements, it would be necessary for the applicant for ordination or other certificates to absorb parts of a large number of books. Now, all questions to our various applicants for certificates will be formulated from this book. Here we have the necessary information (not all, but the least that should be known by our workers), all condensed into one volume, which includes ritualistic work, valuable data for the information and use of Spiritualists, and some beautiful poems, all printed in clear, new, large type that will add materially to the pleasure occasioned by the book's contents.

The author, Mr. Paul McArthur, our President, has given a great amount of care and labor in its preparation, and after its approval by the Progressive Spiritualist Association of Missouri has donated the result of his efforts to it. All receipts, after expenses have been paid, will go to the State Association to further educational and organization work for Spiritualism.

In publishing this volume, The Progressive Spiritualist Association of Missouri, again demonstrates its use of practical methods in dealing with situations that confront them and the whole movement, believing that it fills a void that has long existed, and in view of the interest manifested and the advance orders received, we anticipate a large circulation of this work. Fraternally yours,

OTTO VIERLING, M. D.

MIRACLES, ONE BY ONE, DENIED BY PROFESSOR.

Herbert L. Willett Says That No Man Ever Performed Any, and Dissects the Bible—Red Sea Story Taken Up—Cherished Incidents of Holy Writ Called the Work of Clever Men or Else Impossible.

"No man ever lived who could perform a miracle—that is, who could cause a change of God's laws of government of the universe. The old Testament miracles as narrated by old Testament writers are chiefly fanciful narratives based on fact or legend and should not be taught children as literal description of facts. You cannot teach children in school of the unchangeable laws of nature and then teach them in Sunday-school that these laws are at times broken by God or his prophets."

In this language Prof. Herbert L. Willett of the University of Chicago divinity school to-day outlined to a reporter for The Daily News his belief that the Old Testament accounts of miraculous feats by prophets of the children of Israel are largely imaginative in their make-up and that when reduced to basis of fact the miracles will be found to have been natural phenomena exaggerated by writers who sought further to glorify the great men of whom they wrote. Prof. Willett enumerated a number of Old Testament miracles and gave his opinion of the truth concerning them. His talk followed a lecture last night in which he told his classes of his theory.

Give Basis for Faith.

"I hold this interpretation to be of value as giving a basis for believers of this generation to cling to their faith," said Prof. Willett. "We must interpret according to strict letter and lose the value of the writings or we must interpret according to the personalities of the men written about to arrive at the basis of truth of the narratives. Any primitive people—the ancient Hebrews as well as others—love marvels. Our own children, undeveloped intellectually, have their fairy tales. All ancient literature is full of marvelous stories. Are we to believe all bad except the Hebrew literature; that all are good, or that there is falsehood and exaggeration in all, the Old Testament included?

"The laws of God are God's way of working. He does not work by the breaking of those laws. A real miracle is not an interference with or a breaking of a law of God's, but a working out of a higher use or application of such a law. I believe that there were great men in the Old Testment days as there have been in all times and that they did great things.

Thinks Men Appeared Superhuman.

"For instance, I believe that there were men who appeared to the people of their marvel-loving time to control nature or natural forces. Men who could heal as men of our own time have done, by commanding a sick one to be well and convincing him that he is well. Call it hypnotism or what you will. I believe in the inspiration of man and not the mere words of the text.

"I have divided the miracles of the Old Testament into four groups. My first group includes miracle narratives apparently based on fact, but exaggerated. The ten plagues of Egypt come under this head. I believe that the ten plagues formed a series of unusual natural disasters which visited Egypt.

Children of Israel Seize Chance.

The children of Israel took advantage of these," continued the speaker, "to point out how God befriended them and to free themselves of bondage. There is the miracle of the restoring to life of the Shulamite's son. I do not question that the great prophets did heal sick, as we know of men to-day who have a magnetic or other power to heal, but the son probably was not yet dead except by reason of the narrators' exaggeration.

"Of the crossing of the Red sea by the children of Israel we have two accounts. In the prose account we are told in a matter of fact way that they crossed at a time when the wind had driven back the waters. Of the poetic account I shall speak under another heading. The narratives of creation, to my mind, are fanciful accounts of the successive steps of evolution as we understand it to-day.

Denial Made of Some in Toto.

"The second set of tales of miraculous happenings contains those based on figures of speech which have no basis of fact, including the command of Joshua to the sun and moon to stand still as told in the poetical book of Joshua; also the battle of Beth-Horon, in which God was said to have hurled down stones on the Canaanites. This probably was some kind of storm. In the fifteenth chapter of Exodus we have the poetical account of the crossing of the Red sea. Here we are told that the waters piled themselves up on each side and congealed into walls, leaving a dry path. The Psalmist also in this group tells about mountains bowing down and little hills skipping like lambs. This doesn't mislead any one into believing that this occurred; then why should the other?"

Some Classed as Legends.

The third group is of miracle stories with legendary basis," declared Prof. Willett, "such as that of the man raised to life after being killed in battle, his body being dropped into Elisha's tomb and touching the prophet's bones—mere legend, given its Old Testament form to glorify Elisha. As to the three children of Israel in the fiery furnace, this story should be used not to emphasize a legendary miracle but to illustrate the faithfulness and courage of the three.

"My fourth group of Old Testament miracles includes those which violate not only probability, but morals, and therefore cannot be taken as authoritative demonstration from God of the ethics of his religion. The destruction of the children by bears at Bethel at Elisha's command is one of these. The death of Uzza as punishment for his efforts to sustain the tottering ark is another, as is the destruction of the band of soldiers sent by the king of Israel to arrest Elijah.

Real Miracles Growth of Ideas.

"The great miracles of the Old Testament are not these marvel stories some of which are fact and some of which are the work of imagination, but the growth of ethical ideas; the lives of great men who made history—prophets, heroes, sages and martyrs of the faith; the use of law, institutions, history and biography for the development of character; the production of the greatest literature of antiquity—the Old Testament—and the creation and fostering of the Messianic hope."

Spiritualism Not Spiritism.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Venerable Octogenarian, Sends Us the Following Valuable Data, Scintillating With Grand Truths in Defense of Genuine Spiritualism, and Which We Spread Before Our Numerous Readers, it Being a Reply to Kellar (the Great Magician) and a Late Evangelist.

Inasmuch as last Sunday's Journal-Record (an excellent weekly) contained a four-column article on Spiritualism, and further as one of the late visiting evangelists to this city (traveling evangelism has now become a trade, with money considerations) stated in a sermon that Spiritualism was "anti-Christ, anti-religious and the enemy of all righteousness," several citizens not known as Spiritualists, but rather as independent thinkers, have asked for a reply from my pen. One, a prominent city official, said, "I really want to know what Spiritualism is, and what it teaches."

Controversy is more and more distasteful to me. Equality, charity and fraternity are the great words demanded by this twentieth century.

All the more is controversy opposed to my taste just now from the fact that I am engaged upon my book of "Five Journeys Around the World." Nevertheless, reminded of the apostolic injunction, "contend earnestly for the faith," I submit the following reply:

Evidently this evangelist, not knowing the modifying effect of suffixes, confounded Spiritualism with Spiritism, the latter being an old Babylonian practice, often selfish and mercenary, and wisely condemned by Israel's prophets. To what extent such ignorance is justifiable the public must decide. To confound Spiritualism which is of with this cheap, scheming spiritism is just as absurd as to confound God with this cheap, scheming spiritism is just as absurd as to confound the science of chemistry with alchemy.

However, as the "glove" has been thrown down, using a phrase of chivalrous times, I take it up and proceed.

Whether such a tramping magician, flippant talker and deceiver of the senses as is Mr. Kellar is the proper man to venomously attack that Spiritualism which relates to God and heaven, to death and immortality, a thinking, reasoning people must decide for themselves. Spiritualism, be it remembered, is not atheism, not materialism, nor agnosticism, nor fortune-telling for mercenary purposes.

SOME OF MR. KELLAR'S STATEMENTS ARE UNQUALIFIEDLY FALSE, SUCH AS THAT WRITING MEDIUMS "HAVE A THIMBLE WITH A BIT OF SLATE STUCK TO IT HID UP IN THE SLEEVE." messages being read by holding the slate between the big toe and the one next to it, special "stockings being made for the conjurors and Spiritualists with the toes cut out," and still more of such slime and slush from the tongue of this conjuror who has spent a life-time in deception and trickery. People quite naturally judge others by themselves.

That there are frauds and travelers in and under the sacred name of Spiritualism, is frankly admitted. Such fraudulent persons are heaven-daring and wicked. Personally, within a few years I have exposed no less than three of these traveling impostors, calling themselves "spirit mediums." And The Progressive Thinker, a prominent Spiritualist journal published in Chicago, has exposed dozens of this class of frauds playing Kellar tricks and pronouncing themselves mediums for psychic manifestations. Every Spiritualist as well as every good citizen deplores these and all other fraudulent practices. And considering the worldly depravity of humanity, how can they be prevented?

By the way, are there no frauds in our foods? No frauds in government? No frauds in manufactories? No frauds, no counterfeits in currency? No frauds in sectarian pulpits? These frauds, sad as they are, will not be denied.

Do a few infamous frauds destroy the truth of Spiritualism? Did the treachery of Judas, the falsehoods and profanity of Peter, destroy early Christianity? The wickedest wars of the world, wars for conquest, have been waged by Christian nations. In that fierce French and German war several years ago—both Christian nations—when during a great battle 3,000 Frenchmen were slain, the enthused Germans the next evening marched in the streets of Berlin, singing:

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow;
Three thousand Frenchmen sent below."

The Master, Jesus, said, "Put up thy sword * * * return good for evil, blessing for cursing."

The irrepressible Mark Twain, upon whom Oxford University recently conferred a high honorary degree, said in his salutation of the nineteenth to the twentieth century:

"I bring you the stately matron of Christendom, returning, gedraggled, besmirched and dishonored from the battlefield, from pirate-raid in Ku-Chow, Manchuria, South Africa and the Philippines, with her soul full of meanness, her pocket full of boodle and her mouth full of pious hypocrisies. Get soap and a towel, but hide the looking-glass."

Consider the religious wars of Europe, where a million bones were left to bleach on crimson fields—and all in the name of the Prince of Peace. Consider the heresy trials, the wranglings, the controversies and jealousies rampant among the 157 Christian sects and sub-sects of our country, including Christian Scientists and Mormons; I say Mormons because they profess to be Christians par excellence, and on the front of their great, original temple in Kirkland, Ohio, are inscribed these words "The Later Day Saints of Jesus Christ." Well may Afghan Mohammedans and Ceylonese Buddhists, Chinese and Hindus, ask, "What is Christianity? And which sect brings to our oriental countries the genuine?"

If Jesus Christ were to come into our city on Saturday, the Sabbath that he kept, Syrian-clad and sandal-footed, what would he say to this confusion of tongues and division of creeds? Would he not ask: "How many of you have, according to my command, sold what you have and given it to the poor? How many of you go about doing good, making the lame to walk, the blind to see? How many of you prove your faith by laying hands on the sick and healing them?"

This is not saying one word against the Christianity of the Christ, for in this Christianity I am a devoted believer. But I am talking about this popular sectarian Churchianity that rolls in luxury, persecutes conscientious heretics and pronounces Spiritualism "anti-Christ, anti-religious, and the enemy of all righteousness."

Spiritualism Unpopular.

Spiritualism is about as unpopular now as was Protestantism for centuries in Germany and England—as unpopular as was Methodism in Calvinistic, orthodox New England seventy and more years ago.

Quite a number of years ago Bishop Samuel Fallows of Chicago published the following in the Chicago Journal on "Progress During the Nineteenth Century:"

"A few years before the opening of the last century an English clergyman of the established church wrote thus of Methodist ministers, They are canting zealots, dirty dabblers, who turn religion into rot, prayer into strife, themselves into wolves, and the temple of the Lord into a den of devils'?"

In consonance with the above, well do I remember a scene seventy-seven years ago in Vermont. My parents and grand-parents were Scotch Presbyterians and Calvinistic Baptists, and when announced that the Methodists were going to hold a "ten day's meetings in a neighbor's barn," I asked my parents to let me attend. "No!" was the prompt reply. "It is no place for boys and young folks to go. These Methodists are half-crazy. They wear horrid-shaped dresses. They groan and shout, and some of them get the power and fall onto the ground. Do you stay at home." But persistently pleading, boy-like, my father finally said I could go a little while on Saturday afternoon, "but not on Sunday, for that would be wicked."

Progress.

Surely the religious world moves. And now Methodists have become a respectable class of people, even popular. Judging the future by the past, what may not Spiritualism become, say in seventy or eighty years. Already they have a national organization, with a splendid book establishment in Washington, D. C.; they have state organizations, county organizations, organized societies, church edifices and ordained preachers.

What is Spiritualism?

As aforesaid, Spiritualism is not atheism, not materialism, nor sectarianism, nor agnosticism, nor animism, nor spiritism that tells fortunes, divines for money, hunts for buried treasures, ridicules pure religion and seeks spirit converse through visions, trances, for selfish, scheming purposes. All this is necromancy, or a kind of unspiritual spiritism. The leading fact of Spiritualism is the knowledge of a present-day communion between the inhabitants of the visible and invisible worlds, thus demonstrating that realities of a future conscious life beyond the grave.

Personally, I believe in God, the Father, Almighty, that is, the Infinite Consciousness, Energy, Life and Purpose of the universe. I believe in Jesus Christ as "the brightness of the Father's glory—believe in the Holy Spirit—in the inspirations of the Bible—in religion, pure and undefiled—in the sanctity of prayer—in the necessity of repentance—in the uplifting beauty of faith, in the certainty of punishment for all wrong-doing, and in the present ministries and messages of angels and spirits under proper psychic conditions. Paul exhorted men to "Add to their faith, knowledge." This I have done, rejoicing in this gospel of knowledge.

Who Are These Spiritualists?

In their ranks, they number multitudes of the most enlightened, scholarly and illustrious men in the world, such as the late Judge Edmonds on the supreme bench in New York, Prof. Hare of the Pennsylvania University, Prof. Hyslop of the Columbia University of New York, editor of the "Psychical Research Journal;" Sir William Crookes, of London, Sir Oliver Lodge, of Birmingham, England, Alfred R. Wallace, pensioned by Queen Victoria for his great scientific attainments; Flammarion, the eminent French astronomer; Victor Hugo, whom I once met in a seance in Paris; W. T. Stead, the editor of the "London Review of Reviews." This English author and journalist is a writing medium and has published a book obtained from automatic spirit writing through his own hand. The distinguished Consul-General of France, Leon Favre, was a Spiritualist and a writing medium. I was once his guest in Paris for two weeks, and saw the manuscripts, the contents of which were received through his own hand from spirits occupying different planes of consciousness. The noted Mr. Forsyth said that "Spiritualists constituted the cream of society and the brains of the world." It is certain that the martyred Lincoln belonged to no church, yet entertained mediums at the White House. Prof. William James, of Harvard University, pronounced the most distinguished psychologist of the world, attended Mrs. Piper's spiritual seances, etc. I could fill volumes with the world's most gifted souls, men and women, who are Spiritualists, many of them preferring to remain in the churches.

TO MY CONCEPTION, TRUE CHRISTIANITY AND TRUE SPIRITUALISM ARE IN PERFECT ACCORD, and deeply do I sorrow that there is not more toleration, more charity, and sufficient of the Christ-spirit in our pulpits, preaching from one Bible, to allow Roman Catholic priests to exchange Sunday services with Episcopalian rectors, Episcopalians with Presbyterians, Presbyterians with the Congregationalists (Unitarians), and Congregationalists with Spiritualists. This narrow-mindedness, this denominational bigotry is a puzzle to the "heathen" of the orient. The Buddhist priests and monks of Ceylon, when I was last there, were raising funds to send missionaries to America, bearing a better religion. Buddhists have the largest religious following of any sect in the world. Learning through the press (principally the English press) of our millionaires (when Jesus had not where to lay his head), hearing of our robberies, our strikes, our riots, our mobs, our railway hold-ups, the burning of negroes alive in this Christian country, the Buddhists, abounding in love and sympathy for humanity, are preparing to send missionary preachers to this country. Their evangelists have no salaries. They do not own any jewelry, even watches. They are real evangelists, without purse or graft.

True, there are teachings and certain dogmas put forth by a class of Spiritists that I have no sympathy with; and all fraud, whether in Spiritualism or out of it, my whole soul abominates. But, mark it well, as Masons of a high degree say—Spiritualism is a truth. It is heaven's truth, and has come on earth to stay. Truth never dies. Truth never changes; it is only our conception of it that changes. All truth is immortal, and was beautifully, sweetly, divinely illustrated in the life of him who said: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

Jesus, remember, talked with the spirits, Moses and Elias, on the Mount. Take the dreams, the prophecies, the healings, the visions, the trances, such as Peter's and Paul's, in a word Spiritualism out of the Bible and it is little more than a dry, empty Israelitish shell, for it is the spirit that giveth life, and "without a vision," said the prophet of old, "the people perish."

The Wesleys and the Fox Sisters.

The Fox sisters, shamefully slandered by this Kellar, belonged to a Methodist family. These young, beautiful sisters, when the rappings commenced in their rooms, were as innocent of any fraud as were the pious Wesleys. In the old Wesley residence, Epworth, England, where strange noises, sounds, rappings, opening of doors by invisible hands, and other marked spiritual manifestations occurred at times for years. See the account written by the Rev. Mr. Hooley of Saxey, and by Dr. Adam Clarke. How many Methodists have ever read John Wesley's book entitled, "The Invisible World?"

There was not the least relational resemblance between the original phenomena of the Fox sisters, occurring in the privacy of their Methodist home, and the re-repeated Kellar tricks. He has his confederates, his prepared platform with trap-doors, mirrors, sliding boxes, and his "toeless stockings" and paraphernalia, while genuine mediums sit in their quiet homes, their neighbor's, or in seance-rooms, under the strictest conditions. How absolutely unlike these magician tricks which come under the category of ad captandum vulgus.

The Distinguished Stanford Family.

It is well known to the cultured that the late Hon. Leland Stanford, once governor of California, once United States senator and later the founder of the Stanford University, California, which university was conceived and planned through a psychic inspiration from his son in spirit life, was a Spiritualist. I know several mediums who sat with him and his family, and Spiritualism was the energizing cause of that magnificent structure, the Stanford University. And the wealthy and highly-respected Thomas W. Stanford, of Melbourne, Australia (a city of 500,000), our United States ex-vice-consul and brother of the California senator, Stanford, is a devoted, outspoken Spiritualist, employing that remarkable medium, Charles Bailey, by the year. His weekly sessions, without a penny's charge, are open to lawyers, scists, preachers, journalists, university students, and others who are anxious to candidly study these occult phenomena. Mr. Bailey's person is carefully examined each night before entering the seance-room. He submits to the most crucial test conditions.

It has been my privilege to attend scores of these seances. They are orderly, and always opened with singing and prayer. The lights are softened, or more fully subdued—the medium becomes entranced, and then these remarkable phenomena take place. It would require a volume to describe them. Apports are brought in from the ancient ages, such as Assyrian coins, African fetishes, Babylonian images, mummied manuscripts, live birds (the doors and windows being shut)—all these are brought and dropped upon the table. Trance addresses are delivered, and sometimes marvellous tests—and all this to convince materialists and a doubting world that death does not end all.

Inviting this Mr. Bailey to my private room, upon his becoming entranced, myself holding both his hands, my knees against his, broad daylight, several very old coins fell into my lap, and old sand-sprinkled skin manuscripts fell upon the table, which, when unrolled were found to contain hieroglyphical characters. Who dare say such things are impossible when God himself is spirit. "Pneuma Ho Theos," said Jesus.

The Beechers and Biblical Spirit Phenomena.

The late Rev. Thos. K. Beecher, half-brother of Henry Ward Beecher and pastor for years of the Elmira Congregational church, was a Spiritualist. Twice I sat with him in Spiritualist seances; and Henry Ward Beecher told me one Sunday in Brooklyn that "Spiritualism strengthened faith in the Scriptures."

Premonitions, visions, clairvoyance and levitations are all around us, and to ignore them without the most candid and prayerful investigation is the shabbiest sort of self-stultification. Jesus expressly said that signs and spiritual gifts should follow believers; and he further declared that believers in him should "do greater works" than he did, promising to be with them "always to the end of the world."

Mighty is my faith in God, in the Christ of God, and in angels and spirits who do the will of God. Having witnessed levitations, i. e., human beings who are lifted and who float in the air, like D. D. Home, I am quite prepared to believe that the "Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip" from the sight of the eunuch, leaving him afar off at Azotus. Having seen a medium's hand put by the entrancing spirit into the full blaze of a kerosene lamp and there held for fully three minutes unburned, I am all the more inclined to believe that Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, walked in the fiery furnace, "the form of the fourth" as a protecting shield being held in their midst. Having witnessed spirit writing in the air as well as on walls by a vanishing spirit hand, all the more readily do I accept the recorded account of "the fingers of a man's hand" mystically writing upon the wall in Belshazzar's palace.

To accept the marvels and Biblical phenomena reported two and three thousand years ago, translated and revised, and denying the similar phenomena of to-day does not well become the twentieth century, and the more so when it is considered that Both God and his laws are unchangeable.

The Capabilities of Scientific Men.

The Magician Kellar in his diatribe upon Spiritualism states, speaking of Sir William Crookes, that "scientific men are the easiest men on earth to fool," and adds: "I have read Sir Willim Crookes' experiments with Edgar Home"—another square falsehood! Mr. Crookes never had an experiment with an Edgar Home, but did have many of them with the celebrated David D. Home. I speak by the book, for years ago I had the pleasure of the personal acquaintance of Sir William Crookes, and was honored with a seat at his dining table. Did there ever a shallower, sillier phrase fall from human lips than that scientists are the "most easily fooled?" This critical scientist, Crookes, the discoverer of the radiometer, of the Roentgen tubes and rays, of the transformation of electricity into magnetic force, etc., and who for his eminent scientific status has received several gold medals from the learned bodies of Europe, spent much of his time for eight years in investigating the phenomenal claims of Spiritualism, having at different times had one or more retained mediums in his own house. And when convinced, unlike many secretive cowards, he had the manly manliness to stand up in the glory of his true manhood and publish his conviction to the world. And to compare Sir William Crookes to Kellar, the traducer of Spiritualists, and who has spent a life in legerdemain, trick-inventing deceptions and witticisms causing loud roars of laughter, is like comparing a mightly intellectual giant to a morally paralyzed pigmy. Certain semi-imbeciles are given to much laughter, and some idiots giggle a great deal, while scientists and sages though always courteous and pleasant, seldom laugh. It was reported by the old church fathers that Jesus was never seen to laugh, but often to weep; and it is enough to make the saints in heaven weep to-day to see how atheistic materialists ridicule and misunderstand the New Testament, and how sectarian religionists wriggle and twist teachings to make them support their own denominational creeds. Considering these differing theological sects and factions, I feel to explain, with the stern old Biblical Hebrew—"O priests (also evangelists) ye have been a snare on Mizpah. * * * Ye teach for hire, and your prophets divine for money."

It is patent and well known to the best thinkers of our country that Psychical Research Societies, composed of the most scientific men and profound scholars of the world are being and have been organized in Berlin, Paris, London, New York, Chicago, and many other cities, for the special purpose of further elucidating and investigating spirit phenomena, and demonstrating the mighty truth of a conscious immortal life beyond the grave.

Let us all pray for the moral enlightenment of poor Kellar—pray for the banishment of that sectarian blight that is disfiguring pure and true religion, and for the speedy removal of this ecclesiastical eclipse that so darkens and besmears the fair face of Christ's Christianity.

Can I better close this hastily-written article than by using the tender words of the good Quaker poet, Whittier:

O brother man, fold to thy heart thy brother
For where love dwells the peace of God is there
To worship rightly is to love each other;
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

Follow with rev'rent steps the great example
Of him whose holy work was doing good;
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude.

Battle Creek, Mich.

A Soulful Acknowledgment.

To Those Who Have Already Expressed a Desire for a Copy of My Forthcoming Book of Poems.

Kind friends, I now can plainly see the good throughout the years,
Of worry and of troubles deep, and all those silent tears,
Those hours of gloom, and dark despair, the hell of burning fire;
The smile of weal, of sunlight that succeeds the raging ire.

I now can know why I have had depicted to my view,
Some scenes in mortal life, and lived and suffered them all through,
While penning line by line each act portrayed, and word for word,
In dream,—and oft in trance,—gave forth the poems I have heard.

This prompt response speaks loudly now unto my kindred soul,
And tells me I am only one,—just one of the Great Whole;
It tells me I am well in tune with those who love, and live
To make this world a paradise,—to do, to grow, forgive.

These kindly missives,—short,—sometimes a postal card in brief—
Are always felt to be expressions of a sweet relief.
I sense in each the voice of true and loving friendship, called
To life by some sweet thought and word long interwalled.

They come to me like very stars with brightly beaming light
To flash across my pulsing soul and sweep away the night.
They seem to be the messages, or echoes of the thought
I sent on errands, now returned with other's sweetness fraught.

They seem like telepathic cords from all, and I the sphere
Or center point, to catch express and make to reappear
In days to come through other source, in all the round of time,
To rise to heights at every turn more beauteously sublime.

They bring to me the very joy that penning I would give,
And now it seems the lives of those in touch I had to live,
I sensed their woe, their weal, their tears, their smiles, their pangs of pain,
And all in tune I wrote them down to hand them back again.

I love these fond expressions all, and not for praise alone,
But somehow as a kindred soul they seem to be my own.
And yet I somehow seem to feel were all of life as this
There surely might be in the whole much more of woe than bliss.

Loud praise seems weak and dull, and empty when my soul is full
And would upon the very universe of love-light pull;
But I do feel the silent waves that gently lave my soul,
And am refreshed by all the good that flows from Nature's bowl.

Kind friends, again I must return the sweet thought unto you,
For when I drink the nectared draught my soul is filled anew,
And all refined, attuned to flow in rhythmic streamlets they Must more of sunlight take to you on their eternal way.

God bless you all, and may we often meet in sweet commune,
When we are ripe and spirit free, and with all life in tune,
And may the angel down within your tabernacle be
To all around a blessing sweet throughout eternity.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also relieves sore and granulated lids, iritis, etc., and removes cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over 75,000 "Actinas" have been sold, therefore the "Actina" treatment is not an experiment, but is reliable. The following letters are but samples of hundreds we receive:

J. J. Pope, P. O. Box, No. 43, Mineral Wells, Texas, writes—"I have spent thousands of dollars on my eyes, consulted the best doctors in the United States, dropped medicine in my eyes for years and "Actina" is the only thing that has ever done me any good. Before using "Actina" I gave up all hope of ever being able to read again. Had not read a newspaper for seven years. Now I can read all day with little or no inconvenience."

Rev. Charles Carter, East Springfield, N. Y., writes:—I have made a severe test of "Actina" by casting aside my glasses and have not had them on since except to see what change had been wrought since the treatment began. My eyes gradually gained strength and power, and now my glasses are no longer necessary, for I see as well, if not better, without them. I recommend "Actina" to all my friends.

E. R. Holbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes:—"Actina has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial, postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342N, 811 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

Daniel W. Hull writes from New Era, Ore.: "There is to be a discussion between myself and some representative Adventist at the coming Washington Camp meeting. I think the discussion will occupy from three to six sessions of two hours each, the proceeds to go toward defraying Camp expenses. I do not know the name of the party who is to hold up the other end of the discussion, but the promise is, that they will have one of their most capable men. Besides this there will be mediums present to present every phase of the phenomena, and the best of lecturing talent. This promises to be one of the most interesting and instructive camps of the season. The location is beautiful, the scenery perfect, and the weather always enjoyable."

R. W. Tennant writes of the Universal Occult Society: "It is gratifying to us and to our many friends to know that though the summer evenings are not always cool enough to suit everyone who is anxious to attend our Sunday evening service, we are pleased to be able to report that they are well attended; the many strange faces that we meet at these gatherings convinces us that we are doing a good work, and are very hopeful that ere the coler months approach our meetings will be just as largely attended as they were wont to be in years gone by. Sunday evening, July 26, we welcomed many old friends who in former years took pleasure in helping this society; among the many who took part on this occasion we desire to mention Mr. Coe, Mr. Mansell, Mr. Gerkle, Mr. Shafer, Mrs. Powderly, Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Seabold, and Mrs. LaDeaux. We take this means of again thanking them for their kindly assistauce. Our president, Mrs. Maggie Henry, has almost entirely recovered from her late sickness, and is now working hard to make the society a success, not only in regard to the number of attendance, but for the good of the cause and any assistance she may be able to render to its patrons will be done cheerfully. We will continue the evening services during the summer months."

Rev. J. H. Collins, prominent as an author and teacher, has been lecturing at Creal Springs, Ill., on the following subjects: "Where Is Heaven?" "Where are our Dead?" "Self Control." "Immortality of man." "Will the physical body be resurrected?" "Is Spiritualism taught in the Bible?" "How to have success and happiness" and other similar themes. Rev. Collins is spoken of highly by both pulpit and press. The lecture will be illustrated by stereopticon. Address him at Creal Springs, Ill.

Mrs. H. M. Swasey writes from Cantonment, Fla., "I am well pleased with The Progressive Thinker and the spiritual truths it teaches for the betterment of humanity, lifting them to a higher, nobler standard of manhood and womanhood, teaching them to live for the good they can do. I look forward with much pleasure every week to its coming. The longer I take it the more attracted I become to it, so that I do not see how I could be without it, for it has been such a comforter. Keep right on, Brother Francis; you are doing a noble work for the upliftment of the masses. I do not belong to the Spiritualist Church, but am a firm believer in communication with those who have crossed the tide, as I frequently have telepathic communication with my loved ones, and the sweet peace of soul it affords is indescribable."

Victoria Parker writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Through reading your valuable paper to a friend, who is nearing (very near) the shining shore, she has become convinced she will live after death, and does not fear the transition. She looks for the paper fully as earnestly as I do, and says: 'I am not afraid to die now. It is the greatiest comfort and consolation of my life. I shall be glad when I am through with this life.' Now she is 'Waiting, only waiting' till the shadows are a little longer grown. May Go(o)d bless you and your efforts here and hereafter is the silent prayer of many aching hearts your paper has comforted."

W. J. Colville, after lecturing for eight consecutive days, July 12 to 19, inclusive, at New Era, Oregon (where camp is enjoying best season in its protracted history) he delivered four lectures in Portland, Oregon, and five in Vancouver, B. C. (in both cities to large and enthusiastic gatherings) before he started for eastern centers of activity. "British Columbia is now offering an excellent field for workers in the Spiritualistic and kindred fields, and especially is Vancouver open to welcome progressive spiritual philosophy. Mr. Milmore and Mr. Lee., 532 Harris St., circulate The Progressive Thinker and other advanced types of literature in connection with the society, which has its headquarters in their home. These earnest and active workers co-operated most successfully with me during my course in O'Brien Hall, and they expect to keep the good work steadily moving in their enterprising neighborhood. Mr. Milmore is a clairvoyant and magnetic healer, well established and highly respected in the community by people of many different shades of thought. The city supports a good Lyceum and contains a large number of ready, earnest enquirers into psychic problems. My immediate engagements are Onset, Mass., August 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7; Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, August 9 to 19; Lily Dale, N. Y.; August 21 to 31. During September, October and November I expect to work continuously in New York, Boston and Washington, D. C., in a circuit embracing many points in vicinity of those chief cities."

Mrs. C. Wermouth-Buzello, Pastor-President, writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "I have read your valuable paper, The Progressive Thinker, for a good many years. I have lectured on an average of twice a week for the last four years, and I have commenced these lectures by reading a poem that I find in The Progressive Thinker, by the following authors: Dr. T. Wilkins, Loa N. Reck, Belle Bush, Alice C. Barry, James C. Underhill, Mrs. J. H. Dallas, Nettie P. Fox, Mrs. Lola M. Rishel, E. Gertrude Lepper-Smith Mrs. Nora Armstrong, Alice M. Warren, Bertha M. Richter, Bertha A. Weeks, Elsie Russell, and Dr. L. M. Entwistle. I think that you and the many readers of The Progressive Thinker can feel proud of those poets. Every time I read them my audiences are so well pleased that they want more, and these poems give me lots of inspiration, as they are the subjects I lecture from. The spirit friends are so pleased that they hover around me while speaking. It seems that I am acquainted personally with these grand writers, although I never saw them. At the time I read these beautiful poems I advise my hearers to subscribe for The ProgressiveThinker, as it is chockfull of good things to earnest seekers. Give my kindest regards to these poetical writers, and many thanks, and God bless them forever for their beautiful thoughts."

Dr. Moncure D. Conway, in "My Pilgrimage to the Wise Men of the East," says: "Were my public ministry to begin again, I should assume that the old theological ideas exist no more in minds capable of ideas, but make for the nests in which the ova of defunct superstitions are bred into living wrongs. These nests are in the nerves in timid complaisance, in the torpor of habit, the dread of isolation, which lead the leaders to a conformity with the ritual of human sacrifice. For every sacrifice is a human sacrifice—be it sacrifice of reason, veracity, moral freedom, pleasure, happiness, or of the senses—and implies a low and mean conception of deity."

Edna Cooper of Humboldt, Neb. writes: "If some good lecturer and medium would come to my town, I no doubt would be able to send in a number of subscriptions; but they seem to miss Humboldt in their travels."

Mrs. Lois Waisbrker writes from Battle Creek, Mich.: "Dr. Johnson, of 84 W. Main St., Battle Creek, Mich., done good work in the past, but having been sick for a long time, has dropped somewhat out of sight, as he is so diffident he cannot thrust himself forward. A fine trance speaker and a good healer, he was forced to drop all for a time, but now, though over 80, he is well enough to answer calls, if not too far away, and he needs them, for his long sickness cost money, and more than that, he had his pockets picked not long since; all his money, nearly $40, was taken. If some of those he has benefited in the past would send him something toward making his loss good, it would be only just."

Dr. T. Wilkins, rises to explain: "The Golden Rule Society will open its doors again on the first Sunday in September. Keep a close watch for the programs. The opening will be filled with interesting things, and the talent will be the best that can be had. This West Side Society is well established, well officered and will endeavor to fill the great want of seekers after the truth of Spiritualism. Watch for the program, and don't let gossipers turn your heads from the facts. This society is an auxiliary to the State Association; and is in line with complete, harmonious organization, and no amount of backbiting will lessen its effort for the whole Cause. It is composed of true blue Spiritualists."

Mrs. C. Bergere writes: "Sons and Daughters of the F. O. O. S., please remember about the picnic at Neher's Summer Garden, Saturday, August 15. Bring your lunches, your families and friends. It is an ideal place. We want to have the time that will leave with us a pleasant recollection until the next year. Appoint a meeting place and come in groups. Take any car to Ogden avenue, then west to Lyons car, cross over Desplaines River to 1st gate of garden. Start early, as it takes one and one-half hours to get there."

Mrs. Alex. Caird, secretary, writes: "The most successful Tea Party of the season was held at Lincoln hall, 70 E. Adams street, Wednesday, July 28, by the Illinois Sunflower Club. Many strangers were present and though more than the usual number of mediums were in attendance, all were kept busy in giving readings until the closing hour. Thanks are due the hostess, Mrs. Campbell, for her untiring efforts in making the meeting a success, and it also shows what could be done if all would unite and work for the club. Saturday evening, Aug. 8, the club will hold a social at the residence of Mrs. Ruth Squires, 220 Western avenue. Ice cream and cake will be served. Mediums will be present to give readings, and a good time is anticipated. Tuesday Aug. 11, the monthly business meeting of the club will take place at the hall, 70 E. Adams street. Members will bear this in mind and try to be present."

Mrs. Hattie F. R. Peet, corresponding secretary, writes: "Members and friends of the Band of Harmony will please take notice that our next "Summer Social" will be held at the home of Mrs. M. A. Burland (instead of at Mrs. Drullner's), 600 Englewood avenue, corner of Normal boulevard, Thursday afternoon and evening, Aug. 13. There will be a "tea party" and cup readings in the afternoon, with mediums in attendance. Coffee will be served at 6 o'clock; coffee checks, ten cents. Ladies will please bring lunch for themselves and friend. Interesting exercises in the evening. To reach there take Halsted street car to 63d street; then transfer and go east to Normal avenue; or take South Side elevated and get off at Parnell avenue; walk to 63d street; go east one block and north one block. All cordially invited; come and bring your friends. Mrs. Drullner expects to entertain later."

Copies of the fine photograph taken at Lake Bluff, on July 4, can be had for 25 cents by addressing F. P. Rae, 93 Bowan avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Oklahoma State Spiritualists' Association will meet at Lawton, Okla., Sept. 8. Those wishing to know more, write to F. Anlauf, secretary, Oklahoma City, Okla., R. 2, or G. G. Lee, Sr., president, Roosevelt, Okla.

Correspondent writes: "The picnic under the auspices of the Roseland Culture Club, at Wooded Island, held Sunday, August 2, was a grand success socially and spiritually. The day was quite warm, but the lake breeze occasionally came as a sweet relief. A slight discrepancy in the notice given led many of the earlier comers to be at a loss to know what particular spot of the island could be used to the best advantage, in fact all were at sea until about 4, and a quiet, shady place was found and a circle settled down on the green and the usual messages were the special order. The meeting was handled by the State President, Dr. T. Wilkins, assisted by the President of the Club, Mr. Perry, The Roseland Club was out in force, and a splendid time was had with a small collection to add to the treasury. The Starlight Spiritual Society was well represented and deserve great credit for their enthusiasm and energy in the day's program. The Chicago Spiritualist League was also well represented, as was the Society of Psychic forces. The Golden Rule Society was represented by President Wilkins, a member of the board of said society."

The Starlight Spiritual Society will hold a mid-week picnic in the grove just west of Reisig's Grove, on Wednesday, August 18th. All are invited to this secluded nook, and a fine time is guaranteed.

The State Association and its auxiliaries will hold a picnic on the last Sunday in August in some near-by grove, to be announced later, as to exact location. The Chicago Spiritualist League will do its part in the program, of course, as it always does and a good time, and an educative program is assured.

May F. Ayers, secretary, writes: "Grand Ledge camp opened July 26. The opening Sunday was well attended. Mrs. Abbie Sheets, the speaker of the occasion, one of the pioneer promoters of the camp, was at her best, giving two of her most spiritual and helpful lectures. Mrs. Sheets continued to occupy the rostrum the entire week, giving eminent satisfaction to all of her listeners, each meeting followed by messages from verious mediums, Mrs. N. M. Russell, Mrs. Funghen, Mrs. Oswald, Chas. Barnes. Frrom the number camping on the grounds and other indications, we anticipate one of the largest attendance in the history of the camp. Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly and Geo. A. Letford have arrived, having closed engagements with Lily Dale and Eastern camps; also speakers here for the following week. Mr. George A. Letford will follow each lecture with messages. All desiring programs, write secretary. The mediums on the grounds are doing good and effective work."

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie will be East during September and October, and would be glad to give a few lectures during the time in Eastern Ohio, Michigan, or Indiana, at reasonable remuneration. She will attend the convention at Indianapolis. She is looking forward with great pleasure to meeting old-time friends. Address all letters to her up to Aug. 15 at Naramata, British Columbia; after that in care of The Progressive Thinker.

F. Anlauf, secretary, writes: "I would like to correspond with a good lecturer and a good test medium to serve at our annual State convention at Lawton, Okla., beginning the second Tuesday of September, and continuing for three days. Address me as follows: Route 2, box 53, Oklahoma City, Okla."

TO THE PUBLIC.

It is currently reported that certain parties recently residing in Paterson, N. J., hold letters of endorsement and recommendation from me, I desire to state in this public manner that there is no truth whatever in this assertion. I have never even written a business letter to the parties in question, let alone one of recommendation. Personally, I know nothing against them, excepting upon hearsay reports. The good people of Paterson will know the parties to whom I refer, and I stand ready to give their names if requested to do so. To be more specific I mean those who are reported to have left that city under rather peculiar, if not distressing circumstances.

Yours for truth,
HARRISON D. BARRETT.

Camp Chesterfield, Indiana.

One week of camp life,—such a charming week—so many good things. Thursday Mrs. Crossfield of Muncie, was with us. She is almost new on the rostrum as a lecturer, but she was a credit to our Cause and may she receive the reward she is justly entitled to. Her sweet ways won her many admirers. Then she was followed by one of the old-time workers whose name is a household word among Spiritualists. Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing. Words are not adequate to express the beautiful thoughts she expresses and the many hearts she cheers on their weary way. Her lecture to-day on "Well Digging" was delightful. She has dug her way carefully and permanently into into the many hearts that listened to her cheering words and her loving, motherly way. Saturday she leaves us and it is with regret we part from her, but may her path be one of roses.

Camp needs rain, the weather has been extremely warm, but how restful under the cooling shade of the many large oak trees.

Mrs. M. C. Jacobs had charge of the conference for three days, and she with her old-time energy and goodness enthused her audience. Mrs. Charles of Newport, Ky., served the last three days, and she, too, proves herself a master of the situation.

We have been holding grove meetings the past few days, with success, and to-night, through our good Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, will hold a seance in the auditorium for the benefit of the Ladies' Bazaar, which starts out with renewed energy, and bids fair to rival any previous year in good work.

The Helping Hand has been silently spreading its usefulness and help through its President. Mrs. O'Neill and your humble servant, who has charge of it, and we must not forget to thank one who has been so helpful to us in opening the way for us to start our good work—Dr. Hillgoss. I hope some day to meet him and his estimable wife and thank him personally for his help. We hope to be able some day in the near future to help some worthy medium who has given her health and weary years of toil to our noble Cause, and as she wanders down the path to the other shore we may be able to say: "Well done, faithful servant," we have a home where you can find in your declining days a rest. We are only few in number, but bravely we battled against prejudice till at last we have a small beginning started, a small cottage, and hope someday to cheer many weary ones beneath its roof.

I am but a young worker in the ranks. I have not many more years allotted me at most, but I hope to be able to leave behind me someone who will say she did the best she could.

When you want to spend a few days or weeks in joy and contentment, come to Chesterfield Camp, and help us spread the glad tidings of great joy to all the world, that death, so-called, is a heavenly birth.

MRS. MARTHA WOOLSEY.
Chesterfield, Ind.

The Camp at Vicksburg, Mich.

The annual camp meeting of the Vicksburg Spiritual Camp opened Sunday morning in the beautiful oak grove one-half mile south of the village which had been devoted to the dissemination of spiritual truths to hungry souls for a quarter of a century. The camp was started by Mr. H. B. Allen, the boy medium. For the past eighteen years it has been under the efficient management of Miss Jeanette Fraser, an honored resident of Vicksburg, whose energy and devotion to the cause supplemented by the efforts of her faithful co-workers, has brought the work to its present success.

Mrs. D. R. Morrill, of Grand Rapids, whose work here last year won her many friends, opened the session with two inspiring lectures. In the morning she spoke upon the theme, "Evolution of Man-Made Gods." Man's conception of God has grown with his unfoldment through the ages, from a personal God sitting on a white throne, to the recognition of the great eternal Infinite permeating all life. Our salvation does not depend upon our belief in certain forms or creeds; we must work out our own salvation. We must recognize the oneness of all life, the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

In the afternoon she gave a grand lecture on "The Power of the Mind or Thought; As Ye Sow So Shall Ye Also Reap." She followed with messages which were well received, and nearly all recognized. Mrs. Morrell has been the speaker for the week, and has fully sustained her past reputation, more than meeting the expectation of her many friends. She closes her engagement oon Friday.

Mrs. Morrell has acted as chairman for the week.

Much thought has been brought out in the conferences by the campers. Both Mr. and Mrs. Morrell have done much to make the conferences interesting.

The sweet singer, Miss Grace Giberson, of Reed City, Mich., is with us again this year, and inspires all with her soulful music. She is ably assisted by Miss Hattie Bentley of Schoolcraft, Mich., who presides at the piano.

Many of the old campers are here and some new ones; they are arriving daily.

Mrs. M. L. Stanley, of Jackson, Mich., the psychical and magnetic healer, is here for the season, and is practicing her healing art.

Mr. Drake, of Marcellus, Mich., the materializing medium, arrived Tuesday.

Mr. W. J. Erwood, who has many friends here, commences his engagement Saturday, at 2 p. m.

Come and bring your friends and help to make the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Vicksburg camp a greater success.

Mrs. Margaret Gaule Riedinger, and The First Association of New York.

To the Editor: Mrs. Margaret Gaule Riedinger closed her tenth year with the First Association of Spiritualists of New York, June 28. She is a remarkable psychic, and has rendered valuable service to this society and the Cause, and she fully unites with my proposal to have Dr. J. M. Peebles open our meetings at Elk Hall, 8th avenue and 59th street, Sunday, October 4 and 11, at 3 p. m.

Rr. Peebles, the world renowned traveller and invincible speaker on any progressive platform, will give us a fine start at our autumnal opening.

Spiritualism has ceased to be a nine days' wonder, and is being quietly and rationally accepted and science has aided much in its acceptance.

My father, Daniel N. Merritt, vacated his physical form at Ionia, Mich., in 1856, age 55. His last words were, as I stood by the bedside: "Thus, it is true, for I see Henry, my son, thy Brother."

Brother Henry passed to the spirit realm in 1853. I heard from my father in less than 24 hours through a reliable medium, and through the same medium a few weeks later, I received the following:

"I find it is not the intention of spirits engaged in the grand work, to establish a great organization to be called Spiritualists, but to diffuse its grand principles through all present demonstrations."

It is a great mistake to think one must leave the church to become a Spiritualist. Prove all things, and when you find genuine manifestations proclaim them to others. The Progressive Thinker would prove educational in any denomination.

BOOK REVIEWS.

MOSES HULL—Compiled and written by Daniel W. Hull and others. 103 oct. pp.

Brother Daniel has performed a kindly office in writing the life of Moses Hull, who is known to all Spiritualists the world over. For years he has stood in the front as champion debater, ready to meet all comers on Bible grounds, and overthrow them by his perfect knowledge of Scriptures, and skill in debate. He was born in Waldo County, O., in 1836, the seventh child of fourteen children.

In the new and wild country he received his education, and at 16 years of age began preaching for the Seventh Day Baptists. He was not made of the stuff which composes the bigot. His mind was active and he found the "Chief Elders" had doubts. He began to have a crop of those troublous things himself. As with everything else, he went to the Bible for instruction. He wrote a book to prove the Bible was from heaven. He preached violently against Spiritualism. By 1865 his doubts so grew he withdrew from the church. He had become a Spiritualist, and soon after began lecturing on that subject, supporting his position by Bible quotations. He was now as ready to debate Spiritualism as he had been adventism, and with the religionists with whom he engaged it was the best qualification he could have.

He wrote several books, among which "Our Bible—Who Wrote It—How? When and Where? Is it Infallible?" is best known. His crowning work was the establishment of the Morris Pratt Institute.

He departed this life in 1907, without a moment's warning, being stricken down when in apparent health, and having many years of valuable service before him. His place will ever remain vacant, for there will never arise another, equipped as he, with the store-house of Bible texts to answer all opposers.

Startling Beauty Discovery—Youth's Marvelous Lucky-Box

"MY FRIENDS TELL ME I LOOK TWENTY YEARS YOUNGER SINCE USING THIS TREATMENT," SAYS A NEW YORK LADY WHO TRIED IT.

"It Removed All Wrinkles in One Night—It Is a Godsend to Womankind," Says Another.

The Beauty Editress of the London, England, Onlooker says: "An interview with Madame Harriett Meta left me persuaded that here at last might be found the secret to restore youth and beauty."

Madame le Docteur Cherut, of Epinay-sur-Seine (France), says: "I am astonished at the marvelous results obtained after two days. Words cannot express how grateful I feel for what your treatment has done for me."

Halt, Father Time! I took my own wrinkles out by this marvelous Youth's Lucky-Box, after face massage, cold creams, masks, straps, rollers and beauty specialists had failed. This was over two years ago and my face is still free from wrinkles and my skin and complexion is in most excellent condition.

I discovered this remarkable treatment by lucky accident after I had practically given up in despair and concluded that I must carry my wrinkles to my grave.

Parisian Countesses, well-known London society ladies as well as thousands of Americans have used this marvelous treatment for the purpose of regaining their lost beauty.

Mrs. H. A. Miller, of Woodbury, Ct., writes "When I look into the mirror I scarcely know myself. My wrinkles not only disappeared in one night, but it has made my skin wonderfully soft, smooth and firm."

The Observer, of London, says: "One of the topics of the hour where two or three women are gathered together is Harriett Meta, the good Samaritan who has risen to battle with that bugbear to womankind—wrinkes.

The rapidity with which a cure of wrinkes is effected by her process, is only equalled by the simplicity of the application. In some cases, one suffices to make an appreciable difference and three practically complete the matter."

If you would like to try this great beauty wonder-worker, address Harriett Meta, Suite 290 E, Syracuse, N. Y.

OBITUARIES.

Arisen to a higher life, Mrs. Mary Ann Johnson-Manning, in her 81st year, at the home of her son, at Berlinville, Ohio, July 19. The funeral services were held on the 22nd. Emma Rood Tuttle giving a song service and Hudson Tuttle an address. Mrs. Manning made her belief in Spiritualism her guide in the conduct of life

* * *

Mrs. Hannah Miller, aged 70, wife of Peter Miller, passed to the higher life on Friday, July 23, from her home at Dunkirk, Ind. For many years Mrs. Miller had known the truth of spirit communion, and her last request was, that a Spiritualist should conduct the services over her body. Mother Miller was a good woman. Even in death the smile imprinted upon the marble features of her sweet motherly face, brought gladness to all who looked upon it. Her companion is left to travel alone in the physical for a time. All his loved ones have gone on to the higher life. Many neighbors and friends assembled to pay their tribute of love to their arisen sister. The services were conducted by the writer.

SARAH A. CROSSFIELD.
Muncie, Ind.

Passed to spirit life from his home in Topeka, Kansas, Friday, July 24, 1908, Joseph Challand. He had received the truth of the continuity of life thirty-five years ago. He was born in Nottinghamshire, England, in 1833, married in London in 1857, came to the United States in 1858, and settled in Illinois. In 1886 he removed with his family to Kansas. The funeral services were conducted by me at his late home, 1279 Mulvane Street, Topeka, Kansas. He leaves a devoted wife and a family of grown children not to mourn his loss, but to rejoice that he is free from his earthly sufferings and happy with his friends in their spirit home.

ETTA G. BLEDSOE.

Mrs. J. B. Armstrong, aged 85 years, passed to spirit life at her home in Potsdam, N. Y., Sunday, May 17. Mrs. Armstrong was born at the James Lemon place on Market St., which was her home for a number of years. None knew her but to love her, and a large circle of friends will miss her kindly smile of welcome as she met them. Her near neighbors will miss the bright light that every night shone from her cottage windows and each will think of the pure spirit within who always gave them a warm greeting.

Passed to spirit life on the morning of July 24, 1908, George H. Payne, at the age of 68 years, from his home in Akron, Ohio. He was a Spiritualist all his life, his parents being among the first to accept the truths of Spiritualism as early as 1848. Having been brought up in the belief, he has always been a strong advocate of its truths, and has been a subscriber to and reader of The Progressive Thinker. He has always lived in Akron, except during the time of the war of the rebellion, where he lost his left arm. He did not mourn over his loss, but being of a jovial nature, accepted it as the inevitable and made the best of it all through his life.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead." These words stand out on the cover. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet the author, Edward C. Randall, believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

M. S. Arbuckle. Q.—Has the number 7 an occult power?

A.—So it has been maintained from ancient times and exhaustive discussions have been made in its wonderful qualities. Of course it has no power, and the study of its combinations is the mental play of children, though indulged in by "Wise Men," and "Sages." A great share of the "wisdom" of the ancients was made up of such rubbish. There were seven wise men of Greece; the week had seven days; seven plants; seven wonders; seven heavens; seven notes of music, and to make the number hold good seven colors. There were seven stars of magnitude and although only six visible, the Pleiades were called the Seven Sisters. There were seven sleepers, and now we have Seven Day Baptists, and Seven Day Adventists. A slight review of these "Wonderful" applications of 7, will show how superficial and arbitrary they are. We could have with equal plausibility the seven great railroads; the seven sky-scrapers; the seven grafters of the senate; the seven imbecile presidents, etc.

Humanitarian. Q.—This correspondent sends a clipping with the query: "Does not this show a most exemplary model of affection for animals

The clipping is the story of how a lady of wealth in Seattle, Wash., came to Philadelphia, 3000 miles, to have a surgical operation performed on the throat of her dog, a "York Terrier." The wealthy owner of this dog, is so much attached to him that she has an entire gold service upon which to serve his dainty meals. The surgeon removed the tubercular tumor, which was choking the dog. The surgeon was "eminent," the best to be obtained after the 3000 mile journey. The expense was $600. The little dog is doing well, its mistress is overjoyed that it will now dine on its gold platter, and take cream from a gold goblet. I confess that I am not enthused with the sentiment of our correspondent. I have always taken interest in humane work, and advocated justice to all animals as well as to mankind. Of course, if the "wealthy" desire gold servers for their poodles, or to seat them at the tables with napkins and finger-bowls, it is their privilege, and it is the privilege of the less fortunate to laugh at the spectacle. Such manifestations, out of all proportion to their object, bring ridicule rather than sympathy. One might feel deeply moved by a mother taking the swiftest train across the continent with the hope to save her child. A child is priceless, the dog was valued by its owner "at $500!" Her great love had price, as everything the parvenu rich possess has a price to measure it by. It is the common, vulgar method of valuation.

It may be presumed that hundreds of children in that western state, needed care, as much or more, than this petted canine. The $600 would have gone a long way toward assisting them. This "wealthy lady," probably never had a thought of them, or a child of her own to absorb the love lavished on her dog.

Querist.—Question. How can the statement made in the Arcana of Spiritualism, and continually maintained in your writings, that the spirit has its beginning with the physical body, and yet is immortal? Is it not unanswerable that whatever has a beginning must have an end?

Answer.—I do not shrink from taking this question squarely and fairly. It is constantly asked, with an assurance of triumph as absolutely settling the question. It is logically conclusive! Can a line be drawn without two ends? Whatever has an endless future must have had a beginningless past!

In the face of all these seemingly self-evident propositions, and unanswerable logic, it does not seem to me the subject is disposed of, rather the points raised have no relation to the question. When we talk of infinity and the endless, we are limited by our narrow finiteness. So far as comprehension is concerned, a thousand millions is an infinite number to even a mathematician. To a savage a thousand would be incomprehensible. When the number exceeds that of the fingers, their minds become perplexed.

Let us begin with the proportion stated as an axiom, that a line must have two ends. A straight line must, but if drawn on a circle it returns into itself and is endless.

The theory of evolution teaches that there has been a constant advance from the lowest forms of life to man. The human being is the last term in the physical series. There is no prophecy of a more perfect physical form, and the advance in intellect has limitations. The physical man must perish by the laws of his being, and evolution stop in that direction. But this progress has been more than physical. A spiritual being has been "evolved" to carry forward into a new life the attainments of this. As we can imagine a line returning into itself, so we can suppose the aggregation of force and spiritual energy concentrated in the physical body, beginning an individual existence with its birth, may continue after this scaffolding has been removed, and move on in a circular orbit, that to our comprehension—at least—is endless.

If this theory be admitted that the spirit is first, and "clothes itself" with its physical body, then pre-existence and re-incarnation become theories into which we are driven by inexorable logic. In other words, science and law give place to miracle, and creation is not evolution, but a continuous march.

Again, we ask, why should spirits descend to clothe themselves with matter? They move onward, not backward, and for an emancipated spirit to become fettered and tortured by a fleshly garb through years of mortal life must be a degradation and incomprehensible torture; and more, nothing can be gained by a spirit through such experience.

A DREAM.

Scene—St. Peter's Gate.

"Name? and where from"?
My Name? Hunter!—I hunted for some trouble!
A bull of Bashan tossed me high and double;
Yes, he was master and "boss," in that fray;
And I vowed I'd meet him at some later day.
When my dogs of war have their broken ribs healed,
Where bricks smash'd them in as downward they keeled,
Yelping "Yow-wow, I know'd it, I know'd it!"
And old Javeh just laugh'd, and said, "I had no grit—"
Fact is, I'm afraid—I'll keep off that field—
Got mor'n I bargained for; just had to yield—
Walked all over me—squeezed out my breath!—
An invincible bull: to meet him is sure death;
Yes, I used bad words and called them "liars!
And frauds!" who disrespect us friars,
Sole pilots we, for God's chosen, for bliss;
Thro' dark Philistia land, of scoffers in this—
Had I lived,—Dr. Blatterson—(my "Pal" in Ire),
A "Plumed Knight" for inquisitorial fire,
We'd burn some "witches" that still curse the earth,
And make Saints howl, and for sinners—mirth;
But alas! it's over!— and St. Peter—to be brief—
Let me see my Master!—and that illustrious thief!—
True to the last!—and he was promised a place,
The most honor'd of all in that Saintly race
Of murderers, thieves, fools, and galootes,—
Criminals—who were a disgrace to brutes.

* * * * * *

Here,—St. Peter pressed a button—open flew a door—
From out whence came fumes, and a far-off roar—
And din of battle yells; darkness and briers;—
"In there, my son;—all—are, called liars.
Here, in my dream surely could be seen
St. Patrick Park and the Dr. upon "Fiddler's Green";
Farther in were rolling clouds afar,
And gray rocks of Purgatory and a sound of War.

An Impressive Statement.

Dr. H. V. Sweringen, in the Paper he read before the joint meeting of Physicians and Preachers at Ft. Wayne, Ind., makes the following impressive statement:

"With what pleasure do we turn, then, from the gloom of annihilation, materialism and agnosticism to the cheering faith of the church, weak and unsatisfactory as that faith is, and the knowledge which promises to be added to it of a future life, as afforded by psychical investigations now going on.

"No matter what the moral, physical, intellectual or financial conditon of the individual may be, it is not necessarily a pessimistic expression to say that this life is not absolutely satisfactory to any intelligent human being; and it is this hope, this desire, this longing for something better, we know not what, which is strongly and rationally suggestive that this brief existence is incomplete and is only intended as a round in the ladder of progressive ascent, as a part of a stupendous whole in the divine plan, as a stage in the evolution of man. The late Prof. John Fiske most forcibly and elegantly expresses this thought as follows: 'Precisely as in the most embryonic condition the prefigured wing of the bird or fin of the fish infallibly indicates the element necessary to its life, so the whole analogy of evolution bears us with irresistible momentum to the conclusion that the religious nature and cravings of mankind are correlated with an unseen world'."

ANOTHER REASON WHY.

People Should Do Less Chattering and More Thinking.

The reasons multiply. That is, their discovery increases the more that causes are sought for the effects—all about us. For a long while he who determines to break over the circus-ring of creeds, dogmas, superstitions and blind faiths of human commonality is struck with, and much perplexed by one thing. The sheep-like flockings and stupid following, no matter whence leading, of the mass, after various bell-wethers.

With an assumed self-knowledge, and a craft born of Jesuitry, these temporary and self-elected "leaders," for periods, have everything their own way, and all is grist that comes to their mill.

Gradually, as reasoning power strengthens by its intelligent direction and use, and observant experiencing points the way, the puzzle solves itself, and the reason why for so many seeming paradoxes in the conduct of human affairs become plainer and simpler.

What, then, is the chief cause for all this? Human stupidity, non-knowledge, incapacity and unwillingness to think—a wilful ignorance of natural limitations.

This being true, is there any wonder that the exploiter and the self-seeker, he who without conscience used all his animal cunning, often under guise of highest piety and as a public benefactor, can play on human emotions, the sacred ties of family relationship, the veiled and mysterious human problem of human origin, present office and future destiny, in fact, all involved in human existence and relationship, and have multitudes of blind followers?

Fakeism in Spiritualism, practiced and carried on so disgustingly and brazenly all over the land, is explainable on these lines—orthodox creedism and Churchianity likewise. Industrial monopolies and political chicanery, all the flowering and fruitage of graft, greed, selfishness and unscrupulousness carried to their ultimate can be accounted for.

In view of the thousand and one possibilities for taking advantage of the ignorance and superstition of humanity in mass, thereby gaining temporary power, prestige, sway, emoluments, place, and conspicuousness, is it any wonder that so many brighter intellects, so many higher divine endowments have been prostituted and are now ignobly pursuing the ways of the world—the selfish, merciless world?

The foregoing remarks, in line with former expressions, for which the writer has favored publication, are but a prelude, so to speak, to an article by "L. R." in Century Path of date of Jan. 19, 1908, entitled, "A Chattering World," which seems to be an accurate picturing of the exact present-day situation, and is given here following:

"Verily is ours a civilization of babble. We talk and talk forever upon everything, and then complain that we have no nerve energy. Building, whether of continents or brain cells, is done in silence, and there is no silence anywhere in town or country. We cannot even have silence with ourselves; the chatter of mind is even then more insistent than that of tongue. A newspaper is a picture of our minds, a welter of shrieking nothings. We are the very incompetents of the ages.

"It is an age of doubt. Why should it not be? We cannot hold our minds still long enough to know anything, cannot hold any thought steady enough to sink it down on to truth. When shall we learn that truth does not arise from the mind, does not originate there, but enters like rays of light in the momentary pauses of chatter? Only in mental silence can the soul speak.

"Our bodies are prematurely worn out by the careless rattle of mind. Brain cells give way; we have no memories. We are universally victims of neurasthenia, insomnia, headache, and in the front of us is always the abyss of drug-taking.

"All our ways and behavior show our servitude to our incompetent but dominant minds. We walk hurriedly, uncertainly. We surround ourselves with an ever increasing perplexity and profuseness of possessions, the suggestions of ceaselessly acting minds over which we have utterly lost control. Our food must have a hundred flavors, and we need ten dishes where one would suffice. Dress becomes more complex, and its fashion changes weekly. We read in our magazines and newspapers of all things on earth, understand nothing thoroughly and remember nothing. We patronize and invent a thousand time-saving devices, and do nothing with the time saved. We rush upon schemes to make money, and do not know what to do with it when it is made.

"In a word, it is an insane civilization. It is a civilization that has lost control of mind; and mind uncontrolled, mind dominating, is mind insane. Judgment and will are not of the mind; they have a higher source.

"We must teach our children silence—if we are too far gone to learn it ourselves. They at least can be led to understand that real truth comes into the mind listening to its own central voice, not into mind chattering with itself, making plans, throwing up the debris of memories, or racing forward along the blind paths of anticipation. They can learn from the silence the forgotten art of holding the mind upon what they will, holding it until it sees, until it unfolds all the implications and connections of that on which it is placed; of making it an instrument of understanding, a lens, a mirror, instead of a screen with a thousand changeful and delusive iridescences of its own. Thus they can know where we fitfully hope, be assured where we doubt, and drink spiritual life in the waters of the silence that to us is nothing."

In the opinion of the undersigned this "A Chattering World" article is quite a mirror.

DO SPIRITS OF THE DEAD COME BACK TO US.

The Views of the Eminent Astronomer, Camille Flammarion, in the Chicago Examiner.

That souls survive the destruction of the body I have not the slightest doubt, but that they manifest themselves by the processes employed in seances the experimental method has not yet given us absolute proof. I add this hypothesis is not at all likely.

If the souls of the dead are about us, upon our planet, the invisible population would increase at the rate of 100,000 a day, about 36,000,000 a year, 3,620,000,000 a century, 36,000,000,000 in ten centuries, etc.—unless we admit re-incarnation upon the earth itself.

How many times do apparitions, or manifestations, occur? When illusions, auto-suggestions, hallucinations are eliminated, what remains? Scarcely anything. Such an exceptional rarity as this pleads against the reality of apparitions.

We may suppose, it is true, that all human beings do not survive their death, and that, in general, their physical entity is so insignificant, so wavering, so ineffectual, that it almost disappears in the ether, in the common reservoir, in the environment, like the souls of animals. But thinking beings who have the consciousness of their physical existence do not close their personality, but continue the cycle of their evolution.

It would seem natural, therefore, to see them manifest themselves under certain circumstances.

Persons condemned to death, in consequence of judicial errors, and executed, should they not return to protest their innocence?

Would it not be reasonable to suppose that persons put to death in such a way that violence was not suspected, would return to accuse the assassins?

Knowing the character of Robespierre, of Saint-Just, of Fouguier Turville, I should like to have seen them revenge themselves a little on those who triumphed over them. The victims of '93, should they not have returned to disturb the sleep of the conquerors?

Out of the 20,000 citizens shot by fusillades during the time of the Commune of Paris, I should like to have seen a dozen harassing M. Thiers, who was really too puffed up and vainglorious over his having first permitted the organization and then punished it.

Why do not children, whose death is lamented by their parents, ever come to console them? Why do our dearest attachments seem to disappear forever? And how about last wills and testaments stolen away and the last will of the dead ignored and their intentions purposely misinterpreted?

"It is only the dead that do not return," says an old proverb. This aphorism is not of absolute application, perhaps, but apparitions are rare, and we do not understand their exact nature. Are they actual apparitions of the dead? It is not yet demonstrated.

Up to to-day I have sought in vain for certain proof of personal identity through mediumistic communications. And then, one does not see why spirits, if they exist around us, should have need of mediums at all in order to manifest themselves. They surely must form a part of nature, of the universal nature which includes all things.

It may be, it is true, that spirits exist around us and that it is normally impossible for them to make themselves visible, audible or tangible, not being able to reflect rays of light accessible to our retina or to produce sonorous waves or to effect touches.

I do not say that spirits do not exist—on the contrary, I have reasons for admitting their existence, but as a faithful servant of the experimental method, I think, we ought to exhaust all the simple, natural hypotheses already known, before having recourse to others.

GIRL SEES BROTHER DROWN IN VISION.

Falls in Faint and Moans "Fred is Dying, He Calls Me."—Boy Perishes Same Moment.—Twelve Miles Separated Brother and Sister at at Time of Remarkable Communication.

St. Louis, Mo.—While her twin brother, Fred, was being sucked to death in the quicksands of Long Lake, near Mitchell, Ill., Merle Huber, 17 years old, who was twelve miles away in Granite City, at home alone, shrieked and fell to the front porch in a faint. Neighbors ran to her assistance and revived her.

"Fred is dying; I can hear him calling to me. He is drowning. Let me go to him," moaned the girl.

Merle made frantic efforts to leave the house, but was held back by friends, who assured her that Fred was all right. The girl could not be quieted. Five minutes later a message came from Mitchell that Fred Huber had been drowned. When the news reached his sister she again fainted, and up to a late hour was in a critical condition.

The Huber boy was a student at the Granite City high school and was spending his vacation with friends on a farm near Mitchell, Ill. Accompanied by two farm hands, Henry Stovall and Jesse Collins, he went to Long Lake to take a swim. When the trio arrived at the body of water the men decided that it was too cold to swim. Huber swam out several yards into the lake and then started to return. He got about half way to the shore, when he threw up his hands and fell back.

An hour later the boy's body was taken from the lake. A rope was tied about his shoulders and he was dragged out of the sands. It required five men to extricate him.

A comparison of time showed that the girl had fallen into the faint at the exact moment when Fred became entangled in the quicksands.

REFLECTIONS ON SUICIDE.

"No One Ever Commits Self-Destruction Until Driven to the Deed by Conditions and Circumstances," Says Channing Severance.

On various occasions there has appeared in The Progressive Thinker articles in condemnation of suicide and some disturbing assertions for those who believe them. I do not believe them, and if necessity made suicide desirable, as seems to be the case with those who commit the act, I should join them despite what has been written about their awful sufferings "over there."

Philosophical meditations on the subject must convince a rational thinker that no one ever commits self-destruction until driven to the deed by conditions and circumstances. There is a limit to mental and physical suffering, and when it is reached, away goes the victim of misfortune by his own hand. Suicide is nothing new in human history, and all records that connect us with the past, reveal the fact that some of the best and wisest men that ever lived anticipated Nature in discarding the body; but as Voltaire has informed us, "there is no reason to apprehend that suicide will become an epidemic malady, for hope and fear are too powerful as inducements not to frequently stay the hands of a wretch about to terminate his own life."

Richard Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy declares it his opinion that no man ever lived who at some time had not contemplated suicide; and another writer asserts that could every one by relaxing the will let go of life when temporarily depressed and feeling they would like to, the living would not be sufficient in numbers to bury the dead.

Such are the conditions under which humanity lives, and that a small per cent of the race do take their own lives is not surprising.

As everything that occurs in this world is preceded by an adequate cause, no one can be held responsible for his act if he does take his own life, so the idea that a long and unpleasant period of suffering as a punishment for the act, is inflicted by Nature in a continued existence, is too absurd for a minute's consideration.

P. B. Randolph held that idea of punishment, and wrote against suicide, yet conditions that he got into made him a suicide. A purported communication from him afterwards said that it was fated to be in his case.

As a philosophical fatalist I claim that all cases are fated to be, and his was no exception. We can take the number of suicides each year in every country and predict with certainty almost how many there will be the next year, and the same holds good of homicides; and it is safe to add a few for the natural increase.

As these things go on with regularity year after year, is it not foolishness and folly to claim that men shape and control their own destiny? To me it is, and in these facts I find sustaining evidence to prove the doctrine of fatalism.

Said Thomas Carlyle, "What e'er we perpetrate we but vow; we're steered by fate."

Dr. Franz Hartman says, "We are here for a purpose and have no right to abandon the post of duty."

If this is so, then the man who commits murder was here for that purpose and was simply fulfilling his mission! How absurd this purpose business is when we consider what people do in this world, and the man who defends it will be kept very busy holding up his end of the argument. I recently read of a man in Michigan who murdered his mother, and was given a life sentence, as capital punishment is abolished in that state. He later secured poison and with it killed one of the guards and made his escape, thus fulfilling his "purpose in life" twice.

The question I would now ask those who deplore suicides and are so sure they suffer greatly in the next world is this: Which would have been better for this man, to have taken his own life or to have killed two people, and which would have caused him the most suffering, suicide or murder?

If we take that poem of Lizzie Doten's, so popular thirty-five years ago—"John, Robert, Peter and Paul," we will find one of these characters was a murderer, and yet as the poem runs: "Every purpose of life was fulfilled by them all."

If there is a purposein life and men fulfill it, where rests the responsibility?

If men are sent into this world by the forces of Nature, Nature is and must be responsible for their acts. But as Nature is not self-conscious, as far as we know, and works blindly through immutable laws, it is pretty hard to fasten direct or intentional responsibility upon her, and so the best we can do is to say such and such things were fated to be; that is the unbroken chain of causes and effects led to these results. So I repeat, if men do commit suicide they are not responsible, being driven to it, and to suppose that Nature will punish them for doing what she impelled them to do, is too absurd for my credulity.

NINETY AND NINE.

There are ninety and nine that work and die
In want and hunger and cold,
That one may live in luxury
And be lapped in silken fold;
And ninety and nine in their hovels bare,
And one in a palace of riches rare.

From the sweat of their brows the desert blooms,
And the forest before them falls,
Their labor has builded humble homes
And cities with lofty halls,
And the one owns cities and houses and lands,
And the ninety and nine have empty hands.

But the night so dreary and dark and long
At last shall the morning bring;
And over the land the victor' song
Of the ninety and nine shall ring.
And echo afar from zone to zone:
"Rejoice, for labor shall have its own!"

LILY DALE, N. Y.

Scintillations of Thought From the Lily Dale Rostrum.

"The world is hungry for this truth. The daily papers and periodicals are taking it up. They admit thoughts are things, and will yet learn that thoughts can be projected from the dead (?) to the brain of the living. Inventors as sensitives receive their impressions from spirits, proving that the two worlds meet with a message for here and now."

H. W. RICHARDSON.
N. Y. State President.

"We are not noisy, but alive. Spiritualism is not too good to be true. It sweeps away superstition and proves that the lake of fire was only a symbol given in an ignorant age that could grasp only material ideas. The world will yet salute it as the nations salute their flag."

TILLIE U. REYNOLDS.
N. Y. State Missionary.

"All religions began with spirit communications. Had they been preserved and the simplicity of spirit teachings, we, as Spiritualists, would not have been needed. A few only preserved them, waiting through the ages for the truth. The earth below and the sky above thrilling with eternal vibrations of life; how can the tree or anything between them ever be dead?" Deathless immortal selfhood! I am, I was, I will continue to be! MRS. R. S. LILLIE.

"Beautiful as belief is, knowledge is better. We know. Let us be true to our convictions. Confusion has come to the church, for it is built upon sand. It has left spirit manifestations out and clung to a dead Christ, while rejecting the living one. From Vatican to people, from king to peasant, from high to lowly, this truth comes and says: "I am here!"

ZADIA KATES.

"Why should the church reject the truth of spirit communion? It has come just in time to save religious teachings from the canker of materialism that means destruction. It took all the past to reach our present state of development and it will take all the future to unfold its passibilities." GEO. W. KATES.

"Spiritualism implies naturalism. It is a revelator, energizer, and emancipator in the broadest sense. Scientifically it is one with astronomy, with chemistry, with creative energy, the seance room being its laboratory. As a Savior it has saved the world from its own ignorance.

OSCAR A. EDGERLY.

"You ask me, 'Who is my God? My God is the same as yours, Eternal, ever-present, past and future. Ever good, who not only made everything but made it out of Himself. If we are lost from God, then God loses a part of Himself. My people believe God sends suffering and makes caste. I do not, or I would not be here with you." BASANTA KOOMAR ROY.
Of Calcutta, India.

A most beautiful and impressive funeral service was that of Mrs. Elizabeth Griffy, which took place here since our last report. But still more impressive was its sequel.

A number of mediums gathered to see what might be given regarding her transition. They saw all her loved ones, including husband and children, from whom she had been parted many years, forming a group of eager faces and outstretched welcoming hands! They surrounded her, caressed and soothed her with loving even playful words, telling her the light had come. She had told her faithful nurse, Mrs. Diedrick, she dreaded the dark journey. Such testimony could not be questioned. Life's checkerboard was demonstrated in the fact that the incoming train that received her body brought the newly wedded pair, Mr. and Mrs. Captain Conyers, former Mrs. A. J. Pettengill, who had intended a surprise visit, but spirits revealed their coming, and they were met by a procession of Lily Dale's leading lights, headed by the Assembly Band, which supplemented "The Wedding March" with "A hot Time in the Old Town To-night."

Note.—(Oldtown was Mrs. Conyers' former home.)

Mr. H. L. Tobin, who conducts the Forest Temple gatherings, received a letter asking for a psychic diagnosis from a lock of hair of a young lady on whom the Doctors had decided to operate. Four mediums took the hair in turn, without any knowledge of each other's diagnosis, they each reported the same conditions and gave the same advice; to cut or not to cut, being decided in the negative.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. M. S. Arbuckle. Q.—Has the number 7 an occult power?

A.—So it has been maintained from ancient times and exhaustive discussions have been made in its wonderful qualities. Of course it has no power, and the study of its combinations is the mental play of children, though indulged in by "Wise Men," and "Sages." A great share of the "wisdom" of the ancients was made up of such rubbish. There were seven wise men of Greece; the week had seven days; seven plants; seven wonders; seven heavens; seven notes of music, and to make the number hold good seven colors. There were seven stars of magnitude and although only six visible, the Pleiades were called the Seven Sisters. There were seven sleepers, and now we have Seven Day Baptists, and Seven Day Adventists. A slight review of these "Wonderful" applications of 7, will show how superficial and arbitrary they are. We could have with equal plausibility the seven great railroads; the seven sky-scrapers; the seven grafters of the senate; the seven imbecile presidents, etc.

Humanitarian. Q.—This correspondent sends a clipping with the query: "Does not this show a most exemplary model of affection for animals

The clipping is the story of how a lady of wealth in Seattle, Wash., came to Philadelphia, 3000 miles, to have a surgical operation performed on the throat of her dog, a "York Terrier." The wealthy owner of this dog, is so much attached to him that she has an entire gold service upon which to serve his dainty meals. The surgeon removed the tubercular tumor, which was choking the dog. The surgeon was "eminent," the best to be obtained after the 3000 mile journey. The expense was $600. The little dog is doing well, its mistress is overjoyed that it will now dine on its gold platter, and take cream from a gold goblet. I confess that I am not enthused with the sentiment of our correspondent. I have always taken interest in humane work, and advocated justice to all animals as well as to mankind. Of course, if the "wealthy" desire gold servers for their poodles, or to seat them at the tables with napkins and finger-bowls, it is their privilege, and it is the privilege of the less fortunate to laugh at the spectacle. Such manifestations, out of all proportion to their object, bring ridicule rather than sympathy. One might feel deeply moved by a mother taking the swiftest train across the continent with the hope to save her child. A child is priceless, the dog was valued by its owner "at $500!" Her great love had price, as everything the parvenu rich possess has a price to measure it by. It is the common, vulgar method of valuation.

It may be presumed that hundreds of children in that western state, needed care, as much or more, than this petted canine. The $600 would have gone a long way toward assisting them. This "wealthy lady," probably never had a thought of them, or a child of her own to absorb the love lavished on her dog.

Querist.—Question. How can the statement made in the Arcana of Spiritualism, and continually maintained in your writings, that the spirit has its beginning with the physical body, and yet is immortal? Is it not unanswerable that whatever has a beginning must have an end?

Answer.—I do not shrink from taking this question squarely and fairly. It is constantly asked, with an assurance of triumph as absolutely settling the question. It is logically conclusive! Can a line be drawn without two ends? Whatever has an endless future must have had a beginningless past!

In the face of all these seemingly self-evident propositions, and unanswerable logic, it does not seem to me the subject is disposed of, rather the points raised have no relation to the question. When we talk of infinity and the endless, we are limited by our narrow finiteness. So far as comprehension is concerned, a thousand millions is an infinite number to even a mathematician. To a savage a thousand would be incomprehensible. When the number exceeds that of the fingers, their minds become perplexed.

Let us begin with the proportion stated as an axiom, that a line must have two ends. A straight line must, but if drawn on a circle it returns into itelf and is endless.

The theory of evolution teaches that there has been a constant advance from the lowest forms of life to man. The human being is the last term in the physical series. There is no prophecy of a more perfect physical form, and the advance in intellect has limitations. The physical man must perish by the laws of his being, and evolution stop in that direction. But this progress has been more than physical. A spiritual being has been "evolved" to carry forward into a new life the attainments of this. As we can imagine a line returning into itself, so we can suppose the aggregation of force and spiritual energy concentrated in the physical body, beginning an individual existence with its birth, may continue after this scaffolding has been removed, and move on in a circular orbit, that to our comprehension—at least—is endless.

If this theory be admitted that the spirit is first, and "clothes itself" with its physical body, then pre-existence and re-incarnation become theories into which we are driven by inexorable logic. In other words, science and law give place to miracle, and creation is not evolution, but a continuous march.

Again, we ask, why should spirits descend to clothe themselves with matter? They move onward, not backward, and for an emancipated spirit to become fettered and tortured by a fleshly garb through years of mortal life must be a degradation and incomprehensible torture; and more, nothing can be gained by a spirit through such experience.

A DREAM.

Scene—St. Peter's Gate.

"Name? and where from"?
My Name? Hunter!—I hunted for some trouble!
A bull of Bashan fossed me high and double;
Yes, he was master and "boss," in that fray;
And I vowed I'd meet him at some later day.
When my dogs of war have their broken ribs healed,
Where bricks smash'd them in as downward they keeled,
Yelping "Yow-wow, I know'd it, I know'd it!"
And old Javeh just laugh'd, and said, "I had no grit—"
Fact is, I'm afraid—I'll keep off that field—
Got mor'n I bargained for; just had to yield—
Walked all over me—squeezed out my breath!—
An invincible bull: to meet him is sure death;
Yes, I used bad words and called them "liars!
And frauds!" who disrespect us friars,
Sole pilots we, for God's chosen, for bliss;
Thro' dark Philistia land, of scoffers in this—
Had I lived,—Dr. Blatterson—(my "Pal" in Ire),
A "Plumed Knight" for inquisitorial fire,
We'd burn some "witches" that still curse the earth,
And make Saints howl, and for sinners—mirth;
But alas! it's over!— and St. Peter—to be brief—
Let me see my Master!—and that illustrious thief!—
True to the last!—and he was promised a place,
The most honor'd of all in that Saintly race
Of murderers, thieves, fools, and galootes,—
Criminals—who were a disgrace to brutes.
* * * * * *
Here,—St. Peter pressed a button—open flew a door—
From out whence came fumes, and a far-off roar—
And din of battle yells; darkness and briers;—
"In there, my son;—all—are, called liars.
Here, in my dream surely could be seen
St. Patrick Park and the Dr. upon "Fiddler's Green";
Farther in were rolling clouds afar,
And gray rocks of Purgatory and a sound of War.

An Impressive Statement.

Dr. H. V. Sweringen, in the Paper he read before the joint meeting of Physicians and Preachers at Ft. Wayne, Ind., makes the following impressive statement:

"With what pleasure do we turn, then, from the gloom of annihilation, materialism and agnosticism to the cheering faith of the church, weak and unsatisfactory as that faith is, and the knowledge which promises to be added to it of a future life, as afforded by psychical investigations now going on.

"No matter what the moral, physical, intellectual or financial conditon of the individual may be, it is not necessarily a pessimistic expression to say that this life is not absolutely satisfactory to any intelligent human being; and it is this hope, this desire, this longing for something better, we know not what, which is strongly and rationally suggestive that this brief existence is incomplete and is only intended as a round in the ladder of progressive ascent, as a part of a stupendous whole in the divine plan, as a stage in the evolution of man. The late Prof. John Fiske most forcibly and elegantly expresses this thought as follows: 'Precisely as in the most embryonic condition the prefigured wing of the bird or fin of the fish infallibly indicates the element necessary to its life, so the whole analogy of evolution bears us with irresistible momentum to the conclusion that the religious nature and cravings of mankind are correlated with an unseen world'."

ANOTHER REASON WHY.

People Should Do Less Chattering and More Thinking.

The reasons multiply. That is, their discovery increases the more that causes are sought for the effects—all about us. For a long while he who determines to break over the circus-ring of creeds, dogmas, superstitions and blind faiths of human commonality is struck with, and much perplexed by one thing. The sheep-like flockings and stupid following, no matter whence leading, of the mass, after various bell-wethers.

With an assumed self-knowledge, and a craft born of Jesuitry, these temporary and self-elected "leaders," for periods, have everything their own way, and all is grist that comes to their mill.

Gradually, as reasoning power strengthens by its intelligent direction and use, and observant experiencing points the way, the puzzle solves itself, and the reason why for so many seeming paradoxes in the conduct of human affairs become plainer and simpler.

What, then, is the chief cause for all this? Human stupidity, non-knowledge, incapacity and unwillingness to think—a wilful ignorance of natural limitations.

This being true, is there any wonder that the exploiter and the self-seeker, he who without conscience used all his animal cunning, often under guise of highest piety and as a public benefactor, can play on human emotions, the sacred ties of family relationship, the veiled and mysterious human problem of human origin, present office and future destiny, in fact, all involved in human existence and relationship, and have multitudes of blind followers?

Fakeism in Spiritualism, practiced and carried on so disgustingly and brazenly all over the land, is explainable on these lines—orthodox creedism and Churchianity likewise. Industrial monopolies and political chicanery, all the flowering and fruitage of graft, greed, selfishness and unscrupulousness carried to their ultimate can be accounted for.

In view of the thousand and one possibilities for taking advantage of the ignorance and superstition of humanity in mass, thereby gaining temporary power, prestige, sway, emoluments, place, and conspicuousness, is it any wonder that so many brighter intellects, so many higher divine endowments have been prostituted and are now ignobly pursuing the ways of the world—the selfish, merciless world?

The foregoing remarks, in line with former expressions, for which the writer has favored publication, are but a prelude, so to speak, to an article by "L. R." in Century Path of date of Jan. 19, 1908, entitled, "A Chattering World," which seems to be an accurate picturing of the exact present-day situation, and is given here following:

"Verily is ours a civilization of babble. We talk and talk forever upon everything, and then complain that we have no nerve energy. Building, whether of continents or brain cells, is done in silence, and there is no silence anywhere in town or country. We cannot even have silence with ourselves; the chatter of mind is even then more insistent than that of tongue. A newspaper is a picture of our minds, a welter of shrieking nothings. We are the very incompetents of the ages.

"It is an age of doubt. Why should it not be? We cannot hold our minds still long enough to know anything, cannot hold any thought steady enough to sink it down on to truth. When shall we learn that truth does not arise from the mind, does not originate there, but enters like rays of light in the momentary pauses of chatter? Only in mental silence can the soul speak.

"Our bodies are prematurely worn out by the careless rattle of mind. Brain cells give way; we have no memories. We are universally victims of neurasthenia, insomnia, headache, and in the front of us is always the abyss of drug-taking.

"All our ways and behavior show our servitude to our incompetent but dominant minds. We walk hurriedly, uncertainly. We surround ourselves with an ever increasing perplexity and profuseness of possessions, the suggestions of ceaselessly acting minds over which we have utterly lost control. Our food must have a hundred flavors, and we need ten dishes where one would suffice. Dress becomes more complex, and its fashion changes weekly. We read in our magazines and newspapers of all things on earth, understand nothing thoroughly and remember nothing. We patronize and invent a thousand time-saving devices, and do nothing with the time saved. We rush upon schemes to make money, and do not know what to do with it when it is made.

"In a word, it is an insane civilization. It is a civilization that has lost control of mind; and mind uncontrolled, mind dominating, is mind insane. Judgment and will are not of the mind; they have a higher source.

"We must teach our children silence—if we are too far gone to learn it ourselves. They at least can be led to understand that real truth comes into the mind listening to its own central voice, not into mind chattering with itself, making plans, throwing up the debris of memories, or racing forward along the blind paths of anticipation. They can learn from the silence the forgotten art of holding the mind upon what they will, holding it until it sees, until it unfolds all the implications and connections of that on which it is placed; of making it an instrument of understanding, a lens, a mirror, instead of a screen with a thousand changeful and delusive iridescences of its own. Thus they can know where we fitfully hope, be assured where we doubt, and drink spiritual life in the waters of the silence that to us is nothing."

In the opinion of the undersigned this "A Chattering World" article is quite a mirror.

DO SPIRITS OF THE DEAD COME BACK TO US.

The Views of the Eminent Astronomer, Camille Flammarion, in the Chicago Examiner.

That souls survive the destruction of the body I have not the slightest doubt, but that they manifest themselves by the processes employed in seances the experimental method has not yet given us absolute proof. I add this hypothesis is not at all likely.

If the souls of the dead are about us, upon our planet, the invisible population would increase at the rate of 100,000 a day, about 36,000,000 a year, 3,620,000,000 a century, 36,000,000,000 in ten centuries, etc.—unless we admit re-incarnation upon the earth itself.

How many times do apparitions, or manifestations, occur? When illusions, auto-suggestions, hallucinations are eliminated, what remains? Scarcely anything. Such an exceptional rarity as this pleads against the reality of apparitions.

We may suppose, it is true, that all human beings do not survive their death, and that, in general, their physical entity is so insignificant, so wavering, so ineffectual, that it almost disappears in the ether, in the common reservoir, in the environment, like the souls of animals. But thinking beings who have the consciousness of their physical existence do not close their personality, but continue the cycle of their evolution.

It would seem natural, therefore, to see them manifest themselves under certain circumstances.

Persons condemned to death, in consequence of judicial errors, and executed, should they not return to protest their innocence?

Would it not be reasonable to suppose that persons put to death in such a way that violence was not suspected, would return to accuse the assassins?

Knowing the character of Robespierre, of Saint-Just, of Fouguler Turville, I should like to have seen them revenge themselves a little on those who triumphed over them. The victims of '93, should they not have returned to disturb the sleep of the conquerors?

Out of the 20,000 citizens shot by fusillades during the time of the Commune of Paris, I should like to have seen a dozen harassing M. Thiers, who was really too puffed up and vainglorious over his having first permitted the organization and then punished it.

Why do not children, whose death is lamented by their parents, ever come to console them? Why do our dearest attachments seem to disappear forever? And how about last wills and testaments stolen away and the last will of the dead ignored and their intentions purposely misinterpreted?

"It is only the dead that do not return," says an old proverb. This aphorism is not of absolute application, perhaps, but apparitions are rare, and we do not understand their exact nature. Are they actual apparitions of the dead? It is not yet demonstrated.

Up to to-day I have sought in vain for certain proof of personal identity through mediumistic communications. And then, one does not see why spirits, if they exist around us, should have need of mediums at all in order to manifest themselves. They surely must form a part of nature, of the universal nature which includes all things.

It may be, it is true, that spirits exist around us and that it is normally impossible for them to make themselves visible, audible or tangible, not being able to reflect rays of light accessible to our retina or to produce sonorous waves or to effect touches.

I do not say that spirits do not exist—on the contrary, I have reasons for admitting their existence, but as a faithful servant of the experimental method, I think, we ought to exhaust all the simple, natural hypotheses already known, before having recourse to others.

GIRL SEES BROTHER DROWN IN VISION.

Falls in Faint and Moans "Fred is Dying, He Calls Me."—Boy Perishes Same Moment.—Twelve Miles Separated Brother and Sister at at Time of Remarkable Communication.

St. Louis, Mo.—While her twin brother, Fred, was being sucked to death in the quicksands of Long Lake, near Mitchell, Ill., Merle Huber, 17 years old, who was twelve miles away in Granite City, at home alone, shrieked and fell to the front porch in a faint. Neighbors ran to her assistance and revived her.

"Fred is dying; I can hear him calling to me. He is drowning. Let me go to him," moaned the girl.

Merle made frantic efforts to leave the house, but was held back by friends, who assured her that Fred was all right. The girl could not be quieted. Five minutes later a message came from Mitchell that Fred Huber had been drowned. When the news reached his sister she again fainted, and up to a late hour was in a critical condition.

The Huber boy was a student at the Granite City high school and was spending his vacation with friends on a farm near Mitchell, Ill. Accompanied by two farm hands, Henry Stovall and Jesse Collins, he went to Long Lake to take a swim. When the trio arrived at the body of water the men decided that it was too cold to swim. Huber swam out several yards into the lake and then started to return. He got about half way to the shore, when he threw up his hands and fell back.

An hour later the boy's body was taken from the lake. A rope was tied about his shoulders and he was dragged out of the sands. It required five men to extricate him.

A comparison of time showed that the girl had fallen into the faint at the exact moment when Fred became entangled in the quicksands.

REFLECTIONS ON SUICIDE.

"No One Ever Commits Self-Destruction Until Driven to the Deed by Conditions and Circumstances," Says Channing Severance.

On various occasions there has appeared in The Progressive Thinker articles in condemnation of suicide and some disturbing assertions for those who believe them. I do not believe them, and if necessity made suicide desirable, as seems to be the case with those who commit the act, I should join them despite what has been written about their awful sufferings "over there."

Philosophical meditations on the subject must convince a rational thinker that no one ever commits self-destruction until driven to the deed by conditions and circumstances. There is a limit to mental and physical suffering, and when it is reached, away goes the victim of misfortune by his own hand. Suicide is nothing new in human history, and all records that connect us with the past, reveal the fact that some of the best and wisest men that ever lived anticipated Nature in discarding the body; but as Voltaire has informed us, "there is no reason to apprehend that suicide will become an epidemic malady, for hope and fear are too powerful as inducements not to frequently stay the hands of a wretch about to terminate his own life."

Richard Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy declares it his opinion that no man ever lived who at some time had not contemplated suicide; and another writer asserts that could every one by relaxing the will let go of life when temporarily depressed and feeling they would like to, the living would not be sufficient in numbers to bury the dead.

Such are the conditions under which humanity lives, and that a small per cent of the race do take their own lives is not surprising.

As everything that occurs in this world is preceded by an adequate cause, no one can be held responsible for his act if he does take his own life, so the idea that a long and unpleasant period of suffering as a punishment for the act, is inflicted by Nature in a continued existence, is too absurd for a minute's consideration.

P. B. Randolph held that idea of punishment, and wrote against suicide, yet conditions that he got into made him a suicide. A purported communication from him afterwards said that it was fated to be in his case.

As a philosophical fatalist I claim that all cases are fated to be, and his was no exception. We can take the number of suicides each year in every country and predict with certainty almost how many there will be the next year, and the same holds good of homicides; and it is safe to add a few for the natural increase.

As these things go on with regularity year after year, is it not foolishness and folly to claim that men shape and control their own destiny? To me it is, and in these facts I find sustaining evidence to prove the doctrine of fatalism.

Said Thomas Carlyle, "What e'er we perpetrate we but vow; we're steered by fate."

Dr. Franz Hartman says, "We are here for a purpose and have no right to abandon the post of duty."

If this is so, then the man who commits murder was here for that purpose and was simply fulfilling his mission. How absurd this purpose business is when we consider what people do in this world, and the man who defends it will be kept very busy holding up his end of the argument. I recently read of a man in Michigan who murdered his mother, and was given a life sentence, as capital punishment is abolished in that state. He later secured poison and with it killed one of the guards and made his escape, thus fulfilling his "purpose in life" twice.

The question I would now ask those who deplore suicides and are so sure they suffer greatly in the next world is this: Which would have been better for this man, to have taken his own life or to have killed two people, and which would have caused him the most suffering, suicide or murder?

If we take that poem of Lizzie Doten's, so popular thirty-five years ago—"John, Robert, Peter and Paul," we will find one of these characters was a murderer; and yet as the poem runs: "The purpose of life was fulfilled by them all."

If there is a purposein life and men fulfill it, where rests the responsibility?

If men are sent into this world by the forces of Nature, Nature is and must be responsible for their acts. But as Nature is not self-conscious, as far as we know, and works blindly through immutable laws, it is pretty hard to fasten direct or intentional responsibility upon her, and so the best we can do is to say such and such things were fated to be; that is the unbroken chain of causes and effects led to these results. So I repeat, if men do commit suicide they are not responsible, being driven to it, and to suppose that Nature will punish them for doing what she impelled them to do, is too absurd for my credulity.

NINETY AND NINE.

There are ninety and nine that work and die
In want and hunger and cold,
That one may live in luxury
And be lapped in silken fold;
And ninety and nine in their hovels bare,
And one in a palace of riches rare.

From the sweat of their brows the desert blooms,
And the forest before them falls,
Their labor has builded humble homes
And cities with lofty halls,
And the one owns cities and houses and lands,
And the ninety and nine have empty hands.

But the night so dreary and dark and long
At last shall the morning bring;
And over the land the victor' song
Of the ninety and nine shall ring.
And echo afar from zone to zone:
"Rejoice, for labor shall have its own!"

"Spiritualism and the Law." A Series of Papers Compiled from Legal Authority by the Hon. Charles R. Schirm of Baltimore, Md. This pamphlet is one that every Spiritualist should read. It is a subject that people are not familiar with. Price, 25 cents.

LILY DALE, N. Y.

Scintillations of Thought From the Lily Dale Rostrum.

"The world is hungry for this truth. The daily papers and periodicals are taking it up. They admit thoughts are things, and will yet learn that thoughts can be projected from the dead (?) to the brain of the living. Inventors as sensitives receive their impressions from spirits, proving that the two worlds meet with a message for here and now."

H. W. RICHARDSON.
N. Y. State President.

"We are not noisy, but alive. Spiritualism is not too good to be true. It sweeps away superstition and proves that the lake of fire was only a symbol given in an ignorant age that could grasp only material ideas. The world will yet salute it as the nations salute their flag."

TILLIE U. REYNOLDS.
N. Y. State Missionary.

"All religions began with spirit communications. Had they been preserved and the simplicity of spirit teachings, we, as Spiritualists, would not have been needed. A few only preserved them, waiting through the ages for the truth. The earth below and the sky above thrilling with eternal vibrations of life; how can the tree or anything between them ever be dead?" Deathless immortal selfhood! I am, I was, I will continue to be! MRS. R. S. LILLIE.

"Beautiful as belief is, knowledge is better. We know. Let us be true to our convictions. Confusion has come to the church, for it is built upon sand. It has left spirit manifestations out and clung to a dead Christ, while rejecting the living one. From Vatican to people, from king to peasant, from high to lowly, this truth comes and says: "I am here!"

ZADIA KATES.

"Why should the church reject the truth of spirit communion? It has come just in time to save religious teachings from the canker of materialism that means destruction. It took all the past to reach our present state of development and it will take all the future to unfold its passibilities." GEO. W. KATES.

"Spiritualism implies naturalism. It is a revelator, energizer, and emancipator in the broadest sense. Scientifically it is one with astronomy, with chemistry, with creative energy, the seance room being its laboratory. As a Savior it has saved the world from its own ignorance.

OSCAR A. EDGERLY.

"You ask me, 'Who is my God? My God is the same as yours, Eternal, ever-present, past and future. Ever good, who not only made everything but made it out of Himself. If we are lost from God, then God loses a part of Himself. My people believe God sends suffering and makes caste. I do not, or I would not be here with you." BASANTA KOOMAR ROY.
Of Calcutta, India.

A most beautiful and impressive funeral service was that of Mrs. Elizabeth Griffy, which took place here since our last report. But still more impressive was its sequel.

A number of mediums gathered to see what might be given regarding her transition. They saw all her loved ones, including husband and children, from whom she had been parted many years, forming a group of eager faces and outstretched welcoming hands! They surrounded her, caressed and soothed her with loving even playful words, telling her the light had come. She had told her faithful nurse, Mrs. Diedrick, she dreaded the dark journey. Such testimony could not be questioned. Life's checkerboard was demonstrated in the fact that the incoming train that received her body brought the newly wedded pair, Mr. and Mrs. Captain Conyers, former Mrs. A. J. Pettengill, who had intended a surprise visit, but spirits revealed their coming, and they were met by a procession of Lily Dale's leading lights, headed by the Assembly Band, which supplemented "The Wedding March" with "A hot Time in the Old Town To-night."

Note.—(Oldtown was Mrs. Conyers' former home.)

Mr. H. L. Tobin, who conducts the Forest Temple gatherings, received a letter asking for a psychic diagnosis from a lock of hair of a young lady on whom the Doctors had decided to operate. Four mediums took the hair in turn, without any knowledge of each other's diagnosis, they each reported the same conditions and gave the same advice; to cut or not to cut, being decided in the negative.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?

A Physician of Boston Gives a Diagnosis and Concludes that Spiritualism Has No Religion—The Line of Communication.

I would answer by saying it is a LINE of communication between one person in the body and one out. It is not a religion, a belief, a hope or a desire, but it is a SCIENTIFIC FACT, and can be demonstrated as clearly as any other science. The truth or a lie, may be sent over the line; the line is not responsible in either case. Without a line of communication there is no Spiritualism. It is the same with the telephone; neither line interferes with any kind of religion. Spiritualists have a legal right to be religious, but no moral right to try to tack it on to the Spiritual line. Persons agree about science, but they disagree about religion and beliefs; in a word, about what they do not know.

The spiritual line and the telephone are neutral; neither thinks, believes or has religion. It is the person using the line that is responsible for the communication.

The spiritual line is the grandest discovery the world has ever known. It does away with belief in a future life, as we have positive proof of a continued life.

Religion is like telling children that Santa Claus brings the presents. No one needs religion except those who are more or less under the domination of ignorance, superstition and fear.

The spiritual line does not have any system of faith or worship, and makes no effort to obtain Divine Favor, any more than the telephone; therefore it is not religious.

It is a well-known fact that a great many people all over the world are tired of religion.

An invalid has telephone connection with a church in order to hear the Sunday services. Do we call the telephone a religion because religious talk comes over the line? When anything good comes over the line many Spiritualists call it religion. On the same ground when something wicked comes over the line, as it does in many cases, why not call Spiritualism "Devilism?"

Many Spiritualists appear to be in a fog of terms, as they call good morals religion, when, in fact, good morals consist in a well-developed and a healthy action of all the faculties of a human being, and also in harmony with the laws of nature, whereas, religion is a matter of belief without any scientific foundation whatever. That is the reason the world is so full of the various kinds of religious beliefs. Each one who is religious appears to be a dictionary unto themselves, and call anything they please a religion, even taking a bath or having their hair cut. Therefore, when a Spiritualist says Spiritualism is a religion it is prima facie evidence that they are influenced by a personal selfish motive, viz.: half-fare on railroads, to be called a "Rev." and to be settled as a preacher, and to receive the homage usually accorded to the old-time minister.

To call Spiritualism a religion is false pretence, and should be so considered on the same ground as fake materialization.

In cultivation, let us all try to be sensible and honest, and view all things from a scientific standpoint, as we ought to realize that whatever has no scientific foundation must pass away; thus all religions are slowly passing away, and will in time disappear. Then people will become emancipated from all religious beliefs and stand perfectly free to become "Progressive Thinkers" in every department of life.

LONGINGS FOR THE BEYOND.

Looking Yearningly Forward to the Coming Reunion.

It is not in the darkest moments that we long to be free from these narrow conditions, and enter upon a life we deem far happier than this. At such times there comes the desire to conquer, win the victory, and achieve some wished-for end. But there are moments when calm and happy-like, the soul yearns, with unspeakable utterance, to burst the bars of its earthly limits and become an inmate of that world immortal.

O, to go home, to greet familiar faces long vanished from sight, but kept dear and tender in memory! To clasp the loving hands whose spirit touch, even now, gives such a thrill of joy! We have much on earth held sacred, griefs none may know, dreams buried without the hope of a resurrection here. But, we feel nothing is lost, and the best we cherish to-day will greet us on the fairer shores of that great to-morrow.

And then we cannot tell our thoughts to the world. It would not comprehend how bitter was the pang when love's pebble dropped in the watery deep, and afar on its silvery surface floated the dead leaves of a fond ideal. No, these various characteristics and emotions are not wholly understood, yet in the quiet satisfaction that we gain when alone with the invisibles, we rest assured that beyond, somewhere, We are fully known.

Yes, known at home; known by the patient hearts that can see farther than we, and have sympathy for the weakness and ignorance of mortals.

Then we fall into a fancy, if such it be, and wonder how it will all seem; whose form we shall see first, and will there be running brooks with daisies and sweet forget-me-nots growing along the banks? Will hills be tinged with the same bright hue at sunset, and raindrops fall as softly on the trees?

How we love the old meadows where wild roses grew in abundance—only—there is a shadow—the feet that strayed with us among the grasses are silent evermore, and eyes that watched with us the fading light of day, are far removed by the barriers of fate; or view from more distant hill-tops, the beauty of a light that never dies.

There are some, one perhaps, whom we would like to welcome when the gate swings noiselessly on its hinges.

Blessed human love, purer than all others; it is for such as you that life here is worth the living, and our home beyond the sunset becomes more real and near.

Sacrifice and suffering have been for your sake, and the outgrowth of it all is the divine intuition implanted in every human soul, that across the stream of time, ennobled, uplifted, we shall know our own at last.

THE OTHER W. F.

Critical Notes From W. F. Jamieson.

W. F. Peck calls my attention to a mistake I made in regard to the "god of war" being the nearest star to the earth. Yes, I was mistaken. I was thinking of the superior planets, although I knew that Venus is 66 million of miles from the sun. Beware of the man who assumes that he cannot be mistaken. He thinks more of his own opinion than the truth.

For my part, I think we can learn much from one another by this interchange of thought. This is one reason why I commended Dr. Hucheson, who wrote in the interest of exact speech.

If the word "star" is never applied by scientific men to a planet, that is what we should know. Said the doctor "Planets are never called stars by scientific men."

Brother Peck says: "They will tell you that, strictly speaking, the term star is only applied to those distant orbs which shine with their own light."

"Those distant orbs." Alpha Centauri is said to be the nearest, and it is billions on billions of miles away. He seems determined to leave not one star in our solar system

There are astronomers who insist that the term "sun" be applied to those heavenly bodies which shine with their own light, self-luminous bodies.

The term "star" is applied by scientific men to all the planets of our solar system!

They call our own earth a star; they term our sun a star; they apply the word "star" to meteors, which they call "shooting stars."

Says one eminent astronomer: "The great number of stars which dart outward from the constellation Perseus are merely particles of an immense stream of meteoric matter which is continually moving around the sun."

I innocently asked; "Is not Mars a star?"

To which Brother Peck replies: "Not scientifically, Brother J."

Yet the astronomers, every blessed one of them, term it a star. Do they not teach scientifically?

Our friend Peck pays his respects to the mediums and their "controls." Well may they exclaim: "Save us from our friends."

"A noted and really eloquent trance speaker," says our brother, "made Columbus discover America in the May Flower."

That was sad. America would not have fitted into that Puritan craft.

Brother Peck says he "desired to test the spirit before accepting its dictum upon so important a matter, and asked questions."

"The control at once began to get weak and abruptly left."

I have had them act that way with me, and friends, who are good at "explaining," said it was a rebuke for my impertinence; that we must accept what comes; observe conditions, and not ask too many questions."

"Prof. Huxley," says Mr. Peck, "who never turned his back to a foe," "speaking as a spirit through a medium, fled incontinently when I asked a question or two." "I do not insist that our speakers should be absolutely up to the mark on all scientific questions."

They will breathe easier now. Who is up to the "mark on all scientific questions?"

Mr. Peck: "But I do think that our public teachers should know enough to be certain of their ground, whether the utterances are their own or of some excarnate spirit."

How many mortals are certain of their ground?

Popes may be.

If any class, cult, or church had speakers "absolutely up to the mark" on even one branch of knowledge, the reign of infallibility would be almost here.

In the meantime, let us help one another to discover truth.

A COMMUNICATION.

From the Spirit Side of Life, Through the Hand of Mrs. S. W. Morehous, Elkhart, Ind.

This is Jahn Smythers, as I used to be known when I lived in my physical body. I tried to write the other day, but could not get control of your brain cells well enough to operate the keyboard of your brain. Your brain cells are to us of Spirit-life the same as the keyboard of a piano is to a pianist. We touch certain cells to produce certain movements of the physical body, thereby controlling the different organs of the body. I was born in the early Sixties, and lived almost to the end of the nineteenth century.

I am not dead, as I always said I would be, for I find myself the same John Smithers as I was here in the fleshly body, only this difference: Now I never can become a sick body again, but we have sickness of the mind here instead, but that does not last always. Just so long as we are not wishing to better our condition, just so long we remain sick in mind, but the slightest wish to improve results in bettering our condition of mind, and then we get well mentally, and being well mentally, makes us well spiritually too.

Now this may sound strange to those who know not what I mean, but to those who understand the laws of nature they will understand my meaning. It is difficult to make one of the mundane sphere comprehend the meaning of a dweller in the astral life, and consequently many of us are misunderstood and then called evil spirits coming back to ruin mankind.

I am trying to do good deeds and send kind thoughts to the children of the earthplane and by so doing helping some poor soul out of ignorance and bondage into light and truth.

Now I am happy and want the people of the earthplane to know it, for many of my relatives and friends are yet living and worrying about me because I held such a belief as I did; but I was wrong in my doctrine, and now see it, and I want to let them know I am happy now.

"A GOLDEN SHEAF."

The above is the title of an exquisite volume, the joint work of Hudson and Emma Rood Tuttle of Berlin Heights, Ohio. I cannot imagine a more fitting title for this book (published after fifty years of wedded love and work), it may well be called the crowning work of this inspired couple.

"A Golden Sheaf," is made up of nearly four hundred pages. In addition to "Strong Meat," served in Mr. Tuttle's own way, always to be relished by the philanthropic, intellectual readers; there are beautiful flowers, with rich, rare fragrance, woven into garlands and scattered here and there over its pages, as none but a true poet could arrange. Such is Emma Rood Tuttle, a magnificent complement to the man whose illuminated brain has flashed thoughts to the world which have shown many a darkened soul, its benighted condition and led it out from under the shadows into the light.

Not the least attractions in "A Golden Sheaf" are the portraits of the authors, and their children, Carl, Clair and Rose. The picture of the dear old homestead must be of interest to all who know the history of Hudson Tuttle—"The Sage of Walnut Farm," as he was known all over the country. If memory serves me correctly, Mr. Tuttle was born and bred in the home where the family now live. When Emma Rood became his bride she was taken to this homenest; in this home the grand woman, whose beautiful poems traveled around the world, sang her "Lullaby songs," and guided the little feet. Years passed; sorrow came to the Tuttle home, the White Angel came and the shadows gathered, but the soul of the wife, the mother still gathered the music from the spirit spheres in this home, represented in the book; flowers still bloomed in her heart and sweet as the "Asphodels," were the blossoms she treasured up, with which to bless the world.

Another interesting department in the book are the rare songs with the music—the words are Mrs. Tuttle's; to the writer everyone is a heart song.

No Spiritualist who wants erudition,—science and philosophy on subjects pertaining to Spiritualism can afford to do without the book—"A Golden Sheaf." Every lover of exalting imageries and tender, beautiful, soulful lessons in verse, should own "A Golden Sheaf."

Mr. and Mrs Tuttle's work has not been confined to the field of Spiritualism. They have been teachers and inspirers to many who knew little of Spiritualism per se, in their work on behalf of "Our Dumb Relatives." "Bands of Mercy," in many instances were organized in connection with their work among the children. Thus the authors of "A Golden Sheaf" are cherished tenderly among hosts of friends who may be comparatively ignorant of their literature on Spiritualism.

When I took my pen to write a few lines relative to "A Golden Sheaf," I had thought to make a few quotations but among so many pearl-thoughts I know not which to select. The entire book is so replete with good things one knows not which to choose.

May Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle live and work unitedly for years to come. May they continue to garner beautiful sheaves from this old earth, and at last may they go home rejoicing, laden with sheaves.

MINISTER FOUND GUILTY OF HERESY.

Rev. F. E. Maddox Convicted in a Church Trial at Hope, Ark.—Conducted His Defense.—Shocked the Court by Paying a Glowing Tribute to Bob Ingersoll.

Rev. F. E. Maddox, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Texarkana, Ark., was convicted of heresy at his trial. The vote was 17 for conviction, 1 for acquittal and 2 to partially sustain the charge.

The effect of the verdict is to suspend Dr. Maddox from the Presbyterian ministry. He served notice that he might appeal to the synod within the ten days allowed by the church regulations, but stated that he had not yet fully decided whether or not he would do so. Dr. Maddox's church will hold a meeting to-morrow to decide whether to retain him as pastor and leave the presbytery or accept the decision and remove him from the pastorate.

Charges Against Dr. Maddox.

The charges against the accused were:

1. That he teaches the Scriptures are only partially inspired and not infallible, but contain errors.

2. That he teaches that the Bible is an evolution and that the Old Testament gives an inaccurate view of the character of God.

3. That he teaches that salvation is not an instantaneous act, but a regulated process; not an inspiration from without, but a gradual evolution within; and that he denounces as a senseless view the idea that salvation has already been wrought out by something already done and may be received by a single act of faith.

4. That he ignores the substitutionary theory of the atonement and teaches that Christ did not by his death make satisfaction to the divine justice, but that he was crucified as a martyr to his convictions and is a redeemer only as a revealer.

The trial lasted until 2 o'clock this morning. Dr. Maddox conducted his own defense and made an address lasting two hours, which bristled with higher criticism and hurled defiance at his critics. He shocked the presbytery by paying a glowing tribute to the late Robert G. Ingersoll as a great and good man who had put the theologians to thinking and who would be better appreciated fifty years hence.

Dr. Maddox has been pastor of the Arkansas Presbyterian Church at Texarkana for three years. It is one of the largest and wealthiest in the city, and an independent church is being talked of.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 15, 1908 NO. 977

Spiritualism Not Spiritism.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Venerable Octogenarian, sends us the following valuble data, scintillating with grand truths in defense of genuine Spiritualism, and which we spread before our numerous readers, it being a reply to Kellar, the great magician, and a late evangelist.

The toleration, liberality and impartiality of your Sunday Journal-Record speak volumes in its praise. It reflects the spirit of this stirring twentieth century, —the spirit of education, progress, righteousness, and the study of all religions.

Your readers will bear me witness that this controversy upon the merits and demerits of Spiritualism was not one of my seeking. Never do I attack another man's religious convictions. The different religious denominations each is doing its own work in its own chosen way. Religion is a personal matter.

In two or three years I shall have reached my ninetieth milestone, if yet vestured in mortality, and at this age one naturally chooses meditation and calm contemplation rather than argumentation, and disputations of any kind; and especially those religious subjects, which relate to life, death and immortality. Nevertheless, if my religious convictions are ruthlessly attacked, I feel morally bound to vigorously defend them. To this end Paul said, "Prove all things,"—and the prophet Isaiah exclaims, "Come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord."

The San Guest, "C. S. L.'s" reply to Dr. Peebles' article of the Journal-Record of June 21.

This, or some similar reply to my strictures upon the magician Kellar's false statements, and to one of the late evangelist's attacks upon Spiritualism was anticipated. It appeared in last Sunday's Journal-Record.

Here follows my reply to this "C. S. L.," who, in all probability, is a preacher. But why does he conceal his name? Would it not have been better for him to have given it to the public? His compliments to my sincerity, wide experiences, and intellectual ability are very little account. The question refers to Spiritualism, religion, and the soul's destiny hereafter,—all grave and mighty questions.

My Definition of Spiritualism.

This writer, "C. S. L.," states that Dr. Peebles' definition of Spiritualism is very different from "the lectures he had heard upon Spiritualist platforms." Quite likely,—and what of it? Different preachers preach different doctrines from their pulpits,—so different that they will not exchange pulpit services one with another. What is genuine Gospel in one Christian pulpit, is heresy in another. No evangelical preacher, however talented, would be allowed to preach in a Catholic pulpit, nor a Baptist in an Episcopalian pulpit, and so all along the religious gamut of the creeds. By the way, nineteen Episcopalian rectors have recently, says the Literary Digest, "gone over into the Roman Catholic church." What is to be the end of this religious restlessness?

This gentleman, "C. S. L.," never heard a genuine Spiritualist lecturer, or pastor, thrust "poisoned arrows at Christianity or the churches." These, if any, that did thus, were traveling materialistic spiritists, rather than real, rational, religious Spiritualists. These latter have a profound reverence for the inspired teachings of all the world's Bibles, among the oldest of which are the Vedas of the Hindus, the Zend-Avesta of the Parsees, the Tripitaka of the Buddhists, whose Bible is eleven times the size of ours, and teaches the very highest system of ethics, —such as, "He who renounces the world and does all for others, has taken the first two steps in the path to Nirvana."

Bibles and Their Revisions.

God, as the Apostle Peter taught, is "no respecter of persons neither is he a respecter of nations. And so all Oriental nations have their Bibles, their very Sacred Books: Our Bible, King James' version, has been improved, translated, and re-translated, and revised, and re-revised many times since Wyckliffe's time, 1340-1380 A. D. But there is one Bible that requires no revision at clerical hands,—it is God's Bible,—the Bible of Nature,—the great colossal Universe; and every blade of grass, and every garden flower, and every towering mountain and glittering star is a chapter in God's transcendentally magnificent and divinely inspired Bible.

The Rev. "C. S. L.'s" Belief in Jesus Christ Questioned.

This Christian gentleman who so sharply criticised me in last Sunday's Journal-Record, tells the public very graciously that he is a "believer in Jesus Christ." Honestly upon Bible grounds, I doubt this, —and so doubting, I propose to try him,—test him by the New Testament recorded words of the Master himself.

The command to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel," was to make believers,—and "these signs said Jesus, shall follow them that believe..... They shall speak with new tongues, they shall take up serpents, they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover; (Mark 16:17-18.) Now then, do these signs follow "C. S. L.?" Has he the gift of tongues? does he take up serpents? does he lay hands on the sick and heal them? If not,—then upon New Testament grounds, he is an unbeliever, notwithstanding his statement. Again Jesus said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, for I go to my Father." Now then, putting it squarely, does the Rev. "C. S. L." actually do "GREATER WORKS" than Jesus Christ did? No dodging, no wriggling,— do you, Brother "C. S. L.," do "greater works" than did Jesus Christ,—if not, then you belong to the category of unbelievers; and Jesus expressly said, "He that believeth not shall be damned (katakrino, is the Greek word here used, and in the revised version, the word employed is 'condemned'.)" And in Revelation we are told that the "fearful and the unbelieving shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Here in this textual, Biblical grasp, I leave Brother "C. S. L." sorrowfully, yet hopefully, because of God's infinite goodness, and because Jesus, we are told, "preached to the spirits in prison."

Seducing Spirits and Doctrines of Demons.

This religious critic, "C. S. L." calls my (the Doctor's) attention to an alleged description of Spiritualism recorded in I. Tim. 4:1-3. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy, and having their consciences seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry and commanding to abstain from meats," etc. Those are the Apostle Paul's words, and Paul was a Spiritualist because while he prayed he was "in a trance;" because he knew a man "caught up to the third heaven," that is the third sphere of spiritual existence, and because while writing to the Corinthians he describes among the spiritual phenomena, signs and gifts, "the discerning of spirits" (clairvoyance). But, to the above quoted passage, the last part of which,—"forbidding to marry," was used in the last century by Protestants to club Catholics, because their priests do not marry. Considering the number of divorces in Michigan, Paul's advice may have a wider meaning to-day, for according to statistics there are 10,518 divorce cases pending, and there has been an increase of 500 per cent in the last nine years,—a very sad condition of connubial affairs. Where is the remedy?

But more particularly to the above Scriptural passage, which my critic refers to Spiritualism. This I squarely deny and contend that if Paul's prophetic vision extended down to our time, he must have had a direct reference to our present day sectarian theology, saying something like this,—"Now the spirit of inspiration speaketh expressly that in these latter times, the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, many theologians shall depart from the faith,—faith in the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man, the ministry of angels, and the 'restitution of all things.' (Acts 3:211.) giving heed to such seducing spirits as gain, graft, selfishness, monopoly, costly church edifices, bigotry, superstition and creeds that bind and crush the noblest aspirations of the human soul. These are surely "seducing spirits." And Paul further says "doctrines of devils (demons), that is, such doctrines as a "war in heaven," a serpent talking to Eve in the Garden, the "total depravity of man," and "future endless hell torments." Paul might well call these outgrown doctrines, "doctrines of devils." Such is my exegesis of the above passage.

My fraternal critic, "C. S. L.," calls my special attention to several verses in the ninth chapter of St. Mark's Gospel, reading, "If thine hand offend thee, cut it off. It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that shall not be quenched. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out. It is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." To the casual Biblical reader these are very threatening passages, and accordingly Mr. Rainsford Ferris, of Port Chester, N. Y., on Jan. 28 last, not properly understanding the above passage, went down into his cellar and nearly severed his right hand from the wrist by laying it on a block and striking it with a hatchet. Later he was taken to a hospital.

But what does the word hell mean?

This hell, hell-fire, Gehenna, or Valley of Hinnom, is still close to Jerusalem on the the south, and is now a finely cultivated field. I repeat, this hell, this Gehenna, this Valley of Hinnom, is now covered with lovely vineyards.

When visiting Jerusalem a number of years ago, myself and our party went over into this Biblical hell, this Valley of Hinnom, and saw there growing delicious grapes.

Honestly, I plucked and ate most luscious grapes in hell. The very hell described in the ninth chapter of St. Mark's Gospel. The worms there long ago died, the unquenchable fires were long ago quenched, and the land in this Hinnom valley has been well cultivated, and beautiful vineyards and semi-tropical fruit-trees are there growing.

Heaven and hell are more conditions than locations, and heaven is to be attained only through a good, heavenly, and Christ-like life. Paul said, "We are saved by his (Christ's) life."

Is Spiritualism Satanic?

My reviewer, "C. S. L.," says, "I consider Spiritualism positively Satanic in origin." On the contrary, returning the compliment, I consider Spiritualism absolutely divine in origin,—God himself being Spirit, pure, immanent and omnipotent. The religious gamut runs thus, Spirit, spirituality, spiritual-mindedness, spiritual truth, Spiritualism.

As to Satan, I know little or nothing, never having either seen or been introduced to His Majesty. True, I have read in Revelations of Satan, as described by the poet, Milton; and I have read in Revelations of Satan's being bound in chains, for a "thousand years."

In I Chron. 21:1, it is said that "Satan stood up and provoked David to number Israel," which was probably good advice.

In Job 1:6, we are informed that when "the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, Satan came also among them." Such an aspiration for good society on the part of Satan was certainly commendable, and his industry I am sure, was never questioned. And Jesus, in one of his strenuous moods, said unto Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan," but surely Peter never was engaged in a "war in heaven," nor was he bound for "a thousand years." I find nothing in Satan, his good or his ill, that relates to Spiritualism, but discover many characteristics in him, in his low estate, that very forcibly apply to institutional Christianity, which is really a paganized Christianity, with creeds as tags attached thereto. Jesus Christ neither wrote nor inspired any creed, but said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another."

The terrible wars—wars most savage, oppressions the most desperate, tyrannies the most ruthless, massacres the most horrible, tortures the most terrible, and all this, in the name of Christianity, savor of the "Satanic."

All through the 17th to near the middle of the 18th century, witch-hunting and witch-burning were richly enjoyed by religious professors. On Feb. 16, 1558, the sentence of condemnation and death was passed upon all the heretics of The Netherlands. Some of these were noted scholars and scientists. And "three millions of people," think of it—men, women and children, were condemned to the scaffold in three lines (see Motley's Republic, Vol. 2, page 310.) Protestants and Catholics alike were equally guilty of imprisoning, hanging, burning and beheading heretics in the name of the Christian religion. Is it strange then, that there are agnostics, free-thinking materialists, and a disinclination on the part of so many to connect themselves with the churches? Understand me, kind reader, I am not saying one word against the genuine inspirations of the Scriptures, nor against the living Christ, nor against the true Christianity of the Christ,—in these I believe,— but I am talking of this sectarian spurious churchianity that builds walls of division, establishes narrow creeds and persecutes royal-souled men for being unbelievers and so-called heretics

The Buddhists called "heathen" and "heretics" constitute the largest religious body in the world, and they have never been known to persecute or massacre unbelievers as did the Christian Spaniards in conquering Mexico. I see by the Literary Digest that already a Buddhist priest, with several attending monks, has reached London to do missionary work among the Christians of England. Quite possibly they may come to America.

What Does Spiritualism Stand For?

This question is very often and very naturally asked by thinkers and philosophically inclined investigators. Speaking only for myself, I have to say, Spiritualism, the direct opposite of atheism, materialism, mercenary spiritism, and persecuting sectarianism, stands for God, the absolute Cause of causes, the Infinite Energy, Life, Purpose, Will, Wisdom and Love of the measureless universe. It stands for the living Christ, summed up in love to God, love to Man and the ministry of angels; it stands for the Logos that overshadowed the mediatorial Man of Galilee; it stands for religion, pure and undefiled, as described by St. James; it stands for the statement that holiness is indispensable to happiness in all worlds; it stands for prayer and heavenly inspirations; it stands for premonitions, impressions, and heavenly ecstasies; it stands for messages of love from the higher life through visions, trances and other spiritual phenomena; it stands for arbitrations and peace in the place of wars; it stands for equal rights and for equal opportunities for all in every station of life; it stands for the protection of honest toilers and the overthrow of child-labor in factories; it stands for the protection of harmless animals and the beautiful birds of plumage; it stands for socialism in the sense of the Golden Rule of Christ; and further, for all the reforms that result, or necessarily must result in the brotherhood of all races, and those holy sympathies that connect the world visible, with the world invisible and immortal.

It destroys the fear of death, encourages the desponding, comforts the sick and gently, tenderly brushes away the mourner's tears, while pointing them to the loved in heaven.

If my unknown friend, "C. S. L.," has any better religion than this, I shall be pleased to know it, for in these waning sunset days, I seek only for the true, the good and the spiritual.

FUTURE FATE OF SUICIDES.

There is Wide Variance of Views.

Bravo, brother Spiritualist! Mr Pope's article in The Progressive Thinker of Feb. 1, in defense of helpless, despairing human beings, expresses in a masterly way the very impressions that have haunted me ever since I read the dismal word-picture of which he speaks, about the future fate of suicides. I cannot refrain from endorsing and commending the fearless radical words of Brother Pope, denouncing said morbid fancies, that certainly recall an orthodox hell. How long will Spiritualists drag after them the shell from which they hatched? Let us carry along all truth, all vital substance, but chaff is only a hindrance, and we are fools to preserve it. If we consider how deeply the love of life is embedded in human nature; how the majority preserves it even under stress of most horrible sufferings, we can about fathom the depth of misery that calls for destruction of this most precious gift; a gift, by the way, that each one owns exclusively and which nobody else has a right to claim, or dispute the owner's proprietorship. In consequence, none can have a right either to arraign the unfortunate man or woman, who, in a moment of insanity, throws overboard a treasure that seems to them only a worthless ballast.

Which state or law can dictate to a man how he should dispose of his property? Can a millionaire be commanded to stick to his millions, if he wants to get rid of them?

True, there are sacred duties that bind us to our fellow-beings as long as life is worth anything; but there are moments and situations that pass the limits of responsibility. No suicide can have the full command of his reason, at least not at the fatal moment. And so we punish the insane, the most unhappy of mankind.

We fling the petty stone of prejudice after those most deplorable ones who are dragged out of existence by the millstone of adversity, fancied or real, under whose weight they must succumb! And how does the state come to the right to pursue them as criminals? Classify them even as below the murderer! Here is a case of judicial insanity.

Would it not be a blessing for a host of innocent victims, if each would-be murderer could feel the irresistible impulse to take his own worthless life, rather than that of another? But here we see the real coward, the greatest of all: There are few murderers that do not tremble for their own lives, but they have plenty of courage to sacrifice the lives of others. Yet, a senseless world lifts the murderer above the suicide, and some hysterical women have even been known to pet some tiger in human shape and treat him as a hero.

It would seem ridiculous, were it not too sad and absurd, to see the state deny to a man the disposition over his own life, while sending thousands of young, life-enjoying men to the battlefield, to spill their blood without much ado if "honor" or "patriotism" requires the sacrifice. Can there be a doubt that our prejudice against suicide belongs to the same barbaric times that have bequeathed to our "enlightened age" the horrors of war and the crime of capital punishment?

O angels of progress! Angels of mercy and justice! When will your host be strong enough to chase away from benighted humanity those traces of barbarism? O, how heavy must be the load of time-honored views and customs!! And how great must be the mental and spiritual egotism of those whose eyes are opened and who yet refrain from putting their shoulders to the wheel of progress!

I wish I could exempt average Spiritualists from such accusation; but to judge by what I read again and again, from pens more powerfully inspired than mine, I come to the conclusion that many dear brothers and sisters quietly enjoy the truth of Spiritualism without giving a thought to the millions for whom it is destined as well. Fortunately, there are others. There are working bees besides the drones. Glory to them! Glory and final triumph to our cause, the cause of progressive humanity.

THE SECOND DEATH.

The Death of the Astral Body, or Connecting Link Between the Subconscious and the Personal Self.

As I study the spiritual in the light of modern developments, one by one the meaning of Bible statements and Bible symbols are made cdear to me. We need not worry over the influence of the old book if people do cling to it, for it is those hidden meanings that holds them. True, they have no intelligent idea of the why, but when all that is of value has been gathered from amid its rubbish, then the book itself will be like a last year's nest, and the creeds founded upon it will be but the broken shells from which the life has escaped.

The last discovery I have made is what the "second death" is, but I could not have done so but for the scientific elucidation of the facts and phenomena of modern Spiritualism, and I made it in replying to a dear friend who wrote me as follows:

"May be there is some way of so linking this mortal to the spiritual as to perpetuate a recollection of this personality. I expect nothing more than to exist as a reminiscence, that the spiritual life is not connected in any other way than to retain a record. Everything that I know of seems to me to be immortal except personality. If my personality depends upon structure-form, at the destruction of that form how can I retain a personality except as a reminiscence? Nature never repeats herself; disintegration is the end of personalities and individualities. I would like to think otherwise, but to do so, would have to discard reason, and without it I should be at sea, without compass or rudder."

I will give the substance of my reply to show where the discovery comes in, thinking that some of the readers of The Progressive Thinker will appreciate.

"Yes, it is well to use reason, but if in solving a problem a factor is left out, what then? We are three-fold beings, the external body, the inmost or I AM, and that which connects the two. This connecting link is called by different names, the spirit body, or body of the spirit, the soul, the astral, and without which there could be no communication between the sub-conscious and the personal self. Indeed, there could be no personal self. But for this intermediate form, then what the brother says would be true. This form retains the personality, distinctly, harmonious; more or less imperfectly if weak, but so long as the astral form exists the personality is more than a reminiscence."

I saw at a glance that if the I AM, the real self had not sufficient hold upon the astral to ensure its perpetuity, it must eventually perish; Then there flashed into my mind the words: "Blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first resurrection; on such the 'second death' hath no power." And with the above text came the thought: Why, that is the second death; the first being the death of the body of flesh, and then of the soul, or astral. The destruction of body and soul is spoken of in that old book, but never a hint of the death of the real self, the spirit. "God is spirit," not A spirit. We are spirit, as to our individuality.

This spark of the Divine must of necessity continue to live, but when the second death occurs it has no further channel of expression as connected with this planet, has only a reminiscence of what has been. How do I know there is a second form through which the inmost can find expression?

I know, not only from testimony, of thousands of others, but from my own experience. I have seen what I supposed was the man of the house come in at the front door and walk through the hall to the kitchen, whence he usually went first, this because of something he wanted to leave there. When I neither saw nor heard anything more of him, I went to see what it meant and found he was not about the house. About two hours later he came and then I learned that when I saw his astral form he was some five or six miles away, but something occurred, I forget what, that sent his thought strongly to his home. And more than this, I have been entirely conscious of both my fleshly and my astral body at the same time.

The astral body is called by different names, as I have before said, but that it is the connecting link between the real self and the outer covering is certainly true if there is truth in anything, if all is not hallucination. If, then, all that we experience must pass through this connecting medium, why should it not retain the personality when the body of flesh falls.? But I do not wish to prolong this article. Its real value to me lies in the fact that in my effort to show my friend his mistake, I discovered what the second death is, to-wit: The death of the astral body, a second death indeed!

There will be questions as to how this astral or soul becomes weakened so as to die, or be destroyed in hell, as the bible has it, or what course to take to make it strong. A reply would involve a discussion that the great public taboos, but I will do my best to reply to private letters if enclosing one dollar; otherwise, I cannot give time and strength, for I must have bread until the first death claims me.

I see by a late Progressive Thinker that professor T. G. Soares says: "There is great danger in making an appeal to the religious emotions of a child of from six to nine years of age." He does not say wherein the danger lies, but think I can show in what it consists. In the July Arena, for 1895, a Kentucky legislature, while discussing the "age of consent" law, says:

"It is a fact, and one of easy demonstration, that there is a close relation between religious emotion and sexual desire—the natural desire and the acquired emotion taking the places of one another, on occasions unconsciously and without volitional effort on the part of those in whom the transformation takes place."

Does not the danger lie in the early and also abnormal development of the creative life, when the religious conditions of children are awakened ? If this be true, how great the injury emotional religious ignorance is doing to the race. How many of the inmates of our brothels can date the first quickening of desire to the religious revival, where the emotions rule reason out of court. In The Arena, the date of which I have given here, there is much more on the same line of thought with what is here quoted, the principal points of which may be founded in "My Century Plant," pages 54-5-6, with comments at the time.

But, changing the subject, I forgot to state in the article under the heading "Ye Golden Time," that those who worked for 50 cents a day took their meals where they did their work, and with the family, which is not the case now. The value of the meals added to the olden-time wage, and taken from the present wage, as prices are now, would make quite a difference in the summing up.

I expect to leave Battle Creek soon for Clinton, Iowa, camp, but letters directed to 335 N. 50th court, Chicago, Ill., will reach me. Will give notice of further change.

I dreamed yesternight of the old home place,
And dimly remembered that I had died,
Oh, long, long ago, and had come to hide
Like a fightened child from the angel's face,
For I'd been such a bad, had child, all grace.
And glory of God wore lost in high tide
Of floods of my seeming, so I, outside.
White Gates of The City must ever pace.
Such a bad, bad child; and I crept (I dreamed),
Afraid in the dark, to the home that seemed
A friend I had known, of laughter and tears,
And heart big enough to forgive spent years
And welcome me back—welcome me! —tho' he
Who guarded the gates had no room for me. —Ollah Teph.

HISTORY, ANCIENT AND MODERN.

The People Should Read, Reflect and Think.

While Constantine was the first Christian Emperor of Rome, and president of the highest church court in the third and fourth centuries of the Christian Era, Henry the VIII, is the King of England, who has the honor of giving political standing to the reformed church in the days of Luther, and while Luther attacked the sacraments, the king wrote in defence of the same, and for this, Leo X. gave to the king the title of "Defender of the Faith." A little later, when the king grew tired of the virtuous Katherine, and failed to wrest from the Pope his consent to a divorce, the resourceful Henry turned towards the Reformers, Thomas Cromwell and Thomas Cranmer, and made them his chief advisers. Their clever tactics gave the universities the controling power. This greatly pleased the king, who had fallen in love with his wife's prettiest maid of honor.

Acting on the hint from the authorities of the Reformed Church, the case was decided in favor of the king by the universities of Europe. Cromwell, having succeeded thus far, gave the king another tip, that is to say, that he, the King, should be head of the Church, instead of the Pope. This was accomplished by an act of Parliament. The Pope now ceased to collect the tithe of the first fruits. Then the cunning King, having matters arranged his own way, married the beautiful Anne Boleyn. Those who failed to acknowledge the brutal Henry as a suitable head for the now rising church, were beheaded or stripped of their authority. The great high priest, Henry VIII., soon found a new and pretty face in the person of Jane Seymour, and the once coveted Anne Boleyn's head was placed on the block—not before leaving a child, who, though inheriting some of her father's faults, was a lover of freedom (Elizabeth). The next day after the brutal murder of Anne Boleyn, the King married Jane Seymour, and less than five months after the marriage, the new and third wife of the King and church president, gave birth to a son. The fortunate Jane died two days after the child's birth.

Henry's fourth wife, Anne of Cleves, was the daughter of a German prince. History states that Thomas Cromwell arranged the match, being desirous to "strengthen the protestant cause in England."

Think! This German princess was not handsome enough to suit Henry, therefore he soon got a divorce and married Catherine Howard, niece to the Duke of Norfolk.

Through these years of beastly conduct, on the part of Henry VIII., it is said he retained his doctrines of the church, especially transubstantiation (the real presence), and those who would not believe with him, were put to death.

Having used the reformers for his most illegitimate and selfish purposes, the king, now happy in his newly formed relations with Catherine, who was a good Catholic, acted in harmony with her wishes. Cromwell, who had been used to doing the King's dirty work, in return for political prestige, is no longer needed, and is brought to the block, July 28, 1540.

Catherine Howard and her Roman Catholic followers were happy. The King imagined himself happy, too, but through Cranmer and other scandal mongers, Catherine Howard's past was made known to the King. The foolish woman's confession did not save her from the wrath of the King, and she was beheaded on Tower Hill.

Henry's sixth wife was a widow and survived him.

History states: "Few English monarchs were more absolute or more sensual.

Not satisfied with the "six articles" as the creed prescribed for England, he published two books, each giving different creeds to the nation. Do the people know the origin of creeds?

And the most significant statement of all is recorded in the following words as true as they are sad.

"The impress of Henry VIII. is still seen in church and state."

The priests and politicians are the devils of the race;
Their constant schemes for power is humanity's disgrace.
They are at it late and early, they are working every tool.
The man who's hoodwinked by them, should know that he's a fool.

The burdens men are bearing through the cunning and the craft,
By the sophistry they're using, they must think that men are daft.
They fatten on men's folly, they live on sheep and geese,
They would sell us like a Judas, at so many pounds apiece.

It has come to them quite natural, through Constantine of old,
He, the father of the family, in priestly power bold.
The work of church and state is rooted in this life,
And the unholy wedlock has produced a family strife.
We see a family likeness, through all the creeds to-day,
Their selfish bloody dogmas, a cruel world doth sway.

He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves, and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.—Burke.

Be kind to everybody, but especially to the aged, for we are all traveling that way very rapidly.

Demonstrated Immortality by Infallible Appliances.

By the Most Infallible Assurances.—Those Who Have Lived Great Lives Here Have Come Back to Assure Us of the Eternal Existence of the Soul.

It is agreed among all who believe in a future life, I think, that the soul is an invisible entity. If this indwelling spirtual guide, with its elemental energies, its emotional sensories, and intellectual faculties, which alone radiates the countenance with laughter and love, and makes the flesh glow with roseate charms, can escape unseen from the body, retaining its integral parts, and continue to exist as a spiritual entity, why could it not have existed before that body as well as now without it?

It can not be believed that an eternal king had its first and only existence in this span of material life, for that alone which has had no commencement can be eternal. Eternity is without beginning as well as without ending.

As God could not have created himself, because he would have had to exist before he existed to do so, and as something could not be made out of nothing, it is self-evident that there was no beginning! The immanence of God and Nature comprehensible and visible in the Universe of Unverses, spread and sustained by immutable laws and of inspiring grandeur before us, attest this fact. They exist. They could not have sprung from nothing; nor can anything; nor can anything be produced, except alone from some pre-existing seed, germ or condition, and then each is "after its kind." This demonstrates that the same elemental life principles, with the same inherent properties or faculties, are perpetuated, as evidenced by the complete identity of each, whether in flower and fragrance or in form and faculty.

But let us make this very plain. For a moment consider the field. The plowman has turned the sod, has harrowed the soil to mellowness, and is ready for planting. The seeds are dropped at the crossing furrows, and there are hills in which are planted the seeds of corn and beans and pumpkins. Here are the same environments of soil, of sunshine, of rain, enclosure and culture, and their fruitage is each "after its kind."

But why plant these grains? Because if we sow no wheat we will have no wheat to harvest. It is known that the pre-existing wheat is the only source for its embodiment into new stalks and grains. Just so with human and animal life; neither springs from nothing, nor from any other source, but each after its kind.

That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is everyone that is born of the spirit.—St. John, 3,6-8.

Although you cannot see the spirit there is evidence of its existence in every thought and feeling and movement of all within and around you.

Christ gave his disciples to understand clearly that no matter what became of the body no man could take his LIFE from him, for life could neither be created nor become extinct; that he had passed from death unto life, and so had we; that he would do so again, and that we must be born again; and to show that the spirit is a separate entity from the flesh, and that we can exist disembodied, he re-appeared in a temporarily visible form, sufficient to distinctly identify himself, and prove by this process his personal immortality.

He conveyed clearly to their minds that the greatness of a man's character does not all spring from the one span of life that he lives here, but partly comes with him into this life, in the acquired character of the ever-living soul. He talked to them of his own pre-existence, that before Abraham was, as they had heard of him, he existed; even before all the beginnings that could be enumerated, he "was set up from everlasting, and his delights were with the sons of men," and that this great man, John the Baptist, "if ye will receive it," is Elias, the grand old prophet, who had lived a former span of life on this earth.—Matt. xi, 14; xvii, 12, 13.

He made it distinctly comprehensible to them that "He that heareth my words Hath Everlasting Life"—is from Everlasting to Everlasting."

For He is not a God of the dead, but of the living, for ALL LIVE unto him (Luke 20, 38), whether on this earth or elsewhere or in the body or out of it.

The soul, if immortal, existed before our birth.—Hume.

Souls are continually born over and over again from another life into this life.—Plato.

The soul itself is not born, it does not die, it was not produced from any one, nor was anyone produced from it.—Emerson.

The soul is without birth.—The Bhagavad Gita.

The "flesh which is born of the flesh," is alone the physiological result and representative of those who stand in the relationship to the child as its father and its mother, while the soul, which is without birth, "having neither beginning of days nor end of life," (Heb. 7.) is an ever-existent, self-intelligent entity.

The expression, "I was set up from Everlasting, and my delights were with the sons of men,.. (Prov. 8.) is, perhaps, as definite and comprehensible as human words can convey to us the runic record of our eternal past existence. It shows that men were with God, from all Eternity, just as much so as we are now under his observation or ever will be. The beginning simply means the same as the beginning of one's life here, which implies parentage—that back of us were other beginnings, the beginning of our parents, and of their parents." And the beginning of worlds, empires, epochs in history, are, like the changing seasons, preceded by an Endless Chain of Beginnings.

"There is no new thing under the sun. That which has been now is, and that which is to be hath already been. All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers came thither they return again."—Bible.

As rivers run from source to sea,
And sea to source eternally,
No final end, no great first cause,
Can Reason find within its laws;
This one Great Truth, seen as it is,
Will solve a million mysteries.

The absolute proof of pre-existence and the correctness of this doctrine, is established by the fact that it solves the World's Greatest Problem, which otherwise cannot be solved; and it makes consistent and simple the manifold problems of life, which otherwise must ever remain as matters of chaos and doubt.

Read the masterly thoughts of the world's greatest scientist, Prof. Agassiz:

"It is impossible to go back to the origin of life, because it is of Eternity. I believe candidly there was No Beginning. I know there are more worlds than the sands of the seashore, peopled with beings, who live on forever, and, as the winged seed is borne in the air to fructify in distant soil, so spiritual beings are carried by magnetic and electric forces to people distant worlds."—Prof. Agassiz.

In the "Blue Grass Blade," of Lexington, Ky., Sunday, March 4, 1906, its editor asks:

"Does death end all? Let it be observed that this life is not an entity. Life is not a thing. It is simply a result. For every germ that succeeds in struggling into life there are a thousand that are lost."

There is no "struggling" without life, therefore struggling is the "result" of life. Souls are entities from all eternity, the living and real things without which there is no cognizance of other things. If life is nothing how can death affect it, and why should germs be "lost" because they failed "in struggling into life" if they could struggle just as well without life? Instead of being nothing life is the elemental energy of causation in all animated nature,—a most potential something. Death does not end all.

The soul retains its general elementary character, and during its stay in the spiritual world, the powers of the mind are quickened, the memory strengthened, and the joys are the richer or the regrets are the more rankling, according as the deeds of its earth-life shall merit. After living a similar period in the spiritual world it is reborn into physical form, the elemental traits of character being retained to such an extent as to reassert themselves, often contrary to expectations of those who believe in heredity of parental characteristics, and many ideas and desires spring up within them from indistinct memories.

As Prof. Agassiz says: "People who live on forever," disembodied for a time and as "spiritual beings," are still subject to the irresistible laws of God and nature, which the mightiest exertion of intellectual energies cannot impede or change. They can no more prevent a transition from that sphere than from this, and their fitness for this inevitable change is as agreeable to reason as their fitness to escape unseen from the physical body. It is claimed that spiritual beings can pass unhindered through closed doors, and if their texture is so transcendently fine as that, surely when they shall have been purposely prepared for the process of reincarnation, as much so as that seeds are prepared and intended for reproduction, we should not wonder that, as Prof. Agassiz says:

"Like the winged seed is borne upon the air to fructify in distant soil, so these spiritual beings are carried by magnetic and electric force to people distant worlds."

LONELY SOULS.

The Writer Thinks "Your own Will Come to You."

What a wonderful theme is the institution of marriage. It is a subject that has engaged the attention of all humanity since time began.

What a sacred place is the fireside of a harmonious home. It is the foundation of all the greatest achievments that have ever been wrought.

The union of two congenial souls is but the forming of the perfect sphere. But there seems to be many "mis-fits" so many inharmonious unions.

The courts of justice all over the land are being appealed to by discouraged humanity longing to be free. There are many hungry hearts meditating "in the silence," yearning for the soul-hemisphere that the orb may become complete. It is to each one of you who are traveling this rough earthly pathway craving that divine soul union which is your heritage, that we wish to speak a word of encourage and hope.

Those of you who suffer thus, go "into the silence" of your abode after the setting of the sun and the experiences of the day have been temporarily laid aside. Enter into the spirit of truth within your own soul. Ask for light, truth and guidance and know that the present trial is but transitory. If you ask believing, you will receive spiritual strength which will aid you through all difficulties of whatever nature they may be.

All our trials are for our ultimate good. Good friend, be patient; in time the spirit of love and light will lead you to your ideal. Be hopeful, and know that one day your desire, so pure, so high, will yet be realized in the full fruition of a glorified life.

Your pathway of interior loneliness is but temporary. Remember that sometime, and perhaps sooner than you think, "Your own will come to you." It cannot fail.

A POTENT OCCULT INFLUENCE.

Makes the Wicked Good by a Touch of the Fingers.—Strange Old Man of Paris Who is Accomplishing Modern Day Miracles of Character Changing.—Hard Drinkers and Race Players Made to Forget Their Besetting Sins.—Hypnotism the Secret of Power of This Good Samaritan of the Slums.

A strange and good old man is doing extraordinary things among the common folk of east-end Paris, France. If you say a word against him in the Quartier St. Antoine you will be roughly handled.

By suggestion in the waking state—with no hypnotic sleep—he cures drinkers and race players, eradicates vices, destroys fears, consoles the melancholy and builds up business characters in vacillating weaklings.

His name is of no consequence. They just call him "the old man." If money is offered him he takes it, or he cures for nothing, but considerable sums must flow in from that enormous clientele, and his offices have become vast and well furnished.

In all this there is nothing scientifically new except the picturesque details. In all ages there have been men endowed with a power of suggestion over their fellow so great as to make the world cry "Miracle!" Napoleon, Mahomet, Buddha had this personal power over their followers, but the less ambitious who in all times have played on men as on instruments of music, transforming characters and curing diseases to the semi-supernatural point, are numberless.

Evidently it is with the nervously deranged that this force of suggestion in the waking state works easiest, but at critical periods, when ordinary folk have their nerves worked up, nearly all are more or less suggestionable. Thus it was recognized that of the patients of Charcot (whose science and merit were incontestable) three-fourths were cured almost before having treatment.

The Abbe Kneipp enjoyed the same qualities. His system made miraculous cures while he lived, and now that he is dead his system cures no longer! Obviously it was the personal influence of the Abbe Kneipp.

One other example: In the east of France, around Belfort, there lives an old Anabaptist, whose purity of living and sanctity of character certainly give him a certain prestige; but he cures physical diseases wholesale, and, as with the old man of the Quartier St. Antoine, you will be badly received by the whole French-Alsatian population if you dare to suggest he is not better than the doctors.

Scientifically it is known that suggestion in the waking state has given far greater results than suggestion in the state of sleep—on which subject you can post yourself in the up-to-date works of Pierre Janet, Barrillon, Maurice de Fleury; and the director of all the fashionable Paris maisons de sante—establishments for the melancholy, nervous, sleepless and those addicted to bad habits—consider it their surest means.

There is already a popular tradition of how the old man of the Quartier St. Antoine began. The scientific men of Paris recognize it as the classic case of the anaemic young girl. The silent, mysterious, erect and flashing old man stopped at his janitor's to get his mail. The old lady was weeping. "What's the matter?" "It is my daughter, mousieur, sitting there, pale, weeping. She is a good girl, but can do nothing for us. She was in a shirt factory and couldn't stay. She was in a shop, and left. Now she is afraid even to run errands for me!"

"What ails her?"

"Nobody knows. She comes back from the doctor ailing as ever. She is sad. She takes no pleasure. Yet a good girl."

Moved by the mother's pain, the lonely, striking, flashing, brilliant, but solitary old man, and who by reason of her feeble and high-strung state is very impressionable is quite ready for his forceful but yet unknown influence.

A few words from him, breathing absolute sincerity, positive confidence, inspired her on the spot that he would cure her, that very night she would sleep better—and off she goes, having received a mighty whip-stroke to her whole moral and physical organism, previously so discouraged.

All the rest is detail and routine, though short. The old man saw her two minutes daily. So the scientific specialists of maisons de sante seek to increase, day by day, their ascendency, make the swift print deftly and repeatedly under the morbid crease.

It seems that the girl's particular phobie self-sufficient old man straightened himself, squared his shoulders, and, taking a worthy and doctrinal air, stood in front of the young girl, took her head between his palms and said, in an affirmative tone:

"I will cure her."

The girl who has heard talk of that silent, or fear was that she might faint. To-day she is one of the most laughing and vigorous young ladies of the rollicking St. Antoine quarter.

But the story spread and the afflicted came—all sorts. Mothers came with their idle, loafing, white-faced sons, their drooping, fanciful, ill-tempered daughters. The old man fixed them up in a jiffy. Girls and women came to him for love-philters. They went away so blooming, confident and supple that the effect was almost the same as of the nonexistent magic potion.

The old man's fame spread.

Wives brought their drinking husbands, their Don Juan sons. Fathers pleaded with him to try their race playing boys, in danger of daily temptation to embezzlement, salary wasters, sports too sporty, the incompetent, the unsuccessful. In two-minute interviews the old man built up strong business characters. Vices are eradicted. Healthy ambitions are born in the negligent. And now half of the old man's patients are not brought, but come to him of their own accord.

Naturally the whole adventure has made a profound stir in the east end of Paris—that unknown Paris no one sees, unknown to tourists, narrow, secretive, uncosmopolitan, but worthy and admirable—though slightly excitable—from twenty points of view.

Thrice I have been to interview the old man. Three times I have failed. He has no time to talk to me or any other newspaper man, of Paris or elsewhere. In one of my visits, however, I talked with two of his patients. One was a weedy, somber, utterly cynical and disabused sport, a fiend of the mutual betting maintained by the Paris government and the Jocky Club, that drains the population—one of the great scandals of the hour.

This man has inherited money. Often he has made big winnings, notwithstanding, if only by force of the 11 per cent rake-off (broker's commission on each bet) held back by government and millionaire club. (Think of it! At Monte Carlo they sell you insurance against the zero for 1 per cent! A plunging Hungarian magnate recently paid $6,000 a day insurance on his play, to which he attributes his final ruin!)

Well, he sure that this sport intellectually knew it all. What could the old man do for him? He did not need to inform him of the fallacies of the dope-sheet, of the emptiness of calculations, of the deceptions of all racing tips! No, by his mysterious personal force—working on the ready mind, the prepared state—the old man of the Quartier St. Antoine imposed on the race fiend a new direction.

"He's simply saved my life!" the somber, droop sport straightened up and exclaimed with enthusiasm. "I haven't played a flat or jumping race for fifteen days. I don't know what to do with my money," he laughed. "I'll have to take a trip around the world. The old man says it's fine to travel!"

The other case was a smart, strong-featured girl of 17, handsome and gay—a beauty of the Paris people. You would never dream her trouble. She is in the tragedy classes of the Conservatoir. She has the true divine fire. She may be another Rachel. Her professors—among them Sarah Bernhardt—say that she lacks nothing to be a grande artiste—nothing but the confidence to speak in public.

And she couldn't speak in public! In class she would tear off a tirade from Racine with such bright verve, such driving pathos, such sudden clouding, darkening, lightning-flashing tragedy as to delight them beyond any pupil of late years. Before a small unknown public she is awkward, tongue-tied, wretched victim of stage terror.

She is? No, she was. Girl of the people, slangy, indecorous, rollicking in usual life, she has now a full sense of her power upon the stage, saucy, insouciant, returning to the old man's offices for her fun—with her cousin, a black-moraled gamin, loud and indecorous, playing jokes upon the patients, feigning hypnotic sleep, loud, vital, bubbling, roystering in the pride of youth. The old man stands it all. He is their special victim. Yet let one new patient ill advisedly cast doubts upon the old man's miraculous power and up there flashes a true fury, a queen of to-morrow drama, an inspired pythoness, a Medusa—to strike the offender deaf, dumb and blind with torrents of Parisian vituperation. She is "pure," as the Parisians say. All there! All there!

The one black point upon this extraordinary Parisian sensation is the obvious, obtruding fact that the old man no longer suffices to do half the work that presents itself to him. He has hundreds of cases a day, and even at two minutes a "consultation," there is not enough time—and they say he is beginning to get physically weary himself, splendid, ruddy, flashing, vigorous old type as he is.

Of course he has attempted to train helpers. They all do it finally. One detail approaches almost to charlatanism—he has found another fine old fellow who resembles him considerably, who has really developed something of the same power of suggestion.

Two Salpetriere professors—young, ambitious men, packed full of precious theoretical science—are there, taking lessons from the original old man. The place is beset with newspaper men, and even the smart landaus and automobiles of tout Paris swelldom litter up the sordid avenue, confuse everything and threaten the morals of the whole undertaking.

In the slang of ultra-modern science—to close with a word—all this is the "pli" or "crease" of impressions fixing into habits. But here is the point—more and more it is beginning to be seen that the crease is not ineradicable. I do not deny that we get very deep here, and that those who put all on heredity may find it new. It is now—as to theory, but it is as old as the eternal hills in practice. At some moment, around the age of 13 to 14, every boy receives impressions that regularly last him his whole life and make his character.

But one of these mysteriously endowed healers can, with a subject with strong nerves and properly impressed, undo in five minutes the "crease" of years.

Why I limit to the healers? Every day, without their knowing it, this man, or that, this woman or that, in a great city, being accidentally receptive, receives from some mere acquaintance, or a person, even, seen but once, unknown, or an event, a similar undoing of a "crease."

We say folks change. Yes, yes, they change. Some day man will learn how to change them—and humanity will not longer be astonishedly dependent on rare individuals like the forceful old man of the Quartier St. Antoine! STERLING HEILIG.

YOUTH'S PRAYER.

Let me live out my years in heat of blood!
Let me die drunken with the dreamer's wine!
Let me not see this soul-house built of mud
Go toppling to the dust—a vacant shrine!

And grant that when I face the grisly Thing,
My song may trumpet down the gray Perhaps!
Let me be as a tuneswept fiddle-string
That feels the Master Melody—and snaps!

ARE THE DEAD ALIVE?

Every One of the Leading Magazines Throughout the United States is Considering the Question, Thus Reaching a New Class of Readers, and Spreading the Knowledge of Spirit Return.—The Delineator, a Splendid Magazine, is Now Considering the Subject.

The newspapers of the day chronicle a rather impressive revival of interest in a subject which forty years ago was considered one of the most significant of any then before the public—namely, are the dead alive? As attested and vouched for by various mediums and scientific persons who were then working in the matter, they were not dead, but on the contrary were giving very notable evidence of their existence through the medium of the Fox sisters and others who were receiving table rappings, bell ringings, physical levitations and other things which convinced those interested that they were really present and active. Since then Spiritualism, as the believers in this sort of thing choose to call it, has never fallen into utter indifference, but has retained its quota of followers, added to constantly by those who have recently lost a loved one, and fanned into interest by those who either honestly of dishonestly reap a pecuniary reward from it. Mediumship, whether true or false, is usually profitable, and it is around the latter that unmistakable evidences of fraud have gathered.

Recently, however, there has come into the field another element which cannot reasonably be under suspicion. Many famous scientists, hitherto materialistic and decidedly skeptical, have begun to look into the matter for themselves, and have concluded that there is something more than imagination or falsehood to a part of that which is being ardently claimed by those who insist that the dead are alive. These men—twenty-five French and Italian scientists and some eight of ten leading English ones—have changed face about from rank unbelief, to doubt and then credence. Now these men believe that the dead are alive, and they base it on a world of very peculiar and very mystifying evidence.

The Delineator is not a publication which can readily accept the verdict of any individual or group of individuals on a subject so subversive of all hitherto accepted standards, but it is a publication which can interest itself in the truth or falsity of these assertions. The matter of life after death is very close to all of us. If men could know, scientifically know, of the immortality of the soul it would bring peace and comfort to many a doubting heart, grieving over the loss of loved ones who have gone before. Until that can be demonstrated groping for light by such as these can only be satisfied by profound religious faith.

The Delineator is interested in presenting to its readers the evidence developed by these eminent scientists, not alone of the immortality of the soul, but of the possibilities of communication between the living here and the living who are called the dead. The positive establishment of such communication means the absolute scientific demonstration of the immortality of the soul. With this thought in mind, we recently decided to sift for ourselves the evidence of all that had been done to date, and to present not our conclusion but this evidence,—such evidence as even science is willing to sanction.

It is an astonishing array, things so weird as to compel the utmost amazement, and yet science—the best investigating knowledge of the time—lends it that authority which cannot but compel attention. We are going to present this evidence in The Delineator, beginning with the October number, under the general caption "Are the Dead Alive?" and we propose to accompany the same by the statements of twenty-five of the world's greatest investigators in their field, showing exactly what they think. Whatever exception you may take to Spiritualism as a theory, no exception can be taken to the evidence as we shall present it, for, aside from the theory of belief, it constitutes the most amazing piece of writing which we have seen in a long time. Strange occurrences, strange ideas, strange beliefs, follow each other with amazing rapidity till the mind is aghast. You will be interested as a reader, you may even be swept into Spiritualism. We present the evidence.

How Man Learned to Stand Erect.

The reason that human beings stand upright is because the cleverest of the animals discovered that by restricting locomotion to his hind legs, and abandoning his arboreal habits, he freed the front legs and could use them for getting hold of things. The development of the front legs for prehensile purposes led to the acquirement of hand dexterity. He already was endowed with sustained binocular vision, and had outgrown the nocturnal habits of his ancestors. He began to adapt his environment to himself in the fashioning of rude garments and in the manufacture of implements, both warlike and domestic. He trained a convergence of the eyes in order that he might meet this self-imposed condition, and to translate them from purely distance organs to structures that could see equally well near by and far off. Growing intelligence led to the transmission of more and more complicated ideas to other individuals in speech, whether gesticulation, spoken, pictorial or written. It is a fact that those acquired last are first lost, and those things first acquired are last lost. The person depressed by an anesthetic, such as chloroform, loses his faculties in about the following order: First, self-restraint, or any of the finer sides of human nature last acquired; speech next becomes more or less incoherent; balancing becomes difficult; speech is reduced to noise before the individual returns to all fours; vision is next lost, and when gone, hearing soon follows, and then comes complete unconsciousness.

"STEALING OUR THUNDER."

No! Not Stealing It, but Wisely Appropriating It—Reality and Vision.

The secular press is coming to the front and appropriating the grand truths of Spirit Return. The following is an editorial in that great daily, the Boston Herald:

A woman in New Britain, Ct., was recently declared dead by her physician. At the end of an hour she came to life, much to her regret, for, as she said, she had been in a beautiful country which was illuminated by a light unlike that of sun, moon, or any ray due to the ingenuity of man. In this country she saw calm, restful persons. She talked with some and was "intensely delighted" with the conversation.

There are many who have had like strange experiences in trances not due to sickness; who, as Paul, were caught up to the third heaven and heard, either in the body or out of the body, unspeakable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Are the visions of John on the isle of Patmos to be classed with those of the saints in the desert places? Were the supernatural things seen and heard by Swedenborg only a madman's dreams?

The journal of John Wesley contains accounts of strange visions recorded with implicit belief. A girl about 11 years old, who had never had any considerable sickness, was thought to die suddenly. When she came to life in an hour or two she told of sights in heaven and hell; of doomed ones drinking flames from cups of fire, playing with cards of fire, for they were then tormented by the sins in which they once delighted. She saw the Lord on his throne beholding earth and heaven with one look. She saw the pleasant garden full of fruits, no sky, no sun, but clear light everywhere. Another girl, 15 years old, talked with Wesley when she was with her Savior. "In heaven or on earth?" asked Wesley. "I cannot tell; but I was in glory." And in this state she wept over those that were to be condemned for she saw many on the awful brink. Wesley narrates these and other "strange occurrences" in detail, without a word of doubt; yet in this same journal he more than once is bitter in his characterization of Swedenborg, a "brain-sick man," first of all because the seer quenches the unquenchable fire and has a "low and grovelling" idea of heaven. The unprejudiced reader can only wonder how Wesley's zeal could so betray his judgment.

It must be admitted that visions of another world have been seen by persons who were neither hysterical, epileptics, nor insane; who were at the time apparently dead to this world. The late "Warrenton," one of the coolest, keenest observers, a pre-eminently rational man, heard the dead talk and saw celestial visions the year before he died. As he said to the writer: "There is only a hedge between us here and those beyond." Is it possible that the life we call daily and rational is only mirage; that the true life, or the anticipation of it, is only in dreams and visions?

Toward the middle of the sixteenth century Raoul Spifame, Seigneur Des Granges, thought that he was Henry II., to whom he bore a striking resemblance. In his life he was reckoned mad. The King humored him, maintained him at last in one of his pleasure houses and allowed him to publish royal edicts which are still in existence. Raoul believed that his prison was only in dream. As the sun went down, he would say: that his existence was only in dreams. "We slept poorly this night. What troublesome dreams!" Perhaps he was not mad. Perhaps he was the true King.

WIFE EATS CAKE; HAS A DREAM; FINDS HUSBAND IS TWICE MARRIED.

"Bill" Wisdom Unwise When He Takes Pastry From Second Wedding to First Spouse, Who Has True Vision.

"If "Bill" Wisdom, rear admiral of a brick barge harbored in Brooklyn waters had lived up to his name he would not have made the mistake of taking home to 544 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. a piece of his second wife's wedding cake for his wife to dream on.

Mrs. Wisdom No. 1 dreamed with remarkable accuracy and as a result Bill was held to-day by Magistrate Dooley in the Adams street court on a charge of vagrancy.

This may be changed to bigamy, because Mrs. Wisdom No. 1 claims to have proof that she has the exclusive right to use that name and that Mrs. Wisdom No. 2 can only be regarded as an outsider in the Wisdom matrimonial race.

On the other hand the second Mrs. Wisdom alleges that Bill told her that he was an orphan when he loaded his name on her on June 3 last.

Mrs. Wisdom No. 1 says that June 5 she learned that Bill had helped himself to another wife. The night before he had brought her home a generous portion of cake. She dreamed she saw Bill waiting at the church and then she saw another women join him and enter the edifice.

That settled it. Next night when Bill had kissed her and the children good evening and informed her that he heard the call of the brick barge, she put on her hood and shawl and followed him. The trail led, she says, to the home of the girl he had married two days before. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Monahan.

She is a member of St. Agnes' church and is an estimable young woman. The two women claimed Bill and nearly pulled him apart in their efforts to have him recognize each of them as his lawful spouse.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?
The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and, construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

The Pathway of Eternal Progress

Mr. W. T. Stanford's Seances With the Medium, Charles Bailey.

There was never a time in the history of Spiritualism when it was more important to insist on the necessity for scientific investigation of psychic phenomena than the present. People all over the world are rapidly becoming interested in psychic facts. It is safe to say that the production of an "apport" like the one photographed in the supplement of this issue will cause a fresh outbreak of interest and also derision on the part of those who are ignorant of "The Finer Forces of Nature" so eloquently expounded by Mrs. Besant at her opening lecture in Melbourne. There is in truth a vast terra incognita outside the world that cannot be cognised by the five senses. From the earliest issue of these supplements to the present time, it has been quite customary for those ignorant of these "finer forces" to sneer at all connected with the production of "apports," and for myself to be asked if any sane person can possibly believe these things can happen. I am warned by those anxious for my good that people will not be gulled by any statements concerning them, and that I am imperiling my name as a sensible woman by persevering in my course. And all the while my persistence is the result of actual knowledge of their genuineness, and as the month passed by, science in the most remarkable way has given us a solution in Radio-activity of the mighty problem to covery, although for the first time it is possible to be solved by these "facts" in psychic research. "Passage of matter through matter" is no new discovery, although for the first time it is possible to show by the imponderability of matter as set forth by science to-day—that it is simply a manipulation of these "atoms" in perpetual rapid motion by those in nature's secrets on the other side of life, that material things can be made to pass through walls. Spirit is the base of all matter. Everything around us in this "too solid globe" was once in a state of gaseous vapor thrown off from the sun with its sister planets, and as water can be reduced to steam by the application of heat and disappear, so can matter be reduced by spiritual chemists to its native element and be restored again, as steam can be condensed into water or congealed into ice. It is quite appalling to find the ignorance on this subject among fairly educated people. Let me ask skeptics of an inquiring mind to read Zollner's "Transcendental Physics," which volume, published thirty years ago, tells of his experiments in the passage of matter through matter with Dr. Slade. The Ven. Archdeacon Colley had remarkable experiences, thirty years ago, also Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace. We are indeed living in a universe so full of mighty potencies that the average mind cannot begin to realize them. Wonderful as have been the "apports" brought to Mr. Stanford's circle, the appearance of the medium seated in a chair on the table as depicted, fully clothed in the Mandarin's dress, described under the picture, was one never to be forgotten. In the Melbourne Age of May 25, and the Sydney Sunday Times of May 31, accounts can be found written by hard-headed journalists of results from which all elements of probable fraud were eliminated, and to which readers are referred. As time goes on it will be found that these "Finer Forces of Nature" are among the abiding facts of the universe, and people who protest against their validity will be proved as hopelessly unscientific as those who protested against Galileo's affirmations and every other advance in knowledge throughout the centuries.

THE PATHWAY OF ETERNAL PROGRESS.

Address delivered by Signor Valetti, on Tuesday evening, May 19, 1908. (Specially reported by Miss M. Wilson, shorthand writer and typist, Premier building, Collins street, Melbourne.)

I divide my subject to-night under two heads—"The Value of Revealed Religion," and "Science." The champions of orthodoxy at the present time have been seized with a great fear that their occupation is passing away, and professors and teachers of revealed religion have looked askance at the investigations and conclusions of science the last few years. Higher Criticism has also done very much to scare thes champions of orthodoxy. Let us tonight, then, examine the subject closely and see if we have received anything from revealed religion, for which we should be thankful. Belonging to the Roman Catholic faith when in the flesh I believed many things which, since I have passed to the higher life and received more knowledge, I do not now believe. I am willing to concede that the church of Rome has produced many grand men who have done great things for humanity. The same may be said of Protestantism and the apologists for churchianity—for that is really the name that should be applied for what passes for Christianity at the present time. But all are putting forward fresh claims and pretenses which are preposterous and untrue.

Pagan Origin of Christianity.

I wish you to put out of your minds all prejudices. Do not be biassed, but let us calmly examine this subject. I do not care to what congregation you belong, I admit at the outset that all religions have some truth. But it is directly with orthodoxy that we have to do, and when I say "we" I mean you who are called Christian people. There is nothing particularly now in the doctrines of Christianity as taught by the orthodox church. The Trinity is far older than the Christian or Jewish religion. Osiris, Isis, and Horus were worshipped in ancient Egypt thousands of years before the Jews had any existence. The Greeks, Romans and Egyptians and other nations had a ritual like unto that of the churches of to-day. They had their holy water, and I make this statement, which cannot be contradicted, that Christianity received from Paganism the Eucharist. Ceres, goddess of the fields, Bacchus, god of the vine, were worshiped at certain seasons of the year by the Greeks and Romans. There was a festival, when they made cakes of wheat, and vessels of wine were carried into the temples and the banqueting house. Then they broke the bread and gave it among their brethren and said, "Take, eat, this is the body of our god—or goddess." They drank the wine and said, "This is his blood." So you see that even the sacrament is not new or original with the Christians. Many of the doctrines and ceremonies also of the churches have been borrowed from paganism. They are, in fact, purely pagan, with a thin veneer of what some people have been pleased to call Christianity.

What is the Value of Revealed Truth?

Would mankind be any worse off to-day had there been no revelation to the Jews, assuming that the revelation is true? I do not think that any enlightened person to-day believes that the Old Testament is the inspired or infallible word of God. We do not, in the first place, get a clear conception of deity from so-called revealed truth. The idea that we gather from it is that of an anthropomorphic God, a revengeful, vacillating, changeful deity. I do not care if you be Roman Catholic or Protestant, for it is the truth. I have seen in several of the churches in Rome, for instance, during my earth life, to say nothing of other Italian cities, a representation of the Father God as an old man with a beard, and there cannot be any doubt that as other gods have been made by men, so this Jahva of the Jews is a creation of mankind. Craftiness, cruelty, waywardness, changeableness—all these are the attributes and character of him whom thousands have been pleased to call God. Such a conception is a degrading one. It is untrue and degrading, and is not far removed from the conception of some of the savages who inhabit the West Coast of Africa who seek to placate their god with blood sacrifices. And the Jews and others who believed that they possessed revealed truth have done the same. Would mankind, I ask, have been any worse off if the Jews had not received this so-called revelation? I say, No! Tell me, signors, what has it done for mankind? I am not speaking as an antagonist of truth, purity or goodness, but I desire to brush away the cobwebs and mists that have settled upon the minds of men, and help them to realize that they are one with the Infinite. Are we, indeed, beholden to revelation for any good things? The science of the Bible is not science at all. The geology of the Bible is laughed out of court, and it is only a few hide-bound professors of religion at the present time who try to square the circle, so to speak, and make Genesis and geology agree. Will any scientific man either who has a reputation to lose say that the astronomy of the Bible is of any value? Did not the church for long periods of time declare that the earth was flat, and that the heavens were cast over it like a curtain? Did she not cast into prison Galileo and others who dared to have their doubts and express them. This is what the church—the repository of revealed truth—has done!

Human Life Not Benefited.

Is there anything to be found within the covers of the Bible which will help man in his physical life and assuage or alleviate pain? Read the accounts of diseases and how they were said to be cured. Ah, says someone, but in those days miracles were common. Now, I desire in this address to assure you that there are no miracles! That which appears to you to be miraculous is the operation of a law unknown to you or not understood. Realize that many of the discoveries of scientific men to-day would have been regarded as miraculous in the past. Think of the instrument that ticks off the loved message from your dear one beyond the seas. Think of the ray of light which can penetrate your clothes and flesh right to your bones. Think of the disc from which your very voice can be repeated, and many other wonders of science! It is when men begin to understand nature that they are able to produce the telegraph, the X-rays, and the phonograph. But they are not miracles. There never was a miracle and there never will be. You people who assemble here from time to time to witness the passage of material bodies through matter must not go away and say it is miraculous. I admit its genuineness. It is the operation of certain laws higherto unknown to you, and which scientists at the present day are beginning to discover through experiments. I tell you frankly, my friends, that human life has not been benefited or enlarged by what you call revealed truth.

Its Spiritual Teaching Not Infallible.

But some say the Bible is a book written for man's spiritual guidance. It is certainly true that I find within the covers of the Old Testament many good things, and I also find many others that should be wiped out. The investigations of scientific men are disproving many of the so-called truths which have been received for hundreds of years as historical facts. Sad is the history of mankind in the past! Many have come, professing to show him the eternal progress and truth, and they have only led him into the ditch. No Christian priest believes in the miracles of other religions, and if you go to India, you will find that no Brahmin priest believes in the miracles of the Christians. Priests do not believe in one another. But remember that the religions of the East are hoary with antiquity, much older than the religions of the present day, and that many of the precepts uttered by the Christ were uttered thousands of years before by other teachers. I admit that I believe these men were sent as teachers to that age when the people were not able to receive stronger ment, but to try to bind these fables and legends upon the consciences of mankind in these twentieth century days is foolish, and is turning men away from truth. There is much good in the Christian religion, and there is also much that is erroneous and untrue. Can any man in his senses believe that at one period of the world's history the universe—so vast, illimitable—looked down on the awful, unthinkable sight of a dead God? Will any professor of religion, in the secret of his heart, say that he believes that the universe beheld the spectacle of a dead and dying God? I say it is impossible and unthinkable, and that so long as men foist upon mankind these truths, so long will men refuse to believe them and the world be filled with doubt and darkness. The Bible is a collection of many books written at various periods of time by fallible men. I am free to believe and to admit that many of them were mediums like those you possess at the present time. But no medium is infallible, and some of the messages received through them are untrue. The Koran and Vedas contain some truth—sublime truths. Can there be anything sublimer than this from the Buddhist teaching; "Let us not render evil unto those who do us an injury, because to injure those who have sinned against us is ignoble, but to pardon and forgive is the highest virtue, the grandest nobility." Hundreds of years before the birth of Christ men were told by Buddha to "do unto others as they would be done by."

Science and the Future.

Science is the friend of mankind, for it deals with facts and verities. Science investigates everything, hence I say that spirit return in the future must be accepted as a fact, as it can be demonstrated. Unfortunately in the past it has been in the hands of the illiterate and ignorant, and of those who for filthy lucre's sake have destroyed the faith of men. I pray you, I beseech you, to cut yourselves loose from all that is untrue or insincere, remembering also that what you are pleased to call fortune telling—the forecasting of events—is nothing but the old necromancy of the Babylonians, and cannot bring happiness, satisfaction or position to anyone. It is full of chicanery, and often produces such bad conditions in family life as to be a direct menace to the happiness of mankind. It is the truth, and I do not care if there are fortune tellers here to-night. Under certain conditions events may be forecasted, but when anything of this kind does take place it is of great moment. What is the value of the answers returned per medium of a pack of cards, or the reading of the hand? In some cases it is the crystal, but it never gives anything to uplift you spiritually or morally, nor will it tend to uplift mankind. I speak strongly because I see that not only in this land, but in other lands, there has been a tendency to run to old necromancers and astrologers, while they miss the spirit and it is the spirit which giveth life.

Scientific Inquiry.

Science will eventually investigate the claims of those whom I shall call psychological researchers. The name "Spiritualism" has fallen into bad odor. I do not know much about Spiritualists and Spiritualism, but I do know that spirit return is true. I had once an existence upon the earth plane, and I got my living by painting. I was born in Italy, and lived for a long time in Rome. I look back and say, "I might have done much better than I did," but I am pleased to record the fact that I can use for the time being the body and the brain of another person, so as to communicate to you my thoughts on these subjects. I know that there is no death, and that I am able to return from a state which is a progressive one, and that as I help others I myself am helped. And so it is on the earth plane. Happiness is the highest good. Do not forget that in helping others you help yourselves.

Any phenomenon of occultism or Spiritualism, if it be true, can be demonstrated before scientific men, and I am thankful that it is being investigated today. The lying newspapers sometimes declare that it is balderdash, but thinking people are investigating for themselves. In my own country the renowned Lombroso has been converted by phenomena witnessed in the presence of Eusapia Paladino, an illiterate Italian woman, and when one so renowned as Lombroso gives his testimony, be assured her mediumship is genuine. I have no time nor do I desire to give a list of distinguished names side by side with Lombroso, but their interest shows that a new era has dawned for truth. Some will say, however, that if we have received little good by revealed religion, what do you offer in its place? I offer every subject that man can investigate. No subject is too sacred for man's investigation, and every man should use his God-given reason and weigh well the facts. I tell you that there is no deity that will be angry with a man for exercising the reason which he has given him. Plain and beautiful are the teachings which we from the realms of light place before you. There are no intricate problems or dogmas which you cannot understand, for a wayfaring man, though a fool, may understand the teachings from the world of light. There is one Universal Father, not an anthropomorphic God, but, if you choose to call him the Father of all spirits, the great ocean of intelligence, then man's spirit is but a drop from that ocean embodied for a time in a house of clay, cribbed, cabined and confined, but liberated at death. This Universal Spirit does not desire that the children of earth shall shut up their reason and believe—or pretend to believe—things that have been foisted on them in the name of God by fallible men, but says, "Come let us reason together," and "hold fast that which is good. It declares the Brotherhood of Humanity, the grandest truth that has ever been proclaimed to humanity. We on the spirit side of life are looking for the time when peace will obtain upon the earth plane. At present there is turmoil—an appearance only of peace—with standing armies which are draining the resources of the nations, each nation ready to fly at the throat of its neighbor, and to welter in each other's blood.

Communion of Saints.

This means simply that mind is not annihilated. The great mind of William Shakespeare, or of my own, Dante, is it lost? Is the brain that contained so many wondrous thoughts annihilated? Has it passed out of existence? I tell you, No! for it is mind that is all supreme in the universe. It is mind that dominates matter, and I tell you that the scientific world is fast approaching to the same conclusion, namely, that universal mind dominates the material world. In conclusion Spiritualism teaches the continuity of life, the life everlasting, the progressive life. There is no hell to be afraid of, that awful place which has blackened the character of the Infinite does not exist! We are told that his name is Love, the Source and Fount of Love, and yet he could prepare a seething cauldron of fire and brimstone for the torture of millions of his children! It is impossible! It is unthinkable! It is untrue! And I protest against it in the name of all that is good and holy. It is a fear placed upon the conscience of man by priestcraft. Man must now throw it off and realize that he is a child of God in very truth, and that the whole universe is his to explore and investigate, and that there is none to say him nay. Science will be the handmaid of truth. Science is the foundation stone, Truth the superstructure and the gilded dome.—Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia.

Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa.

The 26th annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association opened Sunday, July 26.

There were present members from Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and Colorado.

The weather was fine, the grounds in perfect condition, made even more comfortable than heretofore by the addition of several conveniences, among which were a number of electric park lights, a gift from the Ladies of the Association who have at the park raised funds for the purpose by a series of small entertainments given during the spring and summer months.

On the morning of the opening, promptly at nine o'clock, at the call of the big park bell those in the Camp assembled on the "Point," the high bluff commanding a view of the city of Clinton and many miles of the Mississippi Valley, always beautiful, but particularly so this summer. On this point is located an imposing flag staff, painted white, surmounted by a golden globe. Here annually on Sunday morning the American flag is hoisted and floats over the Park until the close of the Camp.

On last Sunday morning the ceremony was most imposing, most tender and most interesting. President E. L. Kilby, as soon as the opening strains of the orchestra had ceased, leaned forward and introduced Mrs. Frankie Cole, of Chicago, a lady known throughout the country as an ardent and helpful member, not only of the Spiritualist Associations, but the Woman's Relief Corps and other societies, which stand for human helpfulness and the higher order of Brotherhood. Mrs. Cole carried in her hand a great, beautiful splendid, elegant, new American Flag, a gift from herself and a few old-time earnest supporters of Spiritualism, to the summer assemblies of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association at Mt. Pleasant Park.

Mrs. Cole spoke briefly of how she came to take this step of getting a new flag, how in a sudden inspiration she had been led to see that it could be done, how she had called upon, through earnest letters, friends of her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, of Clinton, who had lived on the grounds and helped make them ready for the first camp, 26 years ago, Mr. Jackson being then the Park's first Superintendent.

Mrs. Cole's remarks awakened many old-time recollections. Many of those to whom she referred as among the "campers" in those early years of tents, were on the ground last Sunday morning. These she called forward when she finished her address, and with her help the splendid specimen of Old Glory was hoisted into place. President Kilby, on behalf of the association, accepted the lovely gift, the band played appropriate national music, the crowd arose and sang "America", "The Stars and Stripes", etc., Mrs. Cora Richmond spoke briefly, and Mrs. Emma Abbott recited an appropriate poem written for the occasion by Dr. T. Wilkins. They were received with applause, this gentleman's connection with the cause making the element of interest in his contribution. The poem follows.

To the Flag.

'Tis the flag of our country we have proudly unfurled;
The grandest old emblem throughout the known world;
'Tis not a mere emblem of war and of strife,
But of love and of peace, of liberty, life;
The birth of a nation, independent and free;
Monarchy's downfall; truth, unity.

As float o'er the nation mid peace and mid wars,
E'er proudly and grandly, our loved stripes and stars,
So, o'er our camp-ground we hoist them to wave
And float o'er a truth that unshackles the slave;
O'er a truth so expansive, so broad 'twill enfold,
The whole world of freedom, of nations untold.
Unscoffed let it float there above those grand trees,
Let it flap its sweet welcome, as kissed by the breeze,
It unfurls its bright colors of red white and blue,
To hail to our meetings the honest and true,

No voice can speak louder of peace and good will;
No voice that will echo o'er plain and o'er hill;
No voice that can thunder inspiring, to thrill
The heart of the patriot in frenzy to spill
Each drop of his blood for a truth he espouses;
There's naught so enthuses nor madly arouses
American freemen to deeds of great daring;
Nothing uniting, cementing, comparing
With Thee, Thou banner of freedom and love:
Thou message of peace sent down from above.

Oh! speak out thy welcome alike unto all,
And earnestly beckon the honest to call
And learn of our science and truth that is found
In all the earth's nations and climes to abound,
And thy name shall be sounded and sung o'er and o'er,
On earth and in spirit land forevermore.

The week has been most gratifying in point of the great harmony of feeling, universal sense of comfort, good-will, interest in the lectures, etc., satisfaction in all that is going on.

The attendance has not been large, but in every sense the crowd here is an earnest and happy and well-satisfied one.

Mrs. Richmond gave four days' addresses, and then came Prof. Benj. F. Wilson, who is the speaker at the time of this writing, and as Mr. Wilson has so many things to say that are new and scholarly, he is listened to with deep interest.

Mrs. Laura Jones of St. Louis, has been so far the message bearer. She is a woman of the loveliest personality, a rare voice, a gentle platform presence, full of quiet power. Her messages have made a fine impression, and her work rated with satisfaction.

An orchestra from Clinton is in attendance several days each week, and each Sunday gives a concert on the grounds. Mrs. Flora Russell of Alliance, Ohio, has been in charge of the vocal music. Mrs. Russell has been the soloist for several Spiritualist summer camps, and is a fine soprano singer. Miss Golden, late of the Morris Pratt School, has been organist. Mrs. Emma Abbott conducts the popular morning lyceums for the little people, and Mrs. Owens, as chairman of the entertainment committee, has shown her ability in the conduct and preparation of the first of the summer series. The first dancing party, which was well attended, was held on Friday evening. There will be one each week during the assembly.

The mediums here are Mrs. Jaquet of Cedar Rapids, Max Hoffman, Mrs. Dr. Henderson of Davenport, Mrs. E. A. Johnson (resident), Mrs. Harding (resident), Mrs. Eva McCoy, Miss Minerva Aiken, and others.

The weather is fine, and the health at the camp good. M. V. B.

Mediumship Development.

In order to develop your mediumship you must, if you are sitting in a circle for the above purpose, be passive and quiet, sit erect with your hands laid in a comfortable position, not crossed, for crossing cuts off the vibration that is circulating from you to others and from others to you. Have the fect the same. Above all be comfortable. The persons with whom you are sitting must attend regularly at a set time and place. Once a week is sufficient. If there are gentlemen in the circle, have a gentleman then a lady alternate, so as to mix the conditions. Separate those who are related. Have the room clean and at a moderate temperature, not too warm and very quiet to get the best results.

It is also necessary to have a trumpet, cabinet and slates, for there might be those in your circle gifted in that way. There are many phases. Children must not sit, it is injurious to their health. Have the same persons in your circle always, never change, that is, letting a stranger in every week, because it changes the forces. Everyone has their own forces or guides, and when the earth people come together and associate, then we join our forces with theirs. So you must have but one band, strong and united.

We the spirit teachers must have a discipline in our work as well as anyone in the body. Be encouraged, steady and passive, and you will obtain the best results, it may not come in a month, but a year or two.

Sweet bud and blossom, sweet bird and bee,
Wafted on wings of love to me,
Straight from the spirit-world, happy and free,
Bringing a message of hope to me.

Wants More Chaplains.

Would-be-President Bryan, in a late speech, published in his Commoner, suggests doubling the number of Chaplains in each regiment, one to be a Catholic, the other a Protestant. He inquires: "Cannot our government in its abundance, supply the needs of both?" That "abundance" to which the presidential aspirant alludes comes from the pockets of all the people, many of whom are of the opinion the art of killing can as successfully be carried on without any chaplain as with a dozen. The age has gone by when God gives the victory in battle to those who make the longest and most urgent prayer.

Is not the suggestion a sop offered the opposing sects for votes? And how much short of it was the late high compliment the opposing prominent candidate paid the Catholic for advancing civilization?

Demagogy is defined: "The action of a leader who panders to popular prejudices and passions," yet The Progressive Thinker does not apply this term to either of the presidential candidates. If it fits either, or both, it is merely an incident.

Pettifoggers of the Church.

Bishop Grafton, of Fond du Lac, Wis., a Methodist, we believe, some three years ago, made the statement which went the rounds of the public press, and was copied into these columns Nov. 11, 1905:

"We of the clergy have been made by the church her ministers to teach, not what we think is true, but what she puts into our mouths to teach."

From this it is clear it little matters what a minister really believes, so he keeps a close mouth and teaches what his church tells him to preach. He occupies the exact position of a lawyer in a court of justice. He engages for a consideration to maintain the interest of his client, right or wrong. This fact should always be kept in mind when listening to a preacher in promulgating his creed. However fervid his eloquence it is no evidence he believes what he says.

Which Lied?

Genesis 18:9, 10. The Lord said to Abraham: "Where is Sarah, thy wife? * * * I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life; and lo, Sarah, thy wife, shall have a son."

Verse 13: "And the Lord said unto Abraham, 'Wherefore did Sarah laugh'?"

Verse 15: "Then Sarah denied, saying, 'I laughed not.' And he [the Lord] said: 'Nay, but thou didst laugh'."

Now there is a clear and unqualified assertion on the one hand by the Lord that Sarah laughed; and an equally positive denial on the part of Sarah that she did not laugh. Will the clergy be so kind as to tell without quibbling which lied?

Monomaniacs.

To break the will of John F. Goff, of Michigan, who had devised his estate to Spiritualism, the Supreme Court decided Spiritualists are monomaniacs, and incapable of disposing of their property by will.

Those Spiritualists who oppose the exposure of the frauds on which Christianity rests, and give countenance to such decisions, are closely related to the Damphool family.

Accumulating Facts.

(No. 6.)

The reader seeking evidence that the lost Phenician history is doing service, with slight adaptation as the Old Testament, may consult the 9th, 10th and 11th chapters of 1st Kings; then extend that search to chapter 9 of 2d Chronicles. Remember that most writers on Palestine have magnified distances, and credited Jews with territory they never possessed; adding Phenicia to Judea and all the country from Dan to Beersheba, and yet it does not contain so many square miles as Vermont, besides portions of it on the south is a barren desolation, a desert of shifting sand. There are a few short and narrow valleys along the little tributaries to the Jordan. The cities so magnificently described in Bible story were generally never more than a small cluster of low one-story rough stone structures of a single room, called cities by the Bible translaters, to give them a seeming importance.

And Jerusalem, as measured by Edward Robinson, D.D., and published in his "Biblical Researches in Palestine," was half a mile wide and three-fourths of a mile long. Its entire circumference was nearly two and a half miles. See Vol. I., p. 268. Jerusalem proper, in ancient times, was much smaller, with deep ravines, one of which, the valley of Hinnom, alias Hell, was originally some 400 feet deep.

Palestine was populated by a pastoral people, moving from place to place to accommodate grazing herds. Mountain cliffs, beetling crags, deep ravines, barren planes, two seas, that of Galilee and the Dead sea, in the latter of which the Jordan empties its waters with no outlet, and its surface 1,316 feet lower than the Mediterranean, with no port on the Great sea, no highway, and no commerce to indicate its general surface. These are all facts.

Now we shall quote from "unerring divine revelation," and learn something of King Solomon, the wisest of men, and until he went "whoring after strange gods," was a favorite of Jehovah, notwithstanding his harem of 700 wives and 300 concubines, through whose loins came the dear Jesus.

"So King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom. And all the earth sought Solomon to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart. And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armor, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year. And Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen; and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem. And the king made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars made he to be as the sycamore trees that are in the vale for abundance. And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn; the king's merchants received the linen at a price."—I. Kings 10:23-29.

"The weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and three score and six talents of gold. [A talent of gold weighed 93¾ pounds avoirdupois.] Beside that which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia and governors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon. * * * Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold. And there were six steps to the throne, with a foot-stool of gold which were fastened to the throne, and stays on each side of the sitting place, and two lions standing by the stays: And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom. And all the drinking vessels of King Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of Lebanon were of pure gold; none were of silver. It was not anything accounted of in the days of Solomon. * * * And King Solomon surpassed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom. * * *And Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; whom he bestowed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem."—2 Chronicles 9:13-25.

It will be shown, probably next week, that this great wealth was Phenician. It was stolen history and greatly exaggerated to magnify a fictitious king who was a remote ancestor of "our Lord," the younger.

If there was no other indication of false history than that in regard to Solomon, and a suspicion that Phenician history was drawn upon to magnify his greatness, we have it in 1 Kings 9:18 and 2 Chronicles 8:4. In each place we are told: "Solomon built Tadmor in the wilderness." The name after the Alexandrian conquest, B. C. 332, was changed to Palmyra by the Greeks, because of the palms growing there. The name nowhere occurs in the Bible, save in the two places cited.

The ruins of Palmyra are ten miles in circumference. The city was built at the base of a chain of mountains which rise from the plane on the west. East a desert of shifting sand stretches 20 to 30 miles away to the Euprates. It is full 250 miles from Tyre, and 250 miles over mountain, desert and plane from Jerusalem. The city was built long years before the period of Solomon, to accommodate the vast commerce carried on the northern overland route between India, the Persian Gulf and the great monarchies of Persia, Bactria, Chalden, Babylonia and Assyria to Tyre, on the Mediterranean, a point more than 100 miles in a direct line north of Jerusalem. The vast traffic carried on over this route added largely to the wealth of Phenicia, and made Tyre the great entrepot to the commerce of the world; but it contributed in no way to the riches of a tribal king at Jerusalem.

It may be of interest to the curious reader to state that it is not known when or by whom Palmyra was destroyed. As seen by travelers it is now a forest of Corinthian columns, standing or fallen, of the purest white marble. So numerous are these, thousands in number, the spectater is said to be at a loss how to connect or arrange them in any order of symmetry, or conceive what purpose they served.

Count Volney, who visited Tadmor, says:

"In the space covered by these ruins we sometimes find a palace of which nothing remains but the court and walls; sometimes a temple, whose peristyle is half thrown down; and now a portico, a gallery, or triumphal arch. Here stand groups of columns, whose symmetry is destroyed by the fall of many of them; there we see them ranged in rows of such length, that, similar to rows of trees, they deceive the sight, and assume the appearance of continued walls. If from this striking scene we cast our eyes upon the ground, another scene almost as varied presents itself. On all sides we behold nothing but subverted shafts, some whole, others shattered to pieces or dislocated in their joints; and on which side soever we look, the earth is strewed with vast stones half buried, with broken entablatures, mutilated friezes, disfigured reliefs, effaced sculptures, violated tombs, and altars defiled by dust."

But marvelous is it not? There are no more magnificent ruins in all the East than those of Tadmor. A great number of inscriptions are found, but nothing relating to Solomon or the Jews. And, why not? Because both are unknown to truthful history. They were manufactured for a purpose, and were injected into history at a period many centuries later than that in which they figure in Christian literature.

We conclude this number with a quotation from Encyclopedia Britannica, 2d col., p. 198, Vol. 18, article Palmyra:

"Neither on the cuneiform inscriptions, nor the Old Testament writings prior to Chronicles, not even in Ezekiel's account of the trading connexions of Tyre, is there any mention of Tadmor. * * * On the other hand Tadmor cannot have been a new place when the Biblical Chronicler ascribed its foundation to Solomon."

Next week we shall greatly interest the scholarly reader with an account of Solomon's navy.

Good Words for Islamism.

For a long time we have had a favorable impression of Mohammedanism, ever since a good Christian clergyman, of a national reputation for intellectual and moral worth, related to us his own personal observation on a trip to the "Holy Land," and to Egypt. He made the entire passage from Liverpool to Alexandria on a steamship manned by the devotees of Mohammed. He was in hourly contact with those people for many weeks. During all his travels he witnessed no intemperance, no quarrels, no strife, and heard no profanity. Five times each day they washed themselves, and bowed in prayer to Allah, the Arabic for God. Whether on shipboard, at hotels, or camped in desert or plain, the same faithful service was always cheerfully rendered, and under their watchful care and protection he felt himself as safe from violence as in his own home.

The importunate cry among the lowly for baksheesh was no more annoying than the beggarly importunities common to most large Christian cities. He had long interviews with Islam scholars; and on his return to America he ever delighted to tell of the virtues of the people he had been taught in college and Christian pulpit to despise.

Such were our reflections as we read the other day in Harper's Weekly the following, probably from the pen of the editor. We quote:

The faith of Islam is the most vital influence in the world to-day. It is the only faith whose precepts form the basis of civil law throughout all countries in which it is dominant. It is making converts more rapidly than all other religions combined. Its agents are swarming through all the territories of the Old World. They have civilized immense regions of Central Africa, and have built up the scattered Pagan tribes into powerful communities. They are permeating the East Indies; and are breaking down the caste degradation of India. A mosque has been built in Liverpool, and another is projected in New York City. Before this triumphant progress many world-evils are scattered; the usurer, the gambler, alcohol, and all the debasing practices of Pagan peoples.

"Everywhere the awakening of the Mohammedan peoples is becoming more and more manifest. Persia has established a constitutional government. Afghanistan has schools and factories; freedom of faith, and, to us the supreme test of civilization, an arsenal manned by native workmen, and a well-armed standing militia of 100,000 men. The petition of Mohammedan women, subjects of Russia, to the Duma, demanding equal rights and suffrage was recently the subject of comment in the American and European press."

Thus Harper's Weekly. The feature which strikes us with extreme favor is the fact that the followers of Mohammed have no priests. They in charge of the mosques, who call five times a day for pure hands and heart, with prayers to Allah, come nearest to a priesthood, yet their services are declaratory—announcing a duty—rather than directory—commanding what shall be done.

We believe it a fact that there are more conversions of Christians to Islamism than the reverse.

THE PROMINENT SECULAR PRESS.

All Along the Line It is Carefully and Conscientiously Considering Occult and Spiritualistic Subjects.

A recent magazine article by Sir Oliver Lodge, the eminnent English scientist, should be read by every thinking person. Not only is Sir Oliver a trained and able investigator and student of physical nature and its manifestions, but he has long been suggested, with other scientists, philosophers and men of leisure, in the exploration of the physical realm of human nature, and in an attempt to classify and account for some of its mysterious phenomena. The first thing to be determinded was whether the alleged phenomena were real, or growths of the imagination, or produced by deceit and fraud. The gentlemen who made up the Society of Psychical Research are unanimous in the conclusion that certain apparently supranormal occurrences have taken place, which can be accounted for by telepathy; that is to say, that under certain conditions and between sympathetic persons, direct communication of ideas and impressions from a long distance have happened in a way unknown to science. This is now considered as well established as any fact can be. Most of the phenomena in connection with supposed apparitions and all such hallucinations can be thus explained. They are mental images, and may or may not have their origin outside the mind of the person who sees them. Attempts have been made to prove the reality of such phantasms by photography, but nothing definite or that can be accepted as proof has been assomplished.

Another set of phenomena, the reality of which Sir Oliver considers as firmly established, covers what is called automatic writing, which is where a person goes into a trance state, or at least a wholly passive one, and gives up his hand to the control of some outside influence which causes it to write things of which he knows nothing. Sir Oliver thinks that most of this sort of writing is done by the unconscious or subliminal self. Where what is communicated cannot be explained in this way it is attributed to telepathy from the mind of some living person. Some of the members of the society think that everything so far disclosed can be accounted for in this way. Others think it necessary to take a futher step and assume, from the nature of the communications and all the cirumstances, that the medium has been taken possesion of by a disembodied intelligence, which succeeds through an apparatus not its own. This utilization of another's mechanism is called telergy. This leads to the question whether disembodied intelligence can act through mediums as living ones are known to do. It is asserted that they do, and right here is now the battle ground. Sir Oliver says that they are proceeding very slowly and with the utmost caution, and while he does not commit himself positively, is evidently disposed to believe that real connection has been established with some who have passed into another sphere. The evidence considered the most convincing is that deduced from the relation of trifling incidents, which is thought to go further in proving identity than anything else. Sir Oliver states his personal attitude thus, after having emphasized the need of still futher evidence far more convincing in charater than that required to establish ordinary facts: "On the whole, I am of those who, though they would like to see further and still stronger and more continued proofs are of opinion that a good case has been made out, and that as the best working hypothesis at the present time it is legitimate to grant that lucid moments of intercourse with deceased persons may in the best cases supervene. The boundary between the two states * * * is wearing thin in places * * * and we are beginning to hear now and again the strokes of the pickaxes of our comrades on the other side." Of course this does not go far enough to satisfy the Spiritualists, and goes much too far to please those who are wholly skeptical.

The question was asked in ancient time, "If a man die shall he live again?" and there always have been very many and still are who doubt, and even with others immortality has been rather a hope than a belief. If will work a profound change in the mental and moral attitude of the race if we come to have the same sort of evidence of communication with absent friends. Another life, about which we have speculated and questioned, will be a certainty, and we can no longer as we have been in the habit of doing in the way we live here, take chances in regard to it. If a man gives all his time, energy and thought here to purely material things or to low and unworthy objects, he can carry with him when he departs nothing but the memory of them and the character and tastes which he has formed, which at least must put him at a great disadvantage in starting a new life in an environment so wholly different to this. If indeed the spirits of those gone before are within call it implies an almost unthinkable state of things. Since mankind appeared on the earth hundreds of billions have died. Are they hovering in the ether about us like swarms of invisible insects, and how do they pass the time? Perhaps once communication is fully established we shall find out a great deal about many things which have come to be regarded as impenetrable mysteries.—The Enquirer, Cincinnatti, Ohio.

FAITH AND WORK COMBINED, BISHOP'S PANACEA FOR SICK.

English Clergyman Tells His Views on Faith Healing in Sermon to Medical Men in London.

At the religious service, London Eng., with which the meeting of the British Medical association was opened Bishop Sheffield preached a sermon, in the course of which he made a special reference to faith healing. He said He had often regretted that the admission of a clergyman into a sick room was frequently regarded as a signal of the grave nature of the case, and that prayers in church were looked upon almost as a sentence of death but there seemed danger now of not only the exclusion of the clergyman from the sick room but of the medical man as well.

Faith healing as a function in the sick room, he said, was strongly in evidence, and there was a tendency to apply literally the text of St. James, "If any man amonst you be sick let him pray."

"In such matters," the bishop said, the guidance of medical profession should be sought. I with Sir Oliver Lodge, believe as little in the efficacy of prayer without drugs as in drugs without prayer. We need a combination of faith and works and an intimacy of the physical and the psychical."

When a man loses "FAITH" he generally begins to think, and it those who THINK that move the world.—National Ripsaw.

History of the Chicago Ordinance.

An Interesting and Valuable Review of the Work Performed.

The so-called Chicago ordinance relating to spirit mediumship and subjects generally classed as occult, mysterious or magical, may be said to have had three periods in its origin and development; or, perhaps, more strictly speaking, it was the culmination of three periods of agitation tending to an adjustment or fixing of the legal status of the whole subject of those unusual and subtle powers of the human mind and body which are claimed by certain classes of persons under the names of mediumship, psychism, etc., etc.

The agitation was first started in Chicago in the autumn of 1906, during the administration of Mayor Dunne, by the introduction into the city council of an ordinance amendatory of the vagrancy ordinance, making the exercise of any form of occult faculty or gift an act of vagrancy and punishable as such.

The Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, whose board of management at that time consisted of Dr. George B. Warne, president, Mrs. Ella J. Bloom, vice-president, Dr. H. A. Cross, secretary, A. M. Griffen, treasurer, Mrs. J. R. Francis, Dr. Hammond and Orrin Merritt, trustees, appointed Dr. Warne, Dr. Cross, A. M. Griffen, J. R. Francis and Mrs. Cora Richmond a committee to appear before the judiciary committee of the city council and oppose the passage of the proposed ordinance. At the same time the Chicago Spiritualists' League, a local organization, held a meeting and passed resolutions condemnatory of the same ordinance and likewise appointed a committee to present the resolutions and oppose the ordinance before the city council.

This action naturally brought the committees from the two Spiritualist bodies together; and at an open meeting of the League held at the Sherman House in January, 1907, where the committee from the State Board were present (excepting Mr. Francis and Mrs. Richmond), a plan of campaign was mapped out, the object being simply to prevent the passage of the then pending ordinance. Dating from this meeting at the Sherman House the spiritual forces seemed to center in the managing board of the League, which then consisted of Dr. C. A. Burgess, president; Dr. Warne, vice-president (and later A. M. Griffen, vice-president); Dr. J. H. Randall, secretary; Mr. A. G. Cleveland, treasurer; Dr. Gustafson, W. J. Lynn, J. C. Sexsmith, Mrs. Barbara Hilbert, Mrs. O. B. Wilson, Mrs. Susie Thompson, trustees and alternates, and Mr. R. Gilray in an advisory capacity.

The movers of the ordinance realizing that strong opposition was developing to it among the Spiritualists of the city, suddenly dropped it and nothing more was ever heard of it.

The next stage, or second attack, was inaugurated by the introduction of a bill in the State Legislature of Illinois at Springfield, some time in the spring of 1907, by a Mr. Danaher, a Chicago member of the House of Representatives, which bill was likewise aimed at the suppression of "fortune telling of every kind and nature." It was again decided by the State and League officers that here also was concealed beneath the soft glove an iron hand which, under the pretext of fortune telling would oppress if not suppress the exercise of mediumship everywhere in the State of Illinois. Thereupon Drs. Warne and Burgess were sent to Springfield to if possible defeat the Danaher bill; and, owing to their intelligent and watchful efforts, though passing in the House the bill was defeated in the Senate.

Lulled into a feeling of security induced by these two successive victories, the officers of the League were startled when, one day in May, 1907, shortly following the victory at Springfield, Mr. W. J. Lynn, one of their number and a deputy sheriff of Cook County, brought to them the news that another ordinance had been introduced in the city council of Chicago forbidding the practice of fortune telling of any kind or nature except by special permit from the police. Alderman Considine, of the Thirteenth ward, was the author of this ordinance, the first section of which read as follows:

"No person or persons shall engage in, carry on or conduct the business of card reading, palmistry, Gypsy camps, store camps or fortune telling of any kind or nature within the city where a fee of any kind is charged or accepted, until he or they first obtain a permit in writing therefor from the police department."

This was the gist of the ordinance. Three other sections followed regulating the manner of obtaining permits and prescribing penalty for practicing any of the things enumerated in the first section without such permit.

Again the League Board deemed it advisable to oppose the adoption of this ordinance. Fortunately the Cause had a friend at court. The ordinance was referred by the council to its judiciary committee and by that committee referred to one of its members as a sub-committee for investigation. Alderman Joseph Kohout, of the Thirty-fourth ward, a good lawyer and a man of broad and liberal views, was that sub-committee. Brother R. Gilray happened then to be officing with Alderman Kohout in the Chicago Opera House building, and it was not long before the entente cordiale was established between the lawmaking power of the city and the officers of the League. Mr. Kohout was soon informed that the Considine ordinance was objectionable to the Spiritualists. "Very well," said he, "prepare an ordinance of your own which will protect your mediums and at the same time punish the frauds and tricksters that infest the city, keeping within constitutional lines, and you may get it all, or only 90 per cent or 75 per cent. It is the fixed purpose, as I know, of the city authorities to have an ordinance that will rid the city of all frauds of this class, but if there is anything genuine, as you say there is, it is not the intention of the authorities to interfere with it."

It then became the task of lawyers to frame an ordinance of the kind indicated, and Brother Gilray and myself, belonging to that profession, set about the preparation of such an ordinance. The subject was comparatively new to the law and the field was almost barren of precedents. Quite a few cases, to be sure, involving the testamentary capacity of Spiritualists, were to be found in the law books, but these did not and could not help us very much. Weekly meetings of the League Board were held, and two or more public meetings of the League, during the period from the introduction of the ordinance in May to December following when the ordinance that now stands on the statute books of Chicago was passed, and indeed, the League has held quite regular meetings since the passage of the ordinance up to the present time.

The process of evolution of the present ordinance, if I may be allowed the expression, was about as follows:

A section was drafted by me, aided by suggestions from Brothers Gilray, Warne, Lynn and others, absolutely prohibiting advertising of promises to do the thousand and one wonderful things by occult means which were then being advertised by a horde of charlatans (and possibly by some genuine performers) in the columns of the Sunday papers in Chicago. Then the Considine ordinance was incorporated as sections 2, 3 and 4, and a fifth section added by us as follows:

"Provided, however, that the profession or calling of Spiritual mediums duly certified or ordained by the National Spiritualists' Association, or by its auxiliary, the Chicago Spiritualists' League, shall be exempt from the provisions and penalities of sections 2, 3 and 4 hereof."

It will be noticed that the object of the League Board was to provide a law in this ordinance which should prohibit enticing advertisements for purposes of fraud, allow palmists, card readers, Gypsy camps and fortune tellers, not mediums, to practice their arts under permits from the Police Department, and exempt mediums certified or ordained by the Spiritualists' organizations mentioned.

This compromise ordinance was submitted to an open meeting of the League, held at the residence of Dr. Burgess, on Sept. 18, 1907, to which meeting had been invited Rev. G. C. Love, of Portland, Ore., who was then temporarily in the city, and also other prominent Spiritualists of Chicago, to aid the Board in determining just what should be done under the conditions existing in Chicago and to ascertain whether the ordinance as prepared was satisfactory. Serious opposition, however, to this ordinance developed at this and other meetings of the Board to which Spiritualists and mediums had been invited. But nevertheless, the ordinance as prepared, was endorsed by a majority of the attendants at the meeting called to consider it, and it was handed to Alderman Kohout who submitted it to the legal department of the city of Chicago. In due course the draft came back from the corporation counsel so mutilated that it could hardly be recognized. The last section, exempting certified and ordained Spiritual mediums was stricken out entirely, and the first section was materially changed, having been made to read that persons who pretended to, or did "communicate with the dead" should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor unless they had previously procured a permit to do so from the police department. This ordinance could not, of course, be accepted by us, and Alderman Kohout told us to try again.

The ordinance as it now stands was then drafted, some time in October, 1907, at the office of Alderman Kohout, there being present Dr. Warne, Dr. Burgess, Brothers R. Gilray, W. J. Lynn and myself. The first section relating to advertising was revived as it was written by us in the rejected draft; the second section, relating to the practice of fraud in the name of mediumship, palmistry, etc., was conceived and drawn by the writer; the third section, relating to the practice of fraud at seances or meetings, private or public, was suggested and largely worded by Brother Gilray; all present, however, taking part in the discussion and making suggestions as to the substance and wording as the work proceeded.

The draft thus prepared then went to the corporation counsel, Mr. Edward J. Brundage, and it is said that his assistant, Mr. Oscar H. Olsen, and clerks of his office spent two weeks or more in looking up the law and preparing an opinion as to the legality of the ordinance; and it is gratifying to know that at the end of his investigations Mr. Olsen pronounced the proposed law as we had drawn it, with a slight change or two, to be constitutional and legal. The ordinance then, on Dec. 2, 1907, passed the city council with but one dissenting vote, and went to the mayor for signature.

The action of the city council in adopting the ordinance was published in the city press, and the opposition, consisting of the "big ad." people and a few misguided Spiritualists, demanded a hearing before the mayor, which was granted. This hearing was had on Jan. 6, 1908, in the mayor's office. Alderman Kohout, Corporation Counsel Brundage, Chief of Police George M. Shippy, Mayor Fred A. Busse, all officials of Chicago, Dr. Warne, Dr. Burgess, W. J. Lynn and A. M. Griffen, of the League Board and members of the State Association, two lawyers representing unknown interests, and a motley crowd of palmists, astrologers, card readers and so on, were there. The ordinance was explained very clearly by Alderman Kohout, and Chief Shippy declared his belief that it was a necessity. Some questions were asked by the lawyers and by members of the audience, all of which were satisfactorily answered by either Alderman Kohout, Chief Shippy or the Mayor himself. The Mayor at the conclusion of the conference signed the ordinance, remarking that if it should turn out to be oppressive to any one it could and would no doubt be amended or repealed.

Immediately after the ordinance went into effect on Jan. 6, 1908, the misleading and fraudulent advertisements disappeared from the Sunday papers, and since then the faking gentry have been gradually stealing away from the city or concealing their identity. No prosecutions have been instituted under the ordinance, and the League has been putting forth its efforts in assistance of the police authorities in their work of distinguishing the false and the genuine, and in these efforts it is having the co-operation and aid of the State Association; and it is hoped by all good Spiritualists of Chicago that now that the weeds and tares have been well-nigh uprooted the fresh young shoots of corn and wheat may thrive and grow where for so many years they have been choked and dwarfed by a rank and noisome growth that has soiled and clouded the fairest and sweetest name that has ever blessed the life and soul of man.

The Lesson of the Palm.

A Discourse by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

"And they scattered palms in his way."

All Christendom to-day, especially in the Roman Catholic and Protestant Episcopal church denominations, is celebrating this day as "Palm Sunday," for the purpose of commemorating the historical or traditional passing of Jesus into Jerusalem, when the people, awakened by his great teaching and wonderful manifestation of spiritual power were aroused to the enthusiasm of calling him the king of the Jews.

Older than Christendom or Jewish history is the wonderful symbol of the Palm. If you were to visit Ceylon or any of the coast lines of India you would find that wherever the moisture can penetrate there are groves of palms. At certain times of the year the Oriental worshipers were accustomed to gather upon the sea-shore and sing hymns of praises and scatter branches of palms and fruitage in the water in commemoration of the sacred life that comes forth after the dip of the sun beneath the waves and the triumph of the light of day. This was not only astronomical and geological, but it was also sacred, and this form of worship was to symbolize that the fruit-bearing palms were the most sacred of all physical objects that those people worshiped since the descent beneath the sun of Isis and Osiris, and the emerging from the waters constituted the great epoch of the fruit-bearing palm that furnished meat, drink and substance wherewith to weave their clothing. So this worship was given, not simply to the physical god of day, but to the great Light of the Universe who had provided this sustenance.

Always the branch of the palm was the sacred symbol, and this was also the kabalistic "branch" referred to in some of the mysterious and mystical passages of the Old Testament. Then it came to be used for that "branch" of the "House of David" that all through the historical and Scriptural records has a twofold meaning. The "branch" being the light that cometh forth unknown in the midst of darkness. In Freemasonry there is something of this symbolism, but it is so far removed from the original meaning that the Freemasons themselves do not understand it. In the Hebrew church there is something of it, but that is also veiled even to the more sacred orders of the priesthood. In the Christian church it is taken—and properly—as the symbol of the life of Christ, meaning this branch of truth, this putting forth of the fruit of the great light of life and love that should bring peace and love unto humanity.

It is not strange that the Jews, in their ignorance, should mistake the teachings of the Great Teacher; they had been accustomed to looking upon external forms of worship. The innermost secrets of the Temple were never revealed to them. So when the Teacher came talking about a king and a kingdom, to them it meant a literal king and a literal kingdom; and when he talked of his "Father," to them his Father was a great and wonderful warrior, a mighty material potentate. They never for one moment supposed that he meant the Infinite, the Great God, the "unpronouncable name" of the Hebrew Temple. When he talked of conquest, it was self-conquest he meant; they thought it meant conquest over material enemies. When he gave his lessons in parables, they mistook them for their outward meaning. This kingdom of the spirit they thought was a literal kingdom. When he talked of Love, they accepted it only with the knowledge they had of human love. The great, divine meaning was hidden. So after his teachings and the many deeds of wonder that he wrought,—the healing of the sick, the restoration of the blind and the uplifting of the people—it was no wonder that, inspired by this wonderful light, this invisible power, which they could not understand, they should scatter palms in his way and declare him the "king of the Jews" whom they had expected.

There were two powers to be jealous then: The Roman power that had conquered Jerusalem, but had left the Jews the one privilege of their own worship, lest there should be an insurrection and an uprising; and the Jewish jealousy that its literal forms and ceremonials might be taken away. Therefore, everything that was taught was watched and spied upon. So when it came to be known that Jesus was entering Jerusalem with the people following him and calling him the "king of the Jews," the authorities in the Temple and the Roman authorities both seemed to take alarm.

When you think that Jesus taught love instead, that the fulfilling of the law was love; when you consider that he was thought to be a literal prophet or king whom they expected in Judea, it is not strange that the authorities took alarm. If at this moment any one with sufficient eloquence and power should pass through streets of your city and proclaim any doctrine so at variance with the existing order of things here; even like poor Coxey, who, with his army, advanced upon Washington, but only with a message for better roads, which alarmed the authorities so that his message was not received and he was suppressed; suppose one went with a message for better legislation and better lives among the legislators, do you not suppose there would be a commotion? When was there ever a time elsewhere, as there in Judea, that the doctrine of Love and loving kindness has not been met with a similar rebuke? Just think! In England the first time the Salvation Army tried to hold public meetings it was suppressed by the authorities, and it was not until there were members of titled families or those having interest at court and, therefore, with the church authorities, became interested in the work of the Salvation Army that they could hold public meetings. On a later occasion when the one standing before you was in London she was much amused one evening to see near one of the large headquarters of the Salvation Army, upon the steps of one of the churches of the Established Church of England, the minister preaching to people upon the street. He felt compelled to do it, for he saw the large influence this great popular movement had among the people.

Even here the "Volunteers" and Salvation Army in local towns and places are looked upon with disapproval. But they can bear the message of "good tidings," they can bear the message of singing songs and the light of Infinite Love, unto the people as long as they do not claim to usurp any government office, or their followers do not claim any change from the usual order of things; and from the fact that they have a sort of army regime, there is some protection in that for them, as our people are so much in love with the military idea. That it is an army of peace instead of war is a subject of great congratulation.

To-day there are more people ready to proclaim the Gospel of Christ than at any other time in the history of Christendom. Yet we doubt very much if the literal enactment of a single thing that he proclaimed would be possible.

Beware of popular praise when you are advocating an unpopular cause; when you are in advance of the people; do not feel too much the temporay success; do not feel too much the applause of the people. Remember the feeling of the public is fickle. Remember that those who draw around you, thinking that possibly the great day of triumph has come, will be the first to flee away at the first approach of any unpopularity or failure to continue that seeming victory. With the lack of the public endorsement of Jesus, one by one his followers forsook him, even the cowardice of his disciples and the denial of him by Peter made them skulk and hide away in the shadow. But Jesus was not deceived by that seeming hour of triumph. "Oh, Jerusalem! I would have shielded thee even as the hen gathereth her chickens beneath her wings." But they would not have it, meaning that this triumph for truth was only momentary; meaning that the people would fall away from him at the first signal of danger. He knew that Jerusalem was not ready for this great truth of peace and love; he knew that the sword would follow instead of peace, for the people were in the shadow of the sword.

We do not know of anything better calculated to warn people against material triumph, against the undue importance of human praise, against that which seems like material exaltation. This pride of place and power, the asking of Jesus by his followers what position they would occupy when they entered into his kingdom, as if it was a material kingdom and they were each going to sit on his right side and be one of his principal officers. Oh! it is because of this that people so often mistake the temporary applause of man and claim too much.

We like the methods of those who go forth to help the people, regardless of praise or blame. We like the methods of those who teach the love of God, instead of fear and revenge. We like the uplifting of humanity for humanity's sake. We like that which brings people into the knowledge of their own likeness and allegiance unto God. We like whatever will make people know that they are as near and dear to the Infinite as any child of God. So you have each felt in some portion of your lives a portion of this triumph; you have thought that the people were being drawn to you or your works that you thought were for the good of humanity; you have felt more and more were coming to appreciate it, yet put the thing to the test, put it to the rack, let the law put it under the ban and see how soon they will leave it. People are not ready to be martyrs; they are scarcely ready to follow their own convictions; but the light that comes from this splendid example should be a light unto all, a warning not to expect the praise of the populace.

A thousand years, two thousand years have passed and the church bells ring the glad acclaim of that Palm Sunday. Thousands of choirs are singing the praise of this great light of love. Yet if the Golden Rule were put to them to-morrow to practice, if in every human life there were to be made a crucial test of Jesus' teachings, would they not depart from them? Do they not depart from them?' If the "Son of Man" came either in humility or in "great power and glory," how many would be find ready for that wonderful light? We are not saying this in criticism; we are not saying this in blame, but simply say that many a human life has been temporarily exalted by a spiritual uplifting, and may gain a temporary enthusiasm; but that few can be relied upon until that truth reaches the innermost of one's being, that surging tide at the heart, that finds it is ready for any blame or any sacrifice, as it is called. You cannot make a sacrifice unto truth; so great a blessing is this divine truth that when it possesses the human heart it is the richest of possessions, it constitutes all that is, and the mere physical wants and conditions of life, even if meagerly provided for, count as nothing compared with this light.

Let us remember that palms have been strewn in the pathway of many conquering heroes who conquered by war. Let us remember that the symbol can be used for any war picture. But let us also remember that the sacred light of true victory cannot be symbolized in this loud acclaim and cheers, and feeling of pride, with which history has rung when recounting heroes' great triumph. But in the life of Jesue the greater and greatest triumph was not in the palms, was not in the cheering of the populace, was not in the shouting of hosannas, but it was in the one sentence uttered upon the cross "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." They did not know any more when they were strewing palms along his way; they did not know any more when they were cheering him; and they did not know any more when they deserted him in the hour of great trial. They did not understand the tears at Gethsemane. He could not weep for himself at such an hour—divinely led—but for those who did not know this great truth, this great love that he came to bear to the world, and that there would be, for the time being, few to accept it; people that were not ready shrunk away. He knew, for the time being, the subject would be under the ban and those few who were faithful would have to hide away in the shadows, as they did in the "little upper room" when they met together. Oh, those were crucial times. Perhaps some of you are old enough to recollect when no man could espouse the side of the negro who was seeking to flee from captivity; if he did he was subject to the law. It was a legal offense to assist in the release of people from slavery if it were proven. Yet we have in mind such saintly lives as Amy Post and her husband, Isaac Post, and Garrit Smith, of New York, a great man in his day, as all of these lives were who, when a slave started for freedom, inspired by his great love of life and liberty, saw to it that he reached the Canada shores in Quaker's garbs, in women's garbs, in anything that would take him there. For he was a child of God. Now they were violating the laws of the United States, but they were not violating the laws of God and of Jesus, and they knew it. They were perfectly ready to meet the result, if they had been imprisoned, as some were. When people know that they are right, neither the temporary praise nor the permanent blame of the world will affect them.

There is a great deal said about having our own views and opinions, but not to be aggressive. While that is true, and you are enjoined "not to cast pearls before swine," you know, however, that the Apostle Paul was very politic, he was familiar with the Romans and he knew the laws of Jerusalem, and he espoused Christianity with all that knowledge, and he said there is just as suitable a time for the expressing of your personal views as there is for doing anything. At the same time if you have a message to bear you must bear it, you must give it to the world, whether you have palms as the result or the crucifix, whether there is the cross or the crown, whether it is a crown of thorns or a crown of jewels. The word that ought to be spoken at a certain time, if you are convinced that you should speak it, should be spoken.

People talk about "keeping up with the procession" and not being "left behind;" they do not want to come into an unpopular movement though feeling that it is in the vanguard of the human march, but they are hanging on the outskirts of the movement. When some one comes to us and says, "I want to know just enough about this great movement. I do not want it to interfere in any way with my present life, but I do not want to be left behind," we have said, "Oh, possibly you will be left behind if that is all you want to know. If you want to know the TRUTH, that is one thing, but there is nothing by which you can be fastened to the OUTSKIRTS of the movement. You are in it, you are one with those who love the subject of truth, or you are not. To us it does not matter what name you call the truth that you espouse, the Love of God, and of God for his children, and the love of humanity, and the great Christ Spirit, this constitutes the essence of religion. Beliefs and creeds are evanescent. You can find great axioms in the Bible that are not taught in the churches to-day, the orthodox evangelical churches, but this greater light has filled the hearts of the people and these liberal movements have sprung up outside of the churches, these movements that are for all the people. This truth, this spirit life, this outpouring of the spirit that has come in the last sixty years has brought the infusing light of the world to-day.

A great many people say: "Oh, yes, I recognize the love of God, but I do not like to have it called by that name, because that is too theological." Some people have come out of the churches and they think God is not God unless spoken of as a god of wrath or a god of vengeance, and they do not want to accept the name of God. But there is no other name by which to speak of Infinite Love and Infinite Wisdom. This is a good name where it expresses what we mean. There can be but one Infinite, however simple the human perception or conception that perceives this, and this they call God. Remember, the agnostics are so afraid of a hymn or a song that has anything that might be called sectarian in it. There can be nothing sectarian in the matter of Christ. Christ is the divine truth-teller, "Jesus hominum christus," the man of God, the truth-teller. If you are a Parsee, we do not object to your accepting the light of Zoroaster. If you are a Buddhist, you must be true to the light of Buddha Gautama. If you are in the Orient, the country of the great Brahminical light, we know that God has not left you, for his testimony is there. If you are a Jew, we know that Moses and the Prophets are to you the great unfoldment of God's light. Even if you are a "Liberal or Reformed Jew" you turn to the original tenets of your people.

But whatever the color of the glass through which the light shines, it is God's light. If you have a dome of blue, and another has a dome of red, and another yellow, the sun shines through that dome, but it does not make God blue, yellow or red; it simply makes the color that is appropriate to your vision and your understanding. So the light that comes to all people is God's light, no matter through what stained glass or shadow it comes. This light that came after the materialism of the Jewish authorities, after the persecutions of the Romans, this light that shone in Judea was for the enlightenment, not only of the Jews, but of the world. It shone eastward and took its flight westward. Afar in the East there are millions and millions of Mohammedans, millions and millions of Buddhists, and followers of others in the Orient. Are they not God's children? We do not deny them their light; we simply say if you follow the light according to your perception and understanding, that will be God's light.

Now these palms that you like to have strewn in your pathway are all very pleasant. Rockefeller and Carnegie and all that kind of people like the praise and approbation of men. We do not say they are wholly selfish. We think Rockefeller thinks he is doing the best he can with his millions when he endows schools and churches; he does not know about those people who need other things than religion and education, but he would get no worldly applause by helping them. When Mr. Carnegie endows libraries he thinks he is doing good, but the only good is in the intention. The widow that passes her mite for the help of human beings gives that which is a thousand times more valuable, because it is given with a divine spirit.

To-day we are in the midst of great events and occurrences in life; very few people stop or pause excepting on Sunday, not even to consider the great meaning of that dramatic enactment two thousand years ago. Very few people pause to consider that they too may be treading upon dangerous grounds when they seek for human praise and popularity. There is no sure foundation excepting in the light of Infinite truth, in that which comes to your conscience and your understanding as the great revealment of spirit power and love. If you have this in the name of Jesus it is well; if you have it in any other name or way it is well. For we do not believe that God has left any human conscience and the human spirit without his guiding light, even if people do not know the name. But let us not reject the name because the Roman Catholic, the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian, the Baptist or Methodist interpret it differently.

Let us take the Sermon on the Mount, the only recorded sermon of Jesus, let us take the only commandment that he ever gave, which we call the eleventh commandment: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another;" let us take this as expressive of what he meant, and see if in the great hour of human triumph, those Beatitudes upon the Mount of Olives that have crucified all of the selfish man. The evidence of its divine origin is that the light of this spiritual teaching has come down through the kings and rulers, who were undoubtedly selfish, and through the councils of Nice and Trent with their interpretations and misinterpretations, with its simple lines of light and truth, and the Golden Rule that is accepted as a light for human beings to follow. Should we not rejoice and be glad for whatever teaching, in whatever name has brought a similar truth to the world Shall we not be glad for that great recurrent period that now sings songs of hosannah and proclaims the gladness to the world.

In the name of the new truth that world is growing to a greater perception of God's love. Ministering spirits and angels are crossing the barriers of creeds and dogmas, and rolling the stones away from the sepulcher of human lives, and span the unseen spaces with the revealment of love. Not only is space and time measurably conquered by the science of the earth, but the new revealments regarding the spirit have taken possession of human thought. Shall these be cast aside? Shall not the people receive them as a portion of that light, as the present manifestation of truth? Do we reject the sunshine to-day because of the sun that shone in Egypt and Jerusalem? Will we reject this coming autumn because of the wheat that was conserved by Joseph for himself, his brothers and the king of Egypt thousands of years ago?

All God's love is here and now; his revealments are here and now, if we will have them. Ministering spirits and angelic messengers are here and now; and the great triumph of entering into Hierosalem. (Hierosalem is not simply Jerusalem, Jerusalem over there deserted of all excepting the Turks.) It is the great CITY OF THE SUN OF PEACE within the human spirit, whose triumphal banners shall wave, whose palms shall be strewn beneath your feet with every recurrent hosannah such time as you have put the selfishness and striving of the dust beneath your feet and obtained the great victory to bear sorrow, to tread the stony way, to bear the cross, to meet with rebuffs and even crucifixion and to say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

DEAFNESS

Successfully Treated

By the Simplest Methods Yet Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of the cases of deafness brought to our attention are the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed relief is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying hence the inability of specialists to always effect a cure. Neither can ear drums cure deafness. But there is a scientific treatment for deafness and catarrh which is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the vibration of sound. Actina is also very successful in relieving ringing noises in the head. We have known people afflicted with this distressing trouble for years to be entirely relieved by a few week's use. Actina has always been very successful in the treatment of hay fever, asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds, headache and other troubles that are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina will be sent on trial, postpaid. Write us about your case. Our advice will be free as well as a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Disease. THE SPIRIT'S WARNING.

A Chapter in the Experience of Justin Hulburd.

To the Editor:—I send the following which will to some extent illustrate the extreme religious bigotry from which Justin Hulburd was so often the victim. The great number of similar instances which he experienced would fill one or more large volumes. I give them as related to me by Justin and spirits who were cognizant of the facts:

While Mr. Warren and I were sojourning at the New York Hotel on Broadway, New York, we received a note of invitation from the beautiful Lola Montez, to join her and a party of friends to take a sail on the Hudson River, on the beautiful floating palace, St. John, the next day.

While I was lying down taking my afternoon nap the voice woke me up saying: "Tell Lola Montez not to take her friends on the steamer as she intended to do the next morning. Tell her to wait three or four days."

I told Mr. Warren what the voice had said. He immediately dispatched a note to Lola telling her of the warning I had received, and that she had better come and take dinner with us at the hotel and we would talk it over.

She reached our hotel about half past six and I explained to her what the voice had said. Then she said, "We will not go."

After dinner I furnished her with pen, ink and paper. She wrote a note to each friend saying she had put off that sail for three or four days, and would notify them in time when they would make the excursion up the Hudson.

The steamer she intended taking her party on took fire the day she intended going, and was burned to the water's edge and many of the passengers were lost.

Six days afterward we made a visit to Newburg on the Hudson, visiting the house known as Washington's headquarters.

While we were all standing out in front of the house Lola addressed the company saying, "Friends, where we now stand, the greatest General the world ever knew stood—right here—and looked down on one of the most beautiful views in the world. His name was George Washington, the father of the Great Republic."

Then we sang America and the Star Spangled Banner. After that Lola took the man who had charge of the place to one side—I think she gave him a piece of money.

He permitted us to eat our lunch off the same table that General Washington ate from; he filled the General's tea-kettle with clean water and filled our silver mugs with the same. She asked us to stand up and hold our mugs in our hands while she and the company sang, "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow." After that we drank General Washington's health and gave three cheers for America, the land of the brave and the free.

In a few minutes I was under control and a spirit said, "It is not the land of the free yet, and will not be until every black man and woman is released from bondage and stands on a footing of equality with the white race."

Lola asked the spirit, "Do you believe that such a condition as that will come to pass in the United States? I do not think the South will allow that." The spirit said, "We will compel them, and the black man will hold some of your high offices in the boasted land of freedom." To that Mr. Warren and some of the others gave three cheers.

After they had finished cheering, the man who had the care of the place said to Lola: "If I had known that you had a witch with you, I wouldn't have allowed you into the house; but for God's sake never tell of this to any one. What would the people say if they knew a witch had drank out of General Washington's tea-kettle, and one no bigger than a walking cane. God have mercy on me this day. I'll get down on my knees to-night and pray to the Lord Jesus Christ to forgive me for the crime I have committed."

Lola said, "Suppose we pray to God now for his blessing and protection."

He said, "Not until we put the witch out." He grabbed me by the collar of my jacket and the seat of my pants and threw me out of doors before anyone could stop him.

They say he shut the door and locked it, and placing his back against it said: "now, lady, please pray, and see that you do it strong, too."

Lola offered up a beautiful prayer, asking God to bless them all, even to the little witch outside. At that the man got very angry, opened the door and ordered them all out.

When they came out I was dancing the "Highland Fling." He told them if they didn't take me away from there he would kill me. Mr. Warren had given him a five-dollar gold-piece; he threw that and the money Lola had given him after us, saying, "Take your cursed old money, no good can come of it."

When we went down to the dock to go on board the steamer, four of the company—three women and one man—refused to go on board the steamer with me, and waited for the next boat. One of the women was the beautiful Mrs. Keough and traveled with the great Edwin Forrest.

Ten years afterward she became an ardent Spiritualist and a great friend of Doct. Newton.

Can anyone truthfully assert that religious bigotry was a past condition in the Nineteenth Century?

CATHEDRAL AISLES.

Dim and cool the aisles stretch onward,
In the vast cathedral old,
Ever shall the leafy woodlands
Gems of verdant beauty hold.
Rock-strewn, is its mossy carpet,
Graceful fern leaves lightly sway,
And the aisles reach on in shadow,
Far from dazzling light of day.

Through the grand cathedral arches,
Swells a murmur, sweet and low,
Nature's fingers sweep her harpstrings
And the music's rippling flow
Drifts away into the silence
Of the temple God has made,
Where, in wondrous rock-bound fortress,
Unknown grandeur oft is laid.

Massive rise cathedral pillars,
Patriarchs of Father Time,
Staunch and steadfast stand these monarchs,
Waving leaf-crown'd heads sublime
At their feet the brooks are flowing,
Murmuring a tender song,
As they dance 'mid light and shadow,
Through the aisles and arches long.

Ah! the grand cathedral organ
That is played where wild winds sing;
Ah! the Heaven-born sonatas,
That through forest shadows ring,
Wailing when the storm is shrieking,
Softly keyed when breezes play
O'er the marvelous creation
Of the wild-woods' tangled way.

Lofty spires of God's cathedral,
Watching over fertile vale.
Wild and free, they lift their fastness
To the sweeping summer gale,
Shadowing the waving grain-fields,
Sheltering the homestead old,
Everlasting is the glory
Of each verdure-clad stronghold.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES OF YOUR POEMS sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Has anyone a "Life of Oberlin the Pastor?" If so, write to this office stating price.

As this paper goes to press Dr. T. Wilkins, an attache of The Progressive Thinker, is having a hand-shake and general good time at the Clinton, Iowa Camp. He was the Vice-President of that camp during its heaviest battles for existence, and will no doubt be met by many of his old-time friends—who are still on this side—and the many from the other side. He goes to pay his respects to Morris Pratt School day, and tell his ideas of education and the usefulness of that institution to Spiritualism, as he sees it.

Mrs. Lole F. Prior writes from No. 126 Wellington Parade, Melbourne, Australia: "I shall be in Melbourne for the next six months, after which time I am expecting to leave for South Africa, where I will fill a year's engagement, visiting each point where there is a society."

R. W. Tennant writes: "We again take great pleasure in reporting another good evening's lecture and large attendance at theUniversal Occult Society. The lecture by Mr. Mansell of Boston, was listened to with marked attention, and contained many words of advice to all Spiritualists. He leaves us for a sojourn across the Lake, with our well wishes for an enjoyable time, and for his future welfare. Mr. Coe, who has promised to speak for us next Sunday, entertained us with one of his vocal selections. Our president Mrs. Maggie Henry, assisted by Mrs. Vaughn, Mrs. L. De Loux and Mrs. Lyons, concluded the evening programme with many interesting messages."

E. D. Hammond writes from New York; "Harper's Magazine is engaged in the laborious task of threshing over the dead and defunct orthodox straw-pile, with a celebrated Baptist Divine as chief flail artist. It will be interesting to watch out for the results of the operation."

Mrs. Alex McCutcheon, secretary, writes from Watertown N. Y.: "The First Progressive Spiritual Society, has lately re-organized and chartered with the State Association. Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, our State Missionary, worked with us one month, and it was through her efforts the society has been made stronger. We intend to secure her services again in the near future. Rev. Adelaide Cooper of Syracuse, N. Y., gave us two lectures, followed with messages and reading of articles, on June 28. She is an honest, spiritual medium, and gives promise of good work. Our Sunday afternoon circles in the Temple are beneficial to all who attend. We have a few mediums in our society who can give some comforting messages. I am an interested reader of The Progressive Thinker, and when I have read the numbers I let someone else have them. I send them by mail to my friends and relatives, who are hungry for knowledge and have not the opportunity of listening to any of our gifted mediums on Spiritualism. The seed dropped by the wayside will have taken root, when some instrument will be guided by the spirit world to spread the truth."

L. E. Beal writes from Lewiston, Me.: "Our theological school here has closed up for want of students. It has run several years with more teachers than pupils at the expense of the college. They lay it to students going to other places, but I trust people are growing wiser."

Barney Leitz writes from Dunkirk, Ind.: "Mrs. Sarah A. Crossfield of 723 Elm street, Muncie, Ind., was the speaker at the funeral of Mrs. Hannah Miller, who passed to spirit life here, June 24, in her 71st year. A firm advocate of Spiritualism. Many of our church members were present, and quite a few expressed themselves that it was the best talk they had ever heard on occasions of this kind. Mrs. Crossfield is an eloquent, logical and convincing speaker. Any who may be in need of a speaker on subjects pertaining to the Spiritual philosophy will make no mistake in procuring her services."

Secretary writes: "The Church of All Souls will close through the warm weather.

W. H. Gordon writes from 1511 Third avenue Seattle, Wash.: "I have been a worker in a small way in the spiritual field for the past twenty years, but now desire to extend my field of services, and wish to announce that my services can be had free, except actual expenses; some one furnish room, another board, and collecting transportation. I am a good clairvoyant. I see spirits, and not gold mines, and have some physical phenomena. I speak independent, entranced and by inspiration."

Mrs. Mary Weaver will be in Clinton for a week, resting her tired nerves. Her constant work in the field of private readings—considering she is busy from morning till night—gives her little time for recreation and the rest that anyone ought to take. It will do her much good to have the change of vibrations for a time.

Mrs. Nora E. Hill goes to a Kansas campmeeting on an engagement this week, and will remain away through the month of August.

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, president of the State Spiritualist Association of Texas, is now lecturing every Sunday at Dallas. She is greeted with good audiences.

BEAR IN MIND that the Editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

TAKE NOTICE.—Correspondents are required when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink...Write on one side of the paper only, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

Mr. Parmenter writes from Lawton, Okla.: "We had with us at the Church of Spiritual Light last Sunday, Rev. S. E. G. Thorp, from Oklahoma City. We hold services both morning and evening in the Hetherington hall. After a little business in the evening in regard to our State Convention to be held in Lawton, Sept. 9 and 10, Mrs. Thorp gave us a nice talk along the line of organization, after which she gave some of her excellent messages, all of which were recognized. She is expected to be with us again in two weeks, the 16th."

Mrs. Hattie F. Rupert, corresponding secretary, writes: "Members and friends of the Band of Harmony will please take notice that our next "Summer Social" will be held at the home of Mrs. M. A. Burland (instead of at Mrs. Druliner's), 600 Englewood avenue, corner of Normal boulevard, Thursday afternoon and evening, Aug. 13. There will be a "tea party" and cup readings in the afternoon, with mediums in attendance. Coffee will be served at 6 o'clock; coffee checks, ten cents. Ladies will please bring lunch for themselves and friends. Interesting exercises in the evening. To reach there take Halsted street car to 63d street; then transfer and go east to Normal avenue; or take South Side elevated and get off at Parnell avenue; walk to 63d street; go east one block and north one block. All cordially invited; come and bring your friends. Mrs. Druliner expects to entertain later."

Dr. W. M. Keeler, of Washington, D. C., who has been seriously ill for several months with blood-poisoning, has resumed his work in spirit photography, and expects to be at Lily Dale in a few days. Dr. Keeler is anxious to go before the board of managers of the camp under test conditions. In point of work Dr. Keeler is the oldest spirit photographer now alive, he having taken these pictures forty years ago.

Mrs. Maud K. Gates, of Winfield, Kans., No. 612 N. Manning street, writes: "I am very anxious to come in touch with the many different societies in this state as well as the adjoining states. I am a speaker and message bearer. Can furnish references if wanted. I have been a worker in this beautiful soul-satisfying truth for several years, and having been recently ordained, I feel very anxious to be up and doing, for I am helping the spirit-world to remove the veil of ignorance and replacing there a knowledge that cannot be shaken. If there are any societies in need of a worker I will be only too glad to assist them."

Letter From Niantic, Ct.

To the Editor:—Will you kindly allow me a few words in OUR paper, The Progressive Thinker, that keeps us in touch with all the most desirable thought extant, and feeds us with the food that makes for growth.

We have had with us for the month of July, Mrs. Sada Louisa Hand, who has now left us for her new field of labor. She has taken our best wishes with her. The society presented her with a set of Resolutions, but it took the Ladies' Aid to give her a reception and present her with a befitting gift, which, when she looks at it with its pearl eye and Forget-me-not setting, will make her heart rejoice in future memory's hours.

July 29 was State Day and we had for our speaker Miss Elizabeth Harlow, who has gained a well-earned reputation by her own push and energy, and one we all love, as it was our camp to which she came in her first starting out, filling an engagemetn that another one had to cancel.

Now a word about our State Day. It had long been the wish of some of our older members to have one day set apart for this purpose, and so have a grand reunion from all over the state. This year through the combined efforts of some of the leaders, it was made possible. A vote was taken to have another on July 30, 1909, and in that way we will feel we are on the forward march towards our goal.

Many of the starters of our camp have moved on, but others have risen and put their hands to the plow, and to-day we have as pretty a camp as you will find anywhere on the coast, from New York to Portland, Maine, and no extravagant prices for living.

The town has started in to enforce the old Blue Laws, because people will not go this hot weather and sit in an old stuffy church, when the trolley will take the children and their tired mothers out where the pines and the sea-breezes blow their cooling, fragrant breath, and, of course, the fathers will follow, and the boys will hide a base ball in the picnic basket. It would have done the readers of our grand old paper good to see the enthusiasm shown on the eve of August 3rd, when to improve the dock, a Farmer's Dance was held in the pavilion. First came our janitor, leading his old white nag on his dump cart, filled with merry-makers, bags tied on its feet so as not to mar the floor, and the most fantastic masquerader was the most envied for the time. It is reported that $100 was taken in that night, and at 25 cents apiece it certainly shows what a few can do when they all put shoulder to shoulder together and work for one common cause.

We must speak of the improvements the society has wrought in raising and painting the rostrum, new seats, etc. The Ladies Aid has bought a canvas awning to protect the people from the rays of the sun. Spiritualists are coming and going.

Spiritualism is growing and leveling the greater mass of humanity in its many avenues of thought.

THAT SPOKANE MARRIAGE.

Some Reflections Thereon by Harrison D. Barrett, Who Presents Some Valuable Statistics.

To the Editor of the Anaconda Standard:—As Editor-at-Large, of the National Spiritualists' Association of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, my attention has been called to an editorial in your columns (July 12th) entitled "Burlesque Marriage." In the interest of truth, and as an act of justice to the thousands of people who are believers in the Religion of Spiritualism, I respectfully request a portion of your valuable space in which to correct the mis-statements contained in that editorial.

There are in round numbers 760 local Spiritualist Societies scattered through all the states and territories of the Union. There are 23 State Associations in actual existence, and working under charters granted them by their respective states. The great majority of the local societies and all of the state associations, with a single exception, are united with the National Spiritualists' Association, the supreme head of the denomination in America.

The N. S. A., the State Associations and the great majority of the chartered locals are incorporated as religious societies, or church organizations. The religion of Spiritualism has been recognized as a part of the Christian system of faith in nearly every State in the Union. The Spiritualists through their States and National Association have adopted a declaration of principles, or statement of faith. They have formulated and adopted Rules and Usages and Regulations governing the Ordination of Ministers. These rules, usages and regulations have been submitted to the best legal talent in all sections of the Union, and have been declared by said talent to be in perfect legal form, based upon law governing religious corporations, or corporations not for profit. The legal minds passing upon the ordination papers issued under the Rules, Usages and Regulations in question have declared that persons thus ordained have the same legal standing as do the Ministers of any other Christian denomination.

The last report made to me when I was president of the N. S. A. as to the number of Spiritualist Ministers in the United States, and Dominion of Canada, revealed the fact that some 350 persons of both sexes had been advanced to the sacred office of Ministers of the Gospel of Spiritualism. These people have the right to perform marriage ceremonies, to enter penal institutions and Insane Asylums as Spiritualist advisers to the inmates thereof. They are also exempt from jury duty by virtue of their positions as religious teachers. In short, they have the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed by their Ministerial Brethren in other denominations.

It so happens that Mrs. Cora K. Smith, of Spokane, Washington, is a legally ordained Minister of the Religion of Spiritualism. Her papers have been granted to her under the law of the State of Washington, duly approved by a local society in Spokane, further approved by the State Spiritualists' Association of Washington, and yet further sanctioned by the National Spiritualist Association of the United States of America. As an Ordained Minister of our faith she had a perfect legal right to perform the marriage ceremony to which you take exception. I do not know what form she observed or followed. So long as she obeyed the law I do not know that it matters what special formula is followed by the Minister, or what line of questioning he may adopt. The one essential thing is to obey the law, and to see to it that the people are legally married. This the Rev. Mrs. Cora Smith did, and there is no more question about her right to perform this ceremony than there is as to the right of Archbishop Ireland to do the same thing for members of his flock.

Spiritualism teaches that God is Love, and if Love joins men and women together, it would seem to a man of ordinary intelligence that they also have the approval of God in consummating their union. Heaven is Harmony, and Discord is Hell. I prefer Heaven to Hell, Harmony to Discord. It has not been my privilege to read "Three Weeks," by Elinor Glyn, to which the writer makes reference, hence I do not know her standard of ethics. I do know that Spiritualism stands for a pure and noble home life, emphasizes the sanctity, beauty and glory of marriage, and above everything else, enjoins its people to be close observers of the moral, civil, and religious law.

Yours for truth.

HARRISON D. BARRETT.
Editor-at-Large.

Texas Spiritualists, Attention!

The eleventh annual convention of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists will meet at Dallas, Sept. 25, lasting three days.

Each chartered society must send delegates, and per capita tax should be sent the secretary, Mrs. Annie J. Quinn, 218 N. Hill avenue, Station B, Dallas, Texas. Let every Spiritualist in the state take a personal interest in this meeting, and we can accomplish miracles. Send per capita tax and notice of delegates as soon as possible. One delegate for every ten members or major fraction thereof."

Fort Worth, Texas.

The Vicksburg, Mich., Camp.

On Thursday Mrs. Morrell gave a masterful address on "Meditation," which must be heard to be appreciated. A few brief words could not do it justice.

On Friday she closed her engagement with a lecture on "The Power of Thought," in which she logically and eloquently pointed out the possibilities wrapped up within the human soul.

On Saturday, Mrs. Crawford, of Detroit, occupied the platform, in the absence of Mr. Erwood, who was unable to reach here on account of delay of trains. Mrs. Crawford is a new worker in the field of camps. She held the attention of the audience by a short discourse on the "Practical Benefits to be Received from Spiritualism," followed by messages, which gladdened many a heart.

On Sunday the large auditorium was filled to the doors to listen to the indefatigable worker in the cause of truth, W. J. Erwood, of Elkhart, Ind. In the morning he gave a forceful address upon "The Mission of Spiritualism." At 2 p. m. he spoke upon "The Bible and Spiritualism," giving many quotations from the Bible to prove the manifestations of Spiritualism.

At the close of the discourse he called to the platform the venerable worker, Mrs. Lois Waisbrooker, who gave a poem expressive of her views.

Mrs. Crawford followed both lectures with messages, which were well received.

On Monday and Tuesday the conferences were ably conducted by Mrs. Crawford.

Tuesday Mr. Erwood returned from his home trip, bringing with him three bright little girls, two of whom were his, who are enjoying the camp life. In the afternoon he gave an interesting and helpful discourse upon the subject, "Believe in Yourself."

At 8 p. m. the campers assembled in the auditorium, to the strains of the wedding march rendered by Miss Bentley. Mrs. Anna N. Hall, of Mattewan, Mich., and Mr. Oscar A. Lowry, of Montpelier, Ohio, came up the aisle to the platform and were united in marriage by Mr. Erwood. The ceremony was very beautiful and impressive. After receiving the congratulations of their many friends, they repaired to the home of friends in the village, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Waite.

Wednesday at the conference the subject of "Healing" was ably discussed.

In the afternoon Mr. Erwood gave an eloquent discourse upon subjects given by the audience, followed by a few messages, which were very clearly given and were all recognized. Following a solo by Miss Giberson, Mr. Erwood, in behalf of the campers, presented Mr and Mrs. Lowry with a few tokens of their regard.

On Saturday, Mr. Barrett and Mr. Austin, editor of Reason, will be with us, from whom some spiritual feasts are expected.

LOELLA BROOKS.

Niantic Camp, Conn.

To the Editor:—We held our State Day, July 29th and had a successful and enjoyable day. Nature was very good to us, blessing us with joyous sunlight, which brightened the dark pines and brought out the fragrant odors from them and the warm earth beneath, which, combined with the blue water of the cove and the river which encloses our camp on three sides, made a scene of beauty that touched the hearts of many of our visitors.

An open-air meeting was held at the rostrum, which has been newly painted, raised, and new seats added, covered by an awning above to protect from the sunshine.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow, one of the most energetic and philosophical workers in our ranks, was the speaker for the day. The morning service was devoted to the Great Need of Organization, by local, state and national societies, for growth, strength and sustaining power. Many names were added to our State membership, and dollars to its treasury. The subject of the afternoon lecture was "Life and its Obligations," given in a forceful manner, which deeply interested the audience. Some of our loyal friends from Norwich rendered beautiful songs and violin solos. After the services the members af the Ladies' Aid held a reception in their building on Broadway, serving tea and light refreshments to all visitors.

This was our first "State Day" for this camp, but we have voted to continue the same each year, knowing that it is a step forward for better in every way.

We have missed the weekly visit of The Progressive Thinker, and if you will favor us with a few copies I will see that some new names are sent, and old ones renewed. Kindly give us space in your grand and noble paper for our State Day exercises that we may be congratulated on our progress and loyalty to Spiritualism.

MRS. H. C. BODEN.
Chairman Speakers Committee.

BRILLIANT WORDS.

As They Emanated from the Lips of the Lamented Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

I have had the supreme pleasure of seeing a man—once a slave—sitting in the seat of his former owner and master in the Congress of the United States. I have had that pleasure, and when I saw it my eyes filled with tears. I felt that we had carried out the Declaration of Independence—that we had given reality to it, and breathed the breath of life into its every word. I felt that our flag would float over and protect the colored man and his little children standing straight in the sun, just the same as though he were white and worth a million. * * * Slavery has been practiced and defended by all nations in some form. It has been defended by nearly every pulpit. From the profits derived from the slave trade churches have been built, cathedrals reared and priests paid. Slavery has been blessed by bishop, by cardinal and pope. It has received the sanction of statesmen, of kings, and of queens. It has been defended by the throne, the pulpit and the bench. Monarchs have shared in the profits. Clergymen have taken their part of the spoils, reciting passages of Scripture in its defense at the same time, and judges have taken their portion in the name of equity and law.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Who, being dead, yet speaketh.

J. H. Collins Lecturing at Creal Springs, Ill.

To the Editor:—I have been tarrying here at this health resort for the past ten days. The pastor of the Methodist church treated me with marked courtesy, and when I informed him I had been a P. E. and missionary in the far west, his church doors flew open and I have been busy lecturing to increasing audiences on "Where Is Heaven;" "The Immortality of Man," "Progress of the Human Spirit," and "The Resurrection of the Spiritual Body." I find such are live issues and engage the attention of thinking people. Yesterday, Sunday, at the pastor's request, I spoke, occupying his place, morning and evening. Morning my subject was, "Blessed Are the Pure in Heart for They Shall See God." The theme was harmonious with the audience, and was met by the old-time Methodist with joy and fervor. But at night my theme was drawn from, "Are they not all Ministering Spirits?" This gave me full swing to open Spiritualism, both ancient and modern. I introduced evidence from the dying chamber as well as the room of the scientific investigator.

I am sure my discourse did not create the emotion of the morning's address, but was convinced it provoked more thought, and I hope will result in more lasting fruit.

I go from here to Marion, the County seat, a beautiful little city of about ten thousand inhabitants. Those desiring my services can address me at this latter place. J. H. COLLINS.

Mt. Pleasant Park Camp.

After the intense heat of two weeks, Old Sol has hidden himself behind a cloud this forenoon, and it really seems good to be in these beautiful natural groves and drink in the divine inspiration that permeates the entire universe. There is nothing that can lend us so much inspiration as nature.

There are many workers on the ground, and all seem to be having their share of labor.

Our camp opened with wonderful inspired lectures by Cora L. V. Richmond.

Following her came Brother Benjamin F. Wilson with his excellent lectures and lessons. He leaves us to-night, and we will miss his genial smile and words of cheer and generosity.

Mrs. Bellman arrived at our beautiful grounds Sunday. She has delivered two very beautiful spiritual lectures, such as only she can give.

Mrs. Laura M. Jones, of St. Louis, has filled her engagement with the Association as a message bearer, and has more than pleased all with her spirit messages.

All are eagerly awaiting Elizabeth Harlow's coming, for we know we shall be lifted up and out of ourselves, and soar away for a time into the vast space of infinite thought and truth.

Dear Dr. Peebles, I understand, comes to us next Sunday with a storehouse full of good things. And all will welcome him and Edgar Emerson with his message work. All will regret the closing day of our spiritual love feast this season.

Old Glory floats majestically over the ground, and out to the breeze from many homes, on the old camp grounds, reminding us that we have true patriotism in our minds, and that we will remain true to our cause and country.

ELIZABETH J. JAQUET.

Grand Ledge, Mich., Camp.

Sunday, July 26, was opening day for Grand Ledge camp. The opening address was given by Mrs. A. E. Sheets, whose work at this camp and other places as well is too well and favorably known to need commendation, for all who have heard her realize the true zeal with which she enters in her work. There are a number of fine message bearers present, among whom we note: Mrs. N. B. Russell, of Grand Ledge; Mrs. Christine Oswald, Chicago, Ill.; and Mrs. Flora E. Fulgheim, of Battle Creek, Mich., whom the Association welcomes as a young, but earnest worker, who has entered the field of labor with bright and glowing prospects in different phases of mediumship. Mr. Charles Barnes, trumpet medium, of Warsaw, Ind., is an old time worker, and is meeting with fine results along his phase of mediumship, and also assisting in message work.

A social time worthy of mention is a picnic held by a club of ladies, of whom Mrs. Sheets is a member. The day was enjoyed by all present.

At the close of the week which completed Mrs. Sheets' engagement for the time, all felt that a benediction of grace had rested upon each and everyone who had not only renewed old ties, but had formed a new ones, lasting and true, and may Sister Sheets go out into other fields of labor and receive such hearty comradeship as has been expressed in this camp.

The entertainment committee with Mrs. Fulgheim as chairman, gave a very unique entertainment Friday evening, entitled "Grandma's Birthday Party." A good crowd was in attendance.

Next week we have with us Oscar A. Edgarly and George Letford.

CORRESPONDENT.

It Was Daniel Dunglass Home.

Dr. Peebles does well to call attention to the error of magician Kellar in speaking of the medium with whom Prof. Crookes' experimented as Edgar Home. But Dr. Peebles is himself in error in saying that it was David Home. This medium's name was Daniel Dunglass Home, and a good brief biography of him is to be found in the book "Planchette; The Despair of Science," written by Epes Sargent. H. M. WILLIAMS.

Resolved, that God raised up the Presbyterian church, South, to protect and perpetuate that institution.

Great heavens!! Can it be possible that the Christian church ever defended human slavery?

TOM WATSON'S OPINION.

And Various Other Matters Connected With Articles in The Progressive Thinker.

To the Editor:—"Tom Watson's Opinion" on the power of the Catholic Church is a great article of serious truth. It is alarming, and I would rather see our old earth blown to atoms than have the history of the dark ages repeated. It is something awful to contemplate, when we reflect that such a dominant power could stop the great work of science, education, free thought, free speech, free press, progress and unfoldment of the human races. Let us hope that some mighty unseen power will so aid the cause of freedom, and enlightenment of the masses everywhere, that knowledge, truth, virtue, and love of humanity, may in some manner overwhelm the forces of darkness that would forever keep the people of the nations in ignorance, prejudice and superstition.

Harrison D. Barrett's suggestions, in regard to "Spiritualists' Camp-Meetings," are worthy of careful study and consideration.

I wish every orthodox minister in the land would read the dissertation of Judge Parish B. Ladd, on "The Rival Giants;" also the people in general. It is a subject worthy of deep thought and attention by every student or truth-seeker.

This world would be much better than it is were it not for the schemes of the kings, popes, priests, demagogues and politicians, who in all ages have deceived mankind on order to control them.

OBITUARIES.

J. B. Levet, 84 years of age, and one of the best known citizens of San Diego, Cal., passed away in his sleep one day last week. He was a pioneer in the state, having gone to San Francisco in the early fifties. He was influential in the early life of the northern city, but was forced to leave and come here on account of his health, in 1864.

THE BRAIN.

A Highly Important Work in Reference to It.

To the Editor: In No. 972 of your paper you have an editorial entitled "Parallel Cases." As physicians we know a great deal more about the brain and its functions than a few years ago. It is wonderful with what precision we can now localize brain lesions. There has recently been published by Dodd, Mead & Company, New York, a book on "Brain and Personality," or the physical relations of the brain to the mind, by W. H. Thompson, M.D., LL.D., etc., written more especially for the ordinary lay reader than for the physician. H. V. SWERINGEN.

IMPORRTANT RESOLUTIONS.

Question for Discussion by Ministerial Societies.

Resolved, That the Christian church is responsible for much of the disbelief in a future life by its implied rejection of the ancient phenomena of Spiritualism as recorded in the Bible and its open and pronounced rejection of the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism.

Resolved, That Robert G. Ingersoll spoke the truth in his reply to the reporter of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, asking his opinion of Spiritualism, when he said, "Christians laugh at the miracles to-day, attested by folks they know, but believe the miracles of long ago, attested by folks they did not know."

Such resolutions as these must be discussed in ministerial associations sooner or later. The question coming to the front is either materialism or Spiritualism. Which will it be?

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of
HUDSON TUTTLE.
Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

I. Gott, Johannesberg, South Africa:—Q.—We are rather out of the tide of the Great Spiritual movement. Our mediums drift into fortune telling, and to bring out a crowd we have to depend on "Sensation," and this is discouraging. Can you not put us in touch with some one who could come as "missionary" to this continent? We, of course, would do everything that lies in our power to meet his efforts. To one having psychic gifts, a great work is waiting here. We want an earnest student of our philosophy who can talk to us of the great ideals of Spiritualism. I wish I dared indulge a hope that you might visit us.

A.—My dear brother, in spirit I shall visit you, and perhaps others, more beneficial to the cause, seeing this call, will come to you for the upbuilding and popularizing of the great philosophy of life.

Meantime, let me suggest that it is not because you have no mediums, but because you do not take the means whereby sensitives may be developed. Mediums in America and the outgrowth of circles, and you under the Southern Cross have the same privileges as the peoples under the polar star. Gather in harmonious seances, commence with singing, and reading from some instructive book or paper on Spiritualism. Fraternally discuss the subject, and thus prepared, hold a circle. It will not be many sessions before some member will show more or less marked sensitiveness. After this, cultivate along the line indicated.

I earnestly believe, your home developed mediums will give you more satisfaction than the far fetched and untried.

It would appear that mediumship, at low tide as it is in South Africa, is affected by the same disease it is here. It drifts into fortune telling and commercialism. It is the sad story of all spiritual awakenings in the dawn of all religions; in the revivals and awakenings, the spiritual belief is made to minister to greed, and cupidity! Its cure? Develop your own mediums. Shield them from all influences, and allow no interruption of the circle work. Proceed with the carefulness and circumspection of scientists, and in the broad and righteous measure you seek shall you receive.

Why wait for outside influence? For the coming of a missionary? Are not your spirit friends waiting, waiting for you to set the door ajar?

In your society you have many sensitives who only await the awakening of the powers. The means is in your hands.

Mrs. L. Helzman:—Q.—where can I obtain book in the German language on Spiritualism?

A.—A long list of works on Spiritualism published by him is issued by Wilhelm Besser, Leipzig, Germany. I don't think any publisher in this country carries these books, but they can be obtained by sending direct to the publisher.

* * *

H. G. Purinton:—Q.—What vows have to be taken by outsiders to be accepted members of the Catholic church?

A.—Full, complete and unconditional acceptance of the Catholic creed, confirmed by observance of the forms and ceremonies of that church.

A renegade Protestant will find it difficult, if not impossible, to become a trusted member or a leader. The controlling priests well know that if the pretended convert is of ordinary intelligence he must be a hypocrite ytrading on his "conversion" and rate him accordingly.

* * *

Charles L. Waffle:—Q.—We read in John 5:39 that Christ advised his hearers to search the Scriptures to learn what they testified of him. Then again it is said of Paul and Silas that in going from place to place they stopped and taught in the synagogues, and that they were received more favorably at Berea than previous places, in that they received the word with more readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily to see whether these things were so.

1. In what form were the Scriptures kept at that time, on written parchment or in print in book form?

2. Who had charge of them and were they accepted by all classes and issued for distribution? And were the common people sufficiently educated to read them if given opportunity, including Christ and his disciples? And again, were the Jewish synagogues open at that time for the free discussion of various religious and conflicting faiths?

A.—The above questions carry their answers with them. No one has ever claimed that at the time of the apostles there existed a line of the books which were compiled into the New Testament. The Scriptures spoken of by Christ were the personal writings of the Jews. These were executed on parchment, and kept by the priesthood. If accessible to any other class they would have been uninstructive, as the priests were the only ones who could read or write. The dense ignorance of these half-nomadic savages who formed the "chosen people" is impossible to understand at present.

The Jews were most bigoted and intolerant, and allowed no discussion of opposing doctrines in their synagogues. It was not their custom to allow any and every wandering prophet to enter the synagogue and exhort the people.

The source of all these passages is transparent. They were not written by men acquainted with the manners and customs of the time, but by forgers long afterwards, writing what they fancied the romantic career of the Christ and disciples would be. The story sacrifices history, chronology, the customs of the people, and puts the "Scripture," to which the names of ignorant fishermen are subscribed, who could not have known one letter of their alphabet from each other in the Greek, the language of another people! These evangelists wrote several centuries after they were dead! And the most peculiar thing about the New Testament Greek is that it is not the pure language spoken by the Hellenes, but the barbarous Greek used by the monks and priests of the Middle Ages.

The question arises: Why was the New Testament written in Greek? Is it not self-evident that it was because there was not a soul in Christendom able to write in the Hebrew, which was a dead language long ages before the Christian era?

The "Sacred Book" must be written in ancient language, and Greek was the most available.

Dr. Brown makes an able effort to show that there was an earlier literature, which the Hebrews appropriated. It would seem that there must have been, for the foundation of the books of the Old Testament, as the traditions of India formed the basis of the Christ-legends.

* * *

Wm. Phillips:—Q.—What is mind? What is intelligence?

A.—Mind is the conscious ego; that which thinks, feels, and wills. What it is, in its essence, can no more be defined than can force or matter.

Intelligence is often used as synonymous with mind, the real distinction being that intelligence is the product.

Perhaps as good a definition of mind as can be given is that of Sully: "Mind is the sum of our process of knowing, our feeling of pleasure and pain, our voluntary doings." What it is that thinks, wills, enjoys, feels, or how, no psychologist has in the slightest explained.

Intelligence is distinct from matter through and by which it is manifested.

Mrs. C. A. Lenks:—Q.—What is the address of Mrs. Matteson? Where is Dr. W. S. Rowley?

A.—Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Rowley, who gained a brief notoriety as a "telegraphic medium," has disappeared from public view. His methods would not bear the test. His system was to place the telegraph key in a box of which two slates formed the bottom and top. The sounder was placed on a distant table, connected by wires. Dr. Rowley placed his hands on the top of the slate, and the sounder gave messages in the Morse alphabet. Really he had the slates so nicely adjusted to a spring that the slightest pressure broke the circuit. But this was concealed by a slight arrangement so that the box could be handed to investigators, and no pressure would affect the key. The fake was clever and he had several imitators.

SUMMERLANE STREET.

From over the past, from far and near,
I've traveled the earth for many a year,
And sought by precept, by teaching and song,
How best to do right to overcome wrong.

And as I traveled the road dusty and worn,
There came to me oft, from the past day's borne,
The echo of loved voices tender and sweet,
Of a flower-wreathed cottage in Summerlane street.

When my heart was as light as a thistle-down,
My cheeks were rosy and my hands were brown,
When I found in the cottage in the old home place,
A light in the smiles of a fond mother's face.

O, dreams of the past, how often I yearn
For the days of my youth that can never return,
The presence of dear ones I fondly have known,
The old familiar scenes that forever have flown.

Ah, days that I knew, how fondly they gleam,
In the glow and shine of Memory's dream,
The songs of my heart are tremulous with tears,
As I reach back again through the mist of the years.

A Vigorous Defense of the Camp Meeting

When a writer of Brother Barrett's prominence condemns unqualifiedly an institution that plays so important a part in the Spiritualistic movement as does the camp meeting, the matter assumes a serious aspect. Arguments which, used by another, might have little weight, proceeding from the ex-president of the N. S. A. would by many, be accepted as conclusive, and so I, rather reluctantly, feel impelled to review Brother Barrett's article and show, as I think I can, that his conclusions are not warranted by the facts, even as he himself presents them.

Brother Barrett's reasons for condemning, the camp meetings may be catalogued thus:

1. So much fraud perpetrated there.

2. People attending camp become satiated and take no interest when they return home.

3. The expense.

4. Camp meetings are destructive to state and local societies.

In support of the first reason Brother Barrett relates at considerable length certain fraudulent practices that have come under his observation at camp meetings. We are all too familiar with those facts to take issue with him on that score. The question is not, does fraud occur? We know it does. The question is, Does the camp meeting cause fraud? Is it, per se, responsible for it? Should the camp meeting be abolished because fraud may creep in? To maintain the affirmative would, by parity of reasoning, sweep not only every camp meeting but every state and local society, yes, even the N. S. A. from off the face of the earth, for all of them have been afflicted in the same way. At one of the N. S. A. conventions a gentleman told me that he had just overheard two of the mediums who were to occupy the platform, "swapping tests" behind the scenes. Judging by the reputation of the said mediums, I thought the gentleman was mistaken and told him so. I still think so, but it shows that collusion and fraud are quite as possible at the conventions which Brother Barrett warmly favors as at the camp meetings which he condemns.

At one of the great monthly meetings of the Chicago Spiritualist League last spring among some fine and undoubtedly genuine platform test work was also some of a decidedly sensational and questionable character. Indeed, no less than a score of persons, mediums and laymen alike, assured me that they were the result of the most arrant fraud and collusion between the "medium" and persons in the audience. And the famous ordinance was in full force at the time. It did not touch her; it could not reach her. She had a local society of her own. She has never, to my knowledge, attended a camp meeting. Shall the C. S. L. disband because it was imposed upon?

As for the gentleman who spent $2,500 at a camp meeting and had to send to his son for money to get home on; well, poor fellow, he should have had a guardian who would not have entrusted him with such a sum of money at one time. The camp meeting was no more responsible for him than New York and Philadelphia were for Coal Oil Johnny.

A camp or a city owes it to their visitors to protect them from sharpers if possible, but their failure to do so in an instance or two would hardly justify giving them over to destruction, and all other camps and cities with them. For every case like the above occurring at a camp meeting, probably a half dozen could be cited from the cities. Some three or four years ago I gave an account in The Progressive Thinker of a "medium" here in St. Louis filching money and jewelry to the extent of many hundreds of dollars from confiding victims, while about two years ago another "medium" through the efforts of President MacArthur, of the State Association, was given a two years' sentence. Neither of these "mediums" ever practiced their arts at a camp meeting. The city affords a far better field for such tricksters. At the camps they are constantly in the lime-light and subject to the scrutiny and criticism of hundreds of experienced investigators, while in the wilderness of a great city the ignorant and unwary with no one to advise them, fall easy victims.

Again, the tricksters that infest the camps did not get their schooling there. I need not remind Brother Barrett of the schools for trickery which, under the name of developing classes, flourished a few years ago in Boston. It is true, I believe, that the dean of the faculty had a summer school at Onset for a time, but that was merely an adjunct.

The abolition of the camp meeting would not abolish fraud, nor even lessen it to any appreciable degree. As we all know, there are local societies officered and led by convicted fakes. One, at least, of these was an auxiliary of the N. S. A. and its leader held ordination papers from a state association and was also one of the chief officers of said body, which, too, was affiliated with the National. The management of the State and National bodies, instead of disbanding, expelled the obnoxious parties, instead of burning their houses to get rid of the rats, expelled the vermin and cleaned house. See the point?

As to the second objection, that people attending camp meetings take no interest in the cause at home, I think it safe to say that, as a rule, those who are most active and constant in camp meeting work are also most active in local work. Besides, many people become enthused at camp meeting and are stimulated to more earnest effort in their home towns.

What scores and hundreds of engagements have been made by speakers and mediums at the camp meeting to go to some point where Spiritualism had never had a public hearing. How many times has a lonely Spiritualistic resident in such a community said to me after a lecture at camp, "Brother Peck, I want you to come to our town and give that lecture; I want my neighbors to know what Spiritualism really is," etc., etc. Every speaker has had many such requests, while test mediums—those instruments without whom there would be no Spiritualism as a movement—have been fairly swamped by the demands made upon them. As an all-around disseminator of Spiritualism, there is no instrumentality equal to the camp meeting.

As to the third objection, the expense in attendance at camp meetings is largely a matter of taste or desires. As a rule, we can live as cheaply at the average camp as at home and live better and more wholesomely. Brother Barrett suggests that conventions take the place of camp meetings. Conventions are all right, but the chief difference between them and the camp meeting is that they are of shorter duration and more expensive than the latter. To those who have had to pay their own expenses to state and National conventions the plea of economy will appear something of a joke, more particularly if they have responded to the plea for contributions that is always made. One gentleman at the N. S. A. gathering at Minneapolis told me he had attended three camp meetings that season and that the convention had cost him more than the six weeks of camp attendance. And the money so contributed barely pays the expense of the convention.

Then, too, there is a wide difference between gatherings in cities in stuffy halls, and the free, soul-expanding, mind and body-stimulating, outdoor life of the camp meeting.

Brother Barrett asserts that the camp meetings kill the local societies. There are some facts which seem to sustain, in a measure, this view, but the preponderance of evidence is against it. The Clinton camp had its first impulse in a local society which I helped to organize, and has been officered and aided for twenty-five years by members of that society, and I venture the assertion that every member of that society from its capable and devoted leader down would look upon its abolition as a calamity. If space permitted I could follow up that line and produce many facts to sustain my position.

Brother Barrett cites statistics to show that camp meetings are detrimental to state and local organizations. Their irrelevancy seems to me so great that I am irresistibly reminded of the words of the crusty old cynic, Carlyle, "There are lies, d—d lies and statistics." While I cannot agree with the pessimistic old philosopher in his comparison of the relative degrees of fallacy yet it must be said that statistics, like "holy writ," may be cited to prove any theory. As I have not the records at hand myself, I accept Brother Barrett's statement without protest except to ask how many of the 760 societies have any existence except on paper? Are there 400? Are there 200 real, live, active societies? It is a safe assertion that at least one-half of the 760 are moribund.

Brother Barrett says that 21 camp meetings have ceased to exist and 21 State Association have been instituted in the last 15 years and regards this as a significant if not conclusive arrangement, a plain manifestation of cause and effect. Here comes in the fallacious nature of statistical argument. A year or two ago I saw a statement to the effect that the births and deaths in a certain little Western city had been exactly equal for the year, 127 births and 127 deaths. A curious coincidence, no doubt, but what relation did those facts bear to each other? Did the death of the 127 make room for and invite or force the birth of an equal number? Or did the birth of 127 babies crowd the 127 who died off the earth? I venture to say there was just as much significance in the above coincidence as in the case of the camp meetings and the State Associations. Let us try to get at the root of the matter. What State Association came into existence because of the demise of a camp? What camp had to die that a state society could be born? If this is too specific, let us be more general. Has the increase in state bodies been most marked where the decrease in the number of camps has been greatest? Unless this can be shown there is no point of contact, no relationship between the alleged facts, and the statistics have no bearing on the subject. Indeed, if we are to indulge in that style of argument the advantage lies with the camp meeting. As thus: A few years ago Iowa had two camp meetings and a flourishing state organization. A couple of years ago one of the camps gave up the ghost, and the State Association departed soon after. Kansas has several camp meetings and a live state society. Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, all have both camp meetings and State Associations working in harmony. New York has a vigorous state organization and its own great Lily Dale camp. Massachusetts, with three of the oldest and two of the largest and most famous camps, has a live state organization whose president is the able chairman of Onset. It would be difficult, I think, to find an intelligent Spiritualist in Massachusetts who would maintain that the cause of Spiritualism would be enhanced by the abolition of Harwich, Lake Pleasant and Onset.

There has been a decrease in the number of camps as well as a decline of interest in some if not all the surviving ones; the reason for this is simple and easily stated; the same causes which are responsible for the almost universal apathy that pervades our Cause everywhere and in every department are also accountable here—no more, no less.

The decrease in number is also easily and rationally explained. The now defunct camps were superfluous, occupying fields already filled by older and stronger ones. Bad management may also have been a factor in some cases. No cause is strengthened by scattering its forces. Were the many weak local societies in our large cities consolidated into one-fourth the present number their efficiency would be greatly increased. The same is true of the camps; there are, I think, still too many for their mutual good.

In accounting for the increase in state organizations and the decrease in camps another important factor should be kept in mind. The N. S. A. has bent all its energies to the institution of the former and never toward the founding of camps. This was, I think, correct, but, since it accepts the camp meeting associations as auxiliaries and annually appeals to them for financial aid; it should foster rather than discourage them.

But chief of all the causes for the lack of interest in and attendance at the camp meeting is the enormous multiplication of summer resorts, summer gardens, chautauquas, rural places of amusement and recreation where the cooped-up dwellers of the cities may find the much-needed blessings of pure air, blue skies, tree, grass, flowers and birds. The recognition of this need, together with the increased facilities for interurban travel furnished by the trolley lines, have led to the establishment of these rival rural resorts in almost every township, and were every camp meeting in the land abolished the people, Spiritualists as well as others, would still avail themselves of these means of health and happiness. And it is not only their right, but their duty to themselves and their families to do so.

In expressing myself as I have I am actuated only by a sense of right and justice. I have no personal interests to serve, I have no official connection at this time with any camp meeting, but, speaking from long and intimate experience of the in and outs of the camp meeting, I unhesitatingly affirm that, judiciously located and managed, officered by those who labor with an eye single to duty and principle, the camp may be made in the future as it has been in the past one of the most, if not the very most successful and effective means of the propaganda of the glorious religion of Spiritualism.

ISAAC B. RICH.

The Funeral of an Illustrious Spiritualist and Philanthropist.

As the brief notice of Mr. Rich's funeral which appeared in your columns of July 25 mentions Mr. C. W. Wiggin as officiating at those solemn obsequies, instead of Rev. Frederick A. Wiggin, the popular pastor and spiritual worker of Boston, an explanation and corrected statement seems necessary.

Mr. Wiggin has been a close friend of Mr. Rich for many years and has frequently served as almoner of his generous bounty for the poor and needy of the city. Therefore, immediately after Mr. Rich's transition, his son, Charles J. Rich, wrote to Mr. Wiggin requesting that he conduct the funeral services, adding that Rev. E. A. Horton (likewise an old friend) would also assist. Courtesy granted to the older clergyman the priority in the exercises, and after a beautiful musical selection, rendered by a male quartette, Mr. Horton gave an extended reading of Scripture selections, with the poem, "There is No Death." He then made a fervid address, in which he rehearsed in detail the varied interests and labors of the deceased from the time when he joined the Mercantile Library Association, at the age of seventeen, until his death. He recalled his large charities, his generous assistance to worthy young men, and to those in need, everywhere, his extended and notable theatrical interests and successes, and emphasized the fact that Boston would seem poorer without his presence.

At the close of Mr. Horton's remarks, and after the sweet and plaintive song, "Beautiful Island of Somewhere" had been sung by the quartette, Mr. Wiggin arose, and prefacing his address by appropriate Scripture and the beautiful poem, "He Who Died at Azim," he delivered a scholarly and impressive eulogy, a partial text of which is as follows:

A good man; one whose acquaintance we have enjoyed these many many years, has put off the garments of earthly life, and donned those of immortal splendor.

I knew the man so well, that I am sure nothing could be further from his desire than that any fulsome eulogy of his life should be spoken upon this occasion. He was a man to whom even the very semblance of deception was offensive, and he simply left it to each one to judge him by his few, yet frank utterances, and the unobtrusive and unostentatious deeds of his life. His left hand never knew what his right hand did. Brother Rich will, however, pardon the words which must here find utterance and although he would doubtless prefer that I leave them unsaid, his charitable deeds are so well known, that no little surprise might obtain if I failed to make mention of them. Never seeking for vain glory, even despising any display of his generosity, if the lips of the poor were dumb upon this subject, thousands of whom have received of his bounties without ever knowing who who their benefactor was, then indeed would his most kindly generosity be but slightly mentioned.

In business, no puerile motto of "Honesty is the best policy" governed him. Here he placed himself in the true order of his life, which required that his conduct be always begotten of an inward, instead of an outward motive, begotten of choice instead of prudence or policy. He held an ideal higher and beyond a simple vindication from folly and knavery.

Filled to overflowing as was his remarkable business career, still he could always find time for matters more important and nearer the heart. I have conversed with him, when his earnest words of love and sympathy for members of his family were accompanied with tears which told the story of his fatherly devotion far more eloquently than his words.

Through this new birth, which has been for so long miscalled Death, another soul has passed to the loving Father's home, and many there are who, with his bereaved family, will painfully realize the physical absence of a thoroughly generous-hearted, good man, a man whose true and real greatness will appear and be felt far more forcefully in death than it was in his life.

His thoughts were always of the living, and with him there were no dead and no such thing as dying. He believed in the resurrection of all men as well as of Jesus. He knew of a life hereafter and had constant proof of it. He believed that the best way to prepare for its enjoyment was to do unto others as he would be done by, here and now. Brother Rich was a Spiritualist, and his religion was one of deeds and not of creeds. No religious sect was quite broad enough for him.

Mr. Rich was a man who would have been ashamed to plume himself upon a successful obedience to self-interest, or mere duty. He sought no personal righteousness which differentiated between the publican and sinner, but rather one which would obliterate by its overpowering splendor all those petty differences among men and recreate life afresh in its own absorbing unity. In short, he wanted the righteousness of the Infinite, and not the mortal righteousness which flows from the fulfillment of any outward law whatever, but the perfect righteousness, which wells forth from an abiding faith in a Divine Humanity, or the absolute union of the divine and human natures.

He has not passed to his reward, for he never lived for such. He has merely, simply stopped living here, and gone on living over there, and there as here, he will do his best, continuing to do right simply because it is right to do right. He was fully persuaded of opportunities for growth and progress, out there, beyond the portals of the grave.

In his passing, our loss is great, but may our grief be assuaged in contemplation of his infinitely greater gain.

"Meantime we'll pitch our lives unto the key
Of that thou'rt living; so one music sweet
We'll make, until our earthly harmony
Shall blend with thine and make one song complete."

The floral tribute which expressed the esteem in which our arisen brother was held, surpassed anything that has ever been beheld on similar occasions in Boston, according to the testimony of the daily press, making an impressive scene of radiant beauty. The altar, the platform, and pulpit stairs were covered and banked with most elaborate designs, the side pews to either corner of the spacious church was hung with heavy wreaths and garlands, all composed of the choicest flowers, a wreath of rare orchids resting upon the casket, with another of lilies of the valley and heliotrope.

At the close of the service, these varied pieces were removed in florists' vans to the family lot in Forest Hills, where, upon the arrival of the family, they covered every available spot and lined the grave into which the deserted dust was lowered. A floral arch spanned the gateway, through which the friends passed to listen to the committal service, and although the family's wish for privacy was sacredly respected, hundreds of interested friends lined the farther side of the avenue and adjacent points of advantage, watching the scene, under the clear sky and in the fragrant air of a radiant June day.

A Prominent Spiritualist Passed to Spirit Life.

Edward P. Averill passed to spirit life July 28, aged 86 years. Mr. Averill was one of Massachusetts' most prominent Spiritualists. He was one of the charter members of Cadet Hall Society, of Lynn, and has been a very active member up to the time of his going. He will be a great loss to the society, as well as Spiritualism in general. There are many workers that will keenly feel the loss, as the home of Mr. Averill has been the home of many of us, and it was with genuine pleasure he always welcomed us.

Mr. Averill has been a very prominent business man in the towns of Middleton and Lynn. In his early life he was engaged in the manufacture of shoes; then in later life, going into the grocery business. He was a man much sought for advice in all things, having superior judgment, and his word was as good as a government bond. Such men leave a great void in the world of active things.

He leaves a wife and two sons. His wife is Mrs. A. A. Averill, who writes often for The Progressive Thinker. She is a woman of rare ability, and has been a very valuable worker for the cause. Her stories have been great lessons in spiritual truth. She has been the secretary of Cadet Hall Society for years.

The funeral was held from Pine Grove Chapel, July 31st. There was scarcely standing room. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. The burial took place at his old home, Middleton. The undersigned officiated, and Mr. Marshall, one of Lynn's most noted singers, rendered two beautiful songs.

My personal tribute is, he was a mighty oak in our midst. Truth always found an abiding-place with him. He spread his mighty arms of love and encouragement to each and all of us when weary and discouraged, and at his fireside we found home and comfort.

Earth is more lonesome because of his going, but heaven is much richer, and he will welcome us there. May we who knew him so well inculcate his life in all its strength and sweetness, and be as faithful to duty and truth. ELIZABETH HARLOW.

Afflicted With a Troublesome Spirit.

To the Editor:—May I have a little space in your paper for a personal request:

All my near kindred have passed to spirit life. My husband passed away in 1897. He was mentally unbalanced, and seems to be very much worse now. I am mediumistic; can both write and talk, but he will not allow any of my friends to communicate with me. He appears to completely dominate them. He seems to be with me all the time, but I do not wish to talk with him, for most of the time he seems to be a raving maniac.

It is new to me that such a condition follows one into spirit life, but I could write of experiences I have had to show that it does.

I have not the help of circles, mediums or meetings. I have your paper only for an instructor, and I feel that I could hardly live without it, but I have not read of any case like mine, and I want to know if there is anything I can do to change conditions so I may get messages from my friends. If anyone will instruct me in the matter, by letter I shall be very grateful. MARY E. STOUT.

Chesterfield Camp, Ind.

The second week of camp life, and beautiful Chesterfield is dear to me; every moment I stay it grows dearer. This is Friday, and to-day I presided at the conference, and the subject we discussed was, "Shall we do away with Camps? Had I put to a vote, I feel as if that good old Auditorium would have rung out its appeal from our loved ones on the other side, one long loud NO! , Every heart was filled with enthusiasm and zeal to further the cause of camps. Our camps are doing a glorious work. How do people know what good seed we are sowing broadcast in these beautiful bowers of nature, where the skeptic comes to have a good time, and as they say, talk to the "spooks." They come in all their levity, and generally some good spook comes and they are convinced. It may be years before the shell of orthodoxy will fall, but yearly they come to the camp meeting to gather from their loved ones the story of life.

Everyone has their opinion, but while Camp Chesterfield was in the height of its glory the societies in surrounding cities were all in a prosperous condition.

I well remember fifty years ago, when Methodist Camp Meetings were all the rage. That was the means by which they gathered in to their fold the innumerable hosts of followers. How I used to love to hear them shout; but they won the millions of followers.

I have great respect for our good Mr. Barrett, but no one man, nor one-hundred, can down the camps. They have come to stay.

I believe in Camp-Meeting. I believe in organization, for I feel sure that is the only way in which we can succeed. As for mediums giving "post mortem" messages or doing fake work, how about speakers? Are they all perfect? Were all these paid according to their worth, some would hardly have money enough to keep the wolf from the door.

Let us have the Camp. Let our message bearers give their work from the rostrum. I also believe all good honest mediums should be allowed to do their work in their own homes. I don't believe any society should control them or the speaker. I believe we have as many honest mediums, tried and true, as we have lecturers or speakers. I also think that mediums should receive money for their work; that no one person or society should say how much they should receive. This is a free country, free speech, free schools, and free religion.

Teach our children to be honest with themselves and the future generation will not make so many mistakes. Just so long as camp meetings are prosperous, just as long as mediums and speakers are untrammeled in their work, just so long will our cause prosper.

I have no faith in any man, woman or child, be he scientist or otherwise, who would invade the sacred seance room, and with a lie on his lips and fault-finding in his heart, try to receive from our angel loved ones truth.

"Seek and ye shall find." knock and it shall be opened unto you!"

If any person lies to himself, he must have untruthful guides I don't believe that scientific men and women are the only ones capable of detecting fraud. Let us go into a seance room with love and purity, seeking only the truth. Let us not countenance fraud, but if we find it let us denounce it there and then.

"Thoughts are things." If we are constantly thinking fraud, we can find it, and be sure we are free from it ourselves before we accuse another. No one has arisen to that state of perfection where they have no faults, no sin.

Now comes the point where organization will protect us. I hope to live to see the day when mediums and speakers will all be connected with some society, with both State and National, and that they shall all have a certificate of honest speakership and mediumship, and if either are found to not be as their certificates read, give them an honest investigation, and if found putting on the garments of the devil to serve the angel world, let them forfeit them, they are not worthy our protection, and wherever a medium has such a certificate, give her our support. When the world at large finds we certify to those competent to give them messages from their loved ones, the hundreds of frauds who are like vultures all over our land, uniting the separated, locating gold mines, hidden treasures, etc., will be a thing of the past.

I would also like to ask, how many build better lives from the most beautiful lectures they have heard? I enjoy a good lecture. I enjoy a good message. Without the messages the blessed light of the angel world could not come to us. Let us then try and make both feel we are their friends. When they have proved beyond a doubt to be frauds, tell their names so the world may know it. It is unjust to the truthful medium to feel some may think I'm the fraud. I feel with the lowly Nazarene: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." They can see God within and will then have no fault to find with others.

Good Mrs. Jacobs, of Indianapolis, has charge of the conference. She is a medium as good, as loyal to our work and cause as I believe it possible to be. She says her experience has been that wherever you find a prosperous camp you find prosperous societies.

May we live to see them in every state all over our land, and when my great-grand-children shall reach the age of eighty years, camps will still exist, and will continue on in the good work, we have so nobly tried to do, while here.

LILY DALE CAMP.

The N. S. A. Day, and Other Parts of the Interesting Program.

As an evidence of the appreciation shown at Lily Dale of the work of the N. S. A., the day devoted to its interests was made the red letter day of the camp. A hot wave on that particular day, no doubt, affected the attendance from outside, but Lily Dale was there in holiday attire. The announcement was made that a hundred dollars was needed, and three ladies wearing hats in their hands, passed through the audience. The result of the collection instead of falling short of the amount was exactly $132.73. We have it from the lips of National Treasurer, C. A. Stevens of Pittsburg, Pa.

President Dr. Warne, conducted a court of inquiry, answering or having answered all questions regarding the N. S. A. establishing its inestimable value to the cause of Spiritualism. Secretary Geo. W. Kates of Washington, gave a ringing address, calling attention to the injustice of courts in deciding upon property willed to Spiritualism, and urging those who wish to endow the N. S. A. to do it while alive and save lawyers' fees and litigation.

Other visiting officials and speakers were Hon. Chas. R. Schirm, National Vice-President, and the N. S. A. being by no means a masculine body, the gentle sex was represented in the person of Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Zadie Kates, Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, and Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds.

The Lyceum, with its pleasing entertainments is an attractive feature of the camp. Recently Indian influences were very much in evidence in a dramatic representation given by the Lyceum boys under the management of Dr. C. A. Burgess. The boys were dressed in the yells and dances, and yelled in the dresses and dances of the celebrated Indians to the amusement of all, including themselves.

The Spiritual Lyceum Lessons have also been introduced in the entertainments. The admonition "Watch" in Number One of the series, furnished a delightful program; the little ladies and gentlemen distinguished themselves in music and oratory. There are fifty children enrolled by Mrs. Amelia Peterson, who for thirteen years has been mother of the Lyceum here. Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader of the Lyceum Lesson editorial committee is now assisting her.

We were sorry to bid good bye to Oscar Edgerly and Geo. Letford the "Drummer Medium," who accompanied him. Mr. Letford goes down into the audience, threads his way among them scattering messages and tests that rarely fail of recognition.

G. Tabor Thompson, the ex-Baptist minister, now lecturing here is proving himself an unqualified Spiritualist, and an eloquent orator who advocates high ideals and living without fear of criticism.

Dr. Lockwood's classes on Scientific Spiritualism are an honor to the camp, as was also Prof. J. Clegg Wright's. Mrs. R. S. Lillie is just opening a class in Psychometry and Clairvoyance, which needs only the name of this tried and true teacher to make it a success.

At a pork and bean supper just over, the Ladies' Auxiliary fed nearly two hundred.

Esperanto, that which is to be the universal language, is represented here at Lily Dale by George H. Freeman, principal of a mail order Esperanto school. To-day Mr. Freeman, by means of charts explaining the language, succeeded in making himself understood, in selections from the new language, which is made from the root words of all languages and is therefore more or less familiar to all.

Hon. Chas. R. Schirm of Baltimore, gave an address to-day on Devils and other things and succeeded in introducing as many devils as other things. Said he: "To Christ they said he hath a devil," and to-day the same scribes pharisees and hypocrites, as he called them, are re-incarntaed in those who would keep the people in the bonds of ignorance for their own self aggrandizement, and say the same of any who offer higher enlightenment.

The Ladies' Auxiliary has now spread in the auditorium a New England supper, which is destined to dematerialize in the presence of the crowds in waiting with sharpened appetites to which the Lily Dale air gives the keen edge.—[Later—Nearly two hundred people have demolished the feast.]

We note the arrival here of Dr. Juliet Severance and her son, J. W. Stillman; also Mrs. Lillie's daughter, Miss C. B. Clark.

The two latter assisted in the Lillies' entertainment, which in spite of a storm outside, was a very pleasing one.

Forest Temple is now under the leadership af Mrs. A. J. Deveraux. A healing meeting is in progress there conducted by Dr. C. A. Burgess of Chicago. "Healing Songs," written by Mattie McCaslin, are used as auxiliary to the work.

The doctor has had wonderful success in healing, which he has done freely during his stay. After giving tests he called Mrs. H. M. Gransbury of Bradford, to the platform, who came up tottering with a nervous affection, and after a few passes she returns walking perfectly straight.

Prof. Lockwood is rivaling test mediumship in making converts to scientific Spiritualism. We need more such teachers.

Mr. and Mrs. Richmond have arrived, and Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are coming tomorrow.

Haslett Park Camp.

Sunday, August 2, marked the opening of the 26th annual session of the Haslett Park Camp Association. Everything was in readiness and a beautiful day combined to make the occasion an enjoyable one.

Dr. B. F. Austin was at his best, and it was appreciative audiences that listened to the two discourses of the day; Dr. W. O. Knowles of Grand Rapids following with messages. Dr. Austin will remain with us during the week, and we know this means there is something good in store for visitors at Haslett Park.

It was with deep regret that I received notice in mid-winter of the transition of one of the leading spirits at Haslett Park, Mrs. Sara A. Haslett. In connection herewith the following resolutions were presented at the Sunday afternoon session of the camp.

Whereas, Sister Sara A. Haslett born December 26, 1850, and translated January 27, 1908, at the age of 57 years, 1 month and 1 day, was at the time a trustee and for a number of years president of this Haslett Park Camp, and

Whereas, Sister Haslett, by her cheerful spirit, faithful and ready service, and earnest consecration to the Cause of Spiritualism, rendered inestimable service to this Association and the cause of truth, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we place on record our profound appreciation of her noble character as a Spiritualist, and of the vast service she has rendered as a leader and worker in our ranks.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to surviving relatives and friends and request the spiritual press throughout the land to give publicity to these resolutions.

IRA C. HOWES, Pres.
E. P. SPROSS, Sec.

We miss her presence here, but heaven has an added charm to those who knew her best. Capable of doing the larger things, yet the most common or menial duty found her a ready servant. Few there are who can fill the place she has vacated, and none the sacred place she held in the hearts of those who loved her.

GUISEPPE ALIA.

A Monument Should be Erected to His Memory.

A monument should be erected to the noble Italian, Guiseppe Alia, who was wrongfully executed at Canon City, Colo., July 15, 1908, for killing a Roman Catholic priest, who had destroyed his home and happiness by compelling his wife to submit to the priest's brutal carnal lusts.

If every Catholic would do the same noble act, the Roman Catholic church would be without priests in very short order; and the poor innocent girls and women confined in convents for the special use of the priesthood would be liberated from the Catholic hells.

Then there would be an end to that Roman Catholic hierarchy that has been the greatest curse to the human race the world has ever known.

Prospects of the People's Psychic Society.

I shall attempt to record in this some facts that indicate beyond all dispute the growing interest in our religious movement.

Sunday morning, July 26, the People's Psychic Society offered to the large audience assembled an unusual program.

G. P. Sullivan, a lecturer of superior inspiration, that only an education in its fullest and largest sense can attract to us and out of us. The subject for consideration, "A Vision and a Message," presented in a natural, easy eloquent spirit, which at once called forth an intense interest, not only from the investigator, but many of our own people, who have lost sight of the fundamental, essential principles underlying all true expressions of our philosophy—that only a true Spiritualist can endorse.

We learned something that enriched our mind—pointing out a larger and better, brighter way—right here and now—to-day—not tomorrow, next week or some sweet day by and by. Following the lecture, the ordination of Mrs. Mary S. Green, by Dr. Adah Patterson, president of the State Spiritualist Association, took place.

The service was of intense interest, as well as great beauty, surely a time for rejoicing.

Our Sister, Mrs. Green, is held in very high esteem. She enjoys the love and respect of intellectual women and men. One who always looks for the best in others, and gives the best she has, that each life may be stronger and sweeter for her touch, as she passes day by day, into the greater life. One who will leave the world better than she found it. One who realizes strongly the consciousness of the unseen world of truth, love and beauty. One who lives the spiritual life here and now.

"It was only a glad good morning
As she passed along the way;
But it spread the morning's glory
Over the livelong day."

The afternoon session was devoted to music and messages, the attendance large and appreciative.

We have every encouragement in the various lines of interest connected with this society.

Our objects and aims are for the betterment of every human soul. We court honest comment and criticism, for through comparison we often learn of a better way, and a broader view is shown. All inharmony is the result of ignorance; unkindness, the expression of a weak prsonality, unbalanced therefore like all imperfectness, lacks the ring of truth. We gain by giving. Let us learn to seize upon the good, forgetting the discords of life. Let us stand by our teachers—if we do not like what we hear given.

There is a feeling of permanency among our workers that is very beneficial to all concerned. We have ceased to drift.

We have a visit once a week from some dear soul who offers to "cure things," to "advise," but when they have fluttered a little they seek more congenial pastures.

We do our work as well as we can. Live one day at a time, and try to be kind.

LET US HAVE PEACE.

An Earnest Plea for Advancement Along Spiritual Lines.

Gen. U. S. Grant's advice is just the advice an old veteran now gives to the army of Spiritualists, too many of whom are warring against their own household of faith, as to the ways and means now needed to bring harmony and unity, and secure "peace on earth and good will to man."—

There is a great deal more of good in the world than evil. The good people are a host compared to the few bad ones. The good, genuine and harmonious and well known mediums are many compared to the few dishonest and bold pretenders, that like tramps, prefer to wander from place to place, seeking mostly strangers who can be more easily deceived.

In proportion to the numbers, there are far less frauds claiming to be mediums, and dishonest and unworthy people who claim to believe in Spiritualism, than the unworthy people among the orthodox ministers and church members, who are bitterly opposed to all liberals, especially Spiritualists.

There is fraud masquerading as Spiritualism, and there is hypocrisy calling itself Christianity; crime carefully concealed, and called "high modern finance." There is always a counterfeit to every good thing in earth life, therefore we should not waste any more time discussing the unfortunate aspect of Spiritualism. Instead let us earnestly hold forth the banner of a glorious spiritual philosophy. It being true, let us emphatically claim that those who believe in it, and truly guide their lives by the true principles of the gospel of Spiritualism can never go wrong.

Spiritualists ought to know that within the inclosures of good and protected organizations is the only safety and success. The churches have to deal with ministers and members who go wrong, but their organized fence around the sheep-fold is so high and strong that a bad shepherd or black sheep cannot so easily get in, and are more easily found out.

In the early days the Methodists were very poorly organized, and the tramp ministers were very common and bold. The society in Rutland, Vt., was anxious to start a red-hot revival. They engaged a "Praying Band" of four men for two weeks, who were to board in private families. There was great excitement and many scared converts; but the revival came to a sudden end. One of the praying band had so little moral religion that he absconded with the wife of the man with whom he boarded, and he had a wife and two children in Troy, N. Y.

Another tramp minister came to a Vermont town, and boarded in a family where there was a nice daughter. After six months he married the daughter. Soon after he deserted her, and later it became known that she was the fifth woman he had married. The churches now, as a rule, are better organized and protected. Strange men who claim to be clergymen have some credentials or letters of recommendation. The Spiritualists should have more and better organizations, such as will protect them from the humiliation that fraud and deception always brings.

The Campmeeting and society platforms should be devoted to lectures exclusively, during the regular service hours, and the seances for messages or physical phenomena should be held at different hours.

Many years ago, when Dr. Joseph Beals was President, and I was the first Vice-President of Lake Pleasant Campmeeting Association, some rules were passed to have only lectures and singing at the hours for regular service, and seances held at Association hall, or in private cottages. A committee of investigation was appointed and all strange speakers and mediums, seeking recognition and patronage, who came into camp must procure the recommendation of the board of investigation. After the severe strife as to what faction should control the camp, the former restrictive regulations were changed, and the great crowd was the thing desired. For a time the camp was a wide-open picnic resort; strange mediums could post their bills and cards on every tree in camp. For several years last past I have had no personal knowledge of Lake Pleasant Camp, but I am sure that under the supervision of the lamented Judge Dailey, the president and energetic secretary, Rev. A. P. Blinn, many improvements must have come before the great loss by fire. There are so many liberals and Spiritualists in Orthodox audiences that the ministers now omit all offensive condemnation of Spiritualists and other liberals.

Let peace be within thy borders, oh! mortals of earth.

For the Consideration of Spiritualists.

The Chicago and Portland Ordinances Critically Examined.

Some fears having been expressed that the Chicago and Portland ordinances regarding mediumship, etc., might be so construed by judicial tribunals as to include within their inhibitory clauses the practice of honest and genuine mediumship, I beg to offer the following analysis and explanation of those ordinances for the benefit of our Spiritualist friends and mediums.

First, it is well to bear in mind that this legislation is an absolutely new form of legislation, and deals with a subject rarely broached, and but vaguely alluded to in legal literature. It can, therefore, hardly be expected to be without flaw or blemish as an example of the ideal law upon the subject.

The fundamental idea at the basis of the ordinances seems to me to be a recognition that there are genuine and real communications from the world of spirits, and that the faculty or power to receive and impart such communications is one, the legitimate exercise of which will be protected by the law. This idea, it is true, is but negatively expressed in the positive prohibitions of fraud practiced in the name of mediumship.

The first section of the Chicago ordinance is as follows:

"Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Chicago:

Section 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to advertise by display sign, circular, hand-bill, or in any newspaper, periodical, magazine, or other publication or publications or by any other means, to tell fortunes or reveal the future; to find or restore lost or stolen property, to locate oil wells, gold or silver or other ore or metal or natural product, to restore lost love, friendship or affection, to reunite or procure lovers, husbands, wives, lost relatives or friends, or to give advice in business affairs or advice of any other kind or nature to others for or without pay, by means of occult or psychic powers, faculties or forces, clairvoyance, psychology, psychometry, spirits, mediumship, seership, prophecy, astrology, palmistry, necromancy, or like crafty science, cards, talismans, charms, potions, magnetism or magnetized articles or substances, oriental mysteries, or magic of any kind or nature; and any person convicted thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense."

This section, paraphrased, makes it unlawful to advertise that one can, or possesses the power to, tell fortunes, find stolen or lost property, locate gold mines, etc., adjust love affairs, or is able to give advice of any kind, by occult or super-normal faculties, powers or means.

Notwithstanding this section it will be seen that mediums may advertise the fact that they are spirit mediums and are able to transmit communications from the so-called dead to the living; but not that such communications will be of the character above enumerated; the intention of the section being to forbid that kind of mediumship which assumes that the medium knows in advance what the spirits are going to say and allows him to use that information for purposes of personal gain. No genuine medium is forbidden to advertise his gift by this section; but the professional fortune teller, who has no place in Spiritualism, is prevented from harming that Cause by his false and misleading advertisement often put out in the name of Spiritualism.

The second section is as follows:

"Section 2. That any person or persons who shall obtain money or property from another by fraudulent devices and practices in the name of, or by means of spirit mediumship, palmistry, card reading, astrology, seership, or like crafty science, or fortune telling of any kind, shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense."

In the analysis of this section we must apply the rule of construction, well known to lawyers, that a criminal statute (and this is such a statute) must be strictly construed, which means that it cannot be made to apply to any act of conduct that is not clearly defined by its terms. The important question for us as Spiritualists is, Does this section prohibit the honest practice of genuine mediumship? Those who claim that it does probably base their claim on these words of the section, "persons who shall obtain money or property from another by fraudulent devices and practices in the name of, or by means of spirit mediumship," etc.

Courts in construing statutes seek to ascertain the intent of the law-maker as such intent is expressed by the words used, taking the whole statute together; and such words are taken in their ordinary sense. The sentence last above quoted relates to the obtaining of money and the means whereby it is obtained. Such means according to the phraseology used must be fraudulent; that is, money obtained by fraudulent devices and practices employed in connection with the use of the name "spirit mediumship," or by fraudulent devices and practices in the actual use of spirit mediumship; the intent of the law maker apparently being to prevent, first, all forms of legerdemain, artifice, trickery and skilful manipulation with the pretense that it is due to spirit mediumship, and second, all forms of fraudulent practices for the purpose of obtaining money by the actual use of spirit mediumship, the latter provision being intended to cover cases where real spirit mediums may seek to use their mediumship for fraudulent purposes. The statute leaves open the question whether there is a real mediumship and legitimate use of such mediumship, and only punishes "fraudulent devices and practices in the name of or by means of spirit mediumship;" so that mediums who do not indulge in such practices in using their mediumship are not affected by the ordinance.

I would suggest, however, to lessen the chances of misconstruction, that this section 2, when incorporated in other ordinances, if it ever should be, be made to read as follows:

"That any person or persons who shall obtain money or property of any kind from another by means of fraudulent devices or practices in the name or in the exercise and use of spirit mediumship, palmistry," etc.

The third and last section of the Chicago ordinance is as follows:

"Section 3. That any person or persons who shall hold or give any public or private meeting, gathering, circle or seance of any kind in the name of Spiritualism, or of any other religious body, society, cult or denomination, and therein practice or permit to be practiced fraud or deception of any kind, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense."

This section is so plain that it would seem not to need any explanation. Fraud, as a matter of law, must be proved; it cannot be presumed; and in any given case brought under this section it must be shown that the accused knew, or under the circumstances ought to have known, that he was practicing or permitting to be practiced the fraud or deception charged. So in this section I can see no harm to the honest exercise, publicly or privately, of any form or phase of mediumship.

The Portland ordinance, known as the Barrett-Cottell ordinance, is like the Chicago ordinance in its first section; but differs slightly from that ordinance in the second and third sections, which second and third sections I regard as some improvement on the Chicago ordinance. These sections of the Barrett-Cottell ordinance are as follows:

"Section 2. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to obtain money or property from another by fraudulent devices and practices, in the name of or by means of spirits, mediumship, palmistry, card reading, astrology, seership, or like crafty science, or fortune telling of any kind, provided, however, that nothing in this section shall be construed so as to prevent the practice of any science or art for educational purposes, and without any desire or intent to defraud.

"Section 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to hold or give any public or private meetings, gatherings, circles, or seance of any kind in the name of Spiritualism or any other religious body, society, cult or denomination, and therein practice or permit to be practiced fraud or deception of any kind, with the intent by such fraud or deception to obtain money, property, or valuables from any one."

The real difficulty about these laws, it seems to me, lies in the fact that judges and juries are prone to regard any claim to the possession of spirit mediumship as fraudulent per se; but there is nothing in these laws that justifies such an imputation unless it be the phrase, "or like crafty science"—and that phrase was incorporated by the corporation counsel of Chicago and not by us; yet, that is merely a characterization which at most means cunning, subtle, and calculated to deceive the simple minded, and does not necessarily mean "false and fraudulent." It was owing to an appreciation of this difficulty that the Chicago Spiritualists'-League was formed into a religious body and succeeded in establishing such relations with the authorities of the city that its certificates of mediumship would prima facie be recognized as a guarantee that the holders were genuine possessors of mediumistic gifts, and, unless they were actually detected in the practice of fraud, would not be molested in the exercise of such gifts.

The federal and state constitutions guarantee freedom of religious worship, and it is the policy of the law not to interfere with or in manner undertake to regulate religious practices, beliefs and customs; and it seems to me that if Spiritualists, the real, earnest lovers of the Cause, would band themselves together as religious bodies, particularly in the large cities of the country, procure the enactment of such laws as these here considered, and give the ruling authorities to understand that all true mediums are regarded by them as sacred instruments for the transmission of the divine truths and facts of an immortal life, fraud would be practically eliminated from our ranks, honest mediums would be thoroughly protected in their genuine work, and Spiritualism would command that respect and consideration everywhere that in itself even now it so richly deserves.

THE SUICIDE CRIME.

To Commit Suicide is a Dastardly Crime Against One's Self.

The question of suicide has been much "in the air" lately; it has been referred to in 'Light,' and the month now past is the one in which, according to a cynical French saying, 'All the English cut their throats.' The recent joint suicide of two young artists is rendered interesting to us by a letter which one wrote, in which he said:—

'For the hereafter our minds are perfectly settled. What may happen after death is a secret. It is certain, however, that the blood-thirsty and revengeful demon, with his everlasting torment, which has so long masqueraded as a Christian deity is non-existent. A belief in the unity of matter and non-persistence of individuality enables us to face our death unflinchingly. While the universe endures we shall endure; we shall be unconscious of it.

This opinion appears to be a compound of Agnosticism, monism, and rank materialism, including a not unnatural revolt against the nominally Christian, but really worse than pagan, conception of a Deity whose love(?) takes the form of condemnation to endless torture. What would have been the effect on these misguided yet highly intelligent people of a knowledge of Spiritualism? They would have known that we are here temporarily for a purpose, and that we are exposed to earthly trials for the strengthening of our individuality—an individuality which is progressive in its development and as indestructible as force or matter, nay even more so, for it is eternal in its nature, and, therefore, not subject to the limitations, accidents, and finite duration of all temporal things.

They would have known that there is a Purpose in the Universe, and that our life and work on earth form a part of the outworking of that Purpose, though we, with our limited mental vision, cannot see or grasp the nature of this spiritual reality. They would have known that as with the individuality, so with its necessary accompaniment, consciousness. We are probably never unconscious for a moment, so far as our true spiritual selves are concerned; our outer husk may sleep and die, but the Self within lives and KNOWS, to the extent of its development. They would have known that by cutting short their earthly careers they had flinched their duty, abandoned their posts, and been unfaithful to their trusts. They would have known that keen regrets awaited them in the new state of conscious existence into which they would enter, and that they would then feel that they had missed an opportunity as well as commit a crime against themselves and their own higher natures, with the result that they have entered upon the new existence less prepared for its work, duties, and opportunities than it they had faithfully endured to the end. It is not only society and the law, but the innate conviction which animates mankind as an intuitive spiritual perception, that condemns suicide.

At the same time, as the Rev. R. J. Campbell pointed out in his sermon at the City Temple on November 28, we are all, individually and collectively, to some extent responsible, by omission or commission, for the social condition which drives worthy and intelligent people to despair and suicide. He said:—

'I suppose there are people who would say these two poor things would go to hell. If so, it cannot be very much worse than the hell they left. Who makes that hell? I make it. You make it. We all do our little to help to make it—not willingly, but thoughtlessly.'

One of Olive Schreiner's Dreams' pictures this world under the name of 'hell'; and, our spirit friends tell us, we may be morally and spiritually in hell— or in heaven—even while living here in the body. The question for us is then, are we doing anything that may make earth less endurable for any of our fellow-beings immured in the body, or are we trying, by thought, words, and act, to comfort and sustain them while here, and make earth-conditions a little more pleasant for each other? We are like strap-hangers in a crowded railway carriage, and much may be done to ease discomfort and render trouble more bearable by a little reciprocal kindly thought and sympathy, even if we are unable to give much practical aid. We as Spiritualists ought to be the standard bearers in all movements for social and moral, as well as spiritual betterment. It is in this way that Spiritualism can become a practical, living, powerful force for the regeneration of the world.—JOHANNES, in Light, London, Eng.

EFFICACY OF MUSIC PROVED IN TREATING FEEBLE MINDED

Boys Who Become Members of the Band Make More Rapid Progress Toward Recovery Than Others.

An illustration of the efficacy of music in the treatment of the feeble minded has occurred at the home for feeble minded youths belonging to the Metropolitan asylums board at Witham, Essex, England, where a great change has been effected since the introduction of a brass band.

The master of the home, C. Gibbs, says that ever since the interest of the boys has been aroused in the instruments they were given to play they had advanced by leaps and bounds toward sanity, some of the most obstinate cases having recovered.

It had become recognized in the institution that the band boys were superior to the other patients. Several boys whose cases were regarded as hopeless are quite rational.

GIVES A NEW THEORY OF TELEPATHY.

It Opens Up a New Chapter in Science.

Telepathy takes a new turn when investigated by a master mind like that of Sir Oliver Lodge. He says intercommunication between mind and mind occurs as if one mind operated directly either on another brain or on another mind across a distance, if distance has any meaning in such a case; or as if one mind exerted its influence on another through the conscious intervention of a third mind acting as messenger; or as if mental intercourse were effected unconsciously through a general nexus of communication, a universal world mind. All these hypotheses have been suggested at different times by the phenomena of telepathy; and which of them is nearest the truth is difficult to say.

There are some who think all are true and different means are employed at different times. What the famous scientist thinks can be asserted is this; that the facts of telepathy, and in a less degree of what is called clairvoyance, must be regarded as practically established in the minds of those who have studied them. There may be, indeed there is, still much doubt about the explanation to be attached to those facts; there is uncertainty as to their real meaning, and as to whether the idea half suggested by the word telepathy is completely correct. But the facts themselves are too numerous to be doubted, even if from the survey are excepted the directly experimental cases designed to test and bring to book this strange human faculty.

Thus for Sir Oliver Lodge telepathy opens up a new chapter in science, and is of an importance that cannot be exaggerated. Even alone it tends mightily to strengthen the argument for transcendence of mind over body, so that we may reasonably expect the one to be capable of existing independently, and of surviving the other; though by itself or in a discarnate condition it is presumably unable to achieve anything directly on the physical plane. The field of spiritualism this renowned investigator names an elusive and disappointing field of inquiry, but nevertheless offering facts that cannot be ignored and additional contributions to the demonstration of immortality.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

THE CONDUCT OF CIRCLES.

Advice to Inquirer by "M. A." (Oxon)

If you wish to see whether Spiritualism is really only jugglery and imposture, try it by personal experiment. If you can get an introduction to some experienced Spiritualist on whose good faith you can rely, ask him for advice; and if he is holding private circles, seek permission to attend one to see how to conduct seances, and what to expect. There is, however, difficulty in obtaining access to private circles and, in any case, you must rely chiefly on experiences in your own family circle, or amongst your friends, all strangers being excluded.

Form a circle of from four to eight persons, half, or at least two, of negative, passive temperament and preferably of the female sex, the rest of a more positive type. Sit, positive and negative alternately, secure against disturbance, in subdued light, round an uncovered table of convenient size. Place the palms flat upon its upper surface. The hands of each sitter need not touch those of his neighbor, though the practice is frequently adopted.

Do not concentrate attention too fixedly on the expected manifestation. Engage in cheerful but not frivolous conversation. Avoid dispute or argument. Scepticism has no deterrent effect, but a bitter spirit of opposition in a person of determined will may totally stop or decidedly impede manifestations. If conversation lags, music is a great help, if it be agreeable to all, and not of a kind to irritate the sensitive ear. Patience is essential, and it may be necssary to meet ten or twelve times at short intervals, before anything occurs. If after such a trial you still fail, form a fresh circle. An hour should be the limit of an unsuccessful seance.

If the table moves, let your pressure be so gentle on its surface that you are sure you are not aiding its motions. After some time you will probably find that the movement will continue if your hands are held over, but not in contact with, it. Do not, however, try this until the movement is assured, and be in no hurry to get messages.

When you think that the time has come, let someone take command of the circle and act as spokesman. Explain to the unseen Intelligence that an agreed code of signals is desirable, and ask that a tilt may be given as the alphabet is slowly repeated, at the several letters which form the word that the Intelligence wishes to spell. It is convenient to use a single tilt for No, three for Yes, and two to express doubt or uncertainty.

When a satisfactory communication has been established, ask if you are rightly placed, and if not, what order you should take. After this ask who the Intelligence purports to be, which of the company is the medium, and such relevant questions. If confusion occurs, ascribe it to the difficulty that exists in directing the movements at first with exactitude. Patience will remedy this. If you only satisfy yourself at first that it is possible to speak with an Intelligence separate from that of any person present, you will have gained much.

The signals may take the form of raps. If so, use the same code of signals, and ask as the raps become clear that they be made on the table, or in a part of the room where they are demonstrably not produced by any natural means, but avoid any vexatious imposition of restriction on free communication. Let the Intelligence use its own means. It rests greatly with the sitters to make the manifestations elevating or frivolous and even tricky.

Should an attempt be made to entrance the medium, or to manifest by any violent methods, ask that the attempt may deferred till you can secure the presence of some experienced Spiritualist. If this request is not heeded discontinue the sitting. The process of developing a trance medium is one that might disconcert an inexperienced inquirer.

Lastly, try the results you get by the light of Reason. Maintain a level head and a clear judgment. Do not believe everything you are told, for though the great unseen world contains many a wise and discerning spirit, it also has in it the accumulation of human folly, vanity, and error; and this lies nearer to the surface than that which is wise and good. Distrust the free use of great names. Never for a moment abandon the use of your reason. Do not enter into a very solemn investigation in a spirit of idle curiosity or frivolity. Cultivate a reverent desire for what is pure, good and true. You will be repaid if you gain only a well grounded conviction that there is life after death, for which a pure and good life before death is the best and wisest preparation.

OUR FLAG

By Mr. Will Pierce, and Read by Mrs. Frankie Cole, of Chicago, in Connection With an Address Delivered at Clinton Camp.

Here is red, for the love that's enshrined
In the depth of each patriot breast;
For the glory so firmly entwined
In this emblem of all that is best
In the struggle for freedom and right,
In the fight 'gainst oppression and wrong;
'Tis the sign of a great nation's might—
Ever fair, ever just, ever strong.

Here is white, for the purity shown
In our actions at home and aboad,
Where the world knows we're serving alone
Our conscience, our duty, our God;
May it ever be spotless and clear,
And ne'er know the guilt of a stain
No substance or shadow of fear
Could e'er be made holy again.
Here is blue, for the truth of our cause;
For fidelity, wisdom and power,
In upholding the strength of our laws
'Gainst the clamor of Anarchy's hour;
May our constancy, faith, never cease;
May we show that our motto is just;
That we're ready for war or for peace,
And at all times "in God is our trust."

Here are stars for the heroes who died
That their well-beloved country might live;
Here are stripes to be swiftly applied
To the nation presuming to give
Any cause for offense to the bird
Whose wing shields the poor and oppress,
And whose wild note of warning is heard
When danger approaches his nest.

Then hail to the flag that we love;
Fling it loose to the Heaven-sent breeze;
May the blessings of God from above
Be with it o'er land and o'er seas;
May its length or its breath ne'er grow less
While it waves o'er the brave and the true;
And may God in His goodness still bless
Old Glory—the Red, White and Blue.

SPIRIT MANIFESTATIONS.

Communication from Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, President of the State Spiritualist's Association of Texas Wherein She Gives Interesting Particulars in Reference to Mediumship.

To the Editor: I have been tempted a number of times to make the following statement since reading Mr. Hereward Carrington's report of his slate writing experience with Pierre L. O. A. Keeler:

First, let me say that I do not know Mr. Keeler. I never had a sitting with him, and I am not now and never have been a public medium; i. e., one who gives readings for a livelihood.

I have been a medium for sixteen years, giving readings to friends and some times to a friend of a friend. All of this I state merely to show I am not "defending" anybody, but making a plain statement of facts. When I began to try to develop mediumship, I sat one hour each day in a corner curtained off, alone in the room with doors and windows closed. I held double slates, closed, in my lap, with no scrap of pencil inside. Day after day for months I heard writing on the slates, crossing of t's and dotting the i's; so plain was it that it never ceased to astonish me, when upon hearing raps and opening the slates to find not a mark of any kind. I never succeeded in getting even a faint mark, yet day after day I heard the writing going on.

If I remember correctly, Mr. Carrington stated that Mr. Keeler made the sound of writing by scratching with his finger nail. I know by actual experience that spirits can and do make all the sounds of writing without leaving a visible sign, therefore it seems to me that Mr. Carrington has something yet to learn of mediumship. Even if Mr. Keeler had his slates prepared, the sound of writing could have been made by spirits, and it would have been unnecessary for Mr. Keeler to resort to so clumsy a trick as scratching the slate with his nail.

In this State I have a woman friend who has been a slate writing medium for a good many years, yet never was a public medium. I have not her permission, and therefore, do not give her name.

Visiting in her house after chores were done at night, she would take a single slate (no pencil) and hold it in her lap with her black skirt, or mine, or an old black shawl or coat—anything we could lay hands upon. We would talk on any subject, both being fluent talkers, but rarely, if ever, of the slate writing. Usually we continued to talk of whatever subject we had been discussing before I got the slate and handed to her with something to wrap it in. I never failed to get messages, and would carry on a conversation with spirit friends for an hour or two at a time. I persuaded her on one occasion to give a slate writing at a public meeting. We got a small table, a dark cloth over it. We called three gentlemen from the audience as a committee, none of them believing in spirit return. She rolled her sleeves to the shoulder and let the committee examine her hands and nails. She sat at some length from the table, and held the slate by one edge. One of the committee soon asked permission to hold a corner of the slate through the cloth. Taking hold he gradually without seeming to do so, pressed the slate upward, till it finally touched the under side of table. When taken out, the writing was in the corner he held, and facing him.

As stated above, I am not now and never have been, a public medium. I am assured that a large majority of physical phenomena (so-called) is fraudulent, but in my sitting alone for the development of mediumship, and in my later experiences, I know that some things are done by spirits that would seem by the evidence of the sense to be done by mortal. Therefore, in all tests of mediumship it seems to me to be wise to declare as fraud only those things so plainly so that "he who runs may read."

The truth is, we know so little—so little of the laws and forces of mediumship. Some of us arrogate to ourselves vast knowledge of these things, but the longer I study them, all the more do I realize that all the teaching, all the rules of all the books and teachers, are only such as we may comprehend, the deeper wider knowledge must come to us after we have grown spiritually wise enough to realize it.

PREPARES FIFTY VOLUMES FOR FREE DISTRIBUTION AND BOOK EXPLAINING REVELATIONS.

As often said in The Progressive Thinker, Spirit Return is Kaleidoscopic in its character; in fact it runs in hunderds of different channels, in many respects contradictory and confusing to one who is investigating; but whatever the method of Spirit Return, it establishes the important fact that the spirit survives the death of the body, and that is exceptionally important. In the following, from the San Francisco Examiner, "God" is supposed to communicate direct to Archie J. Inger. He hears him clairaudiently, and has extraordinary visions. Of course God DOES NOT communicate with him, but some spirit assumes the name for some special purpose, and imparts what he desires. That paper says:

Fifty volumes descriptive of spiritual visions and a book of 100,000 words entitled "The Revealed Translations of St. John's Revelation" will be published for free distribution as the inspirational works of Archie J. Inger, the exraordinary young Oakland man who believes that the voice of God is speaking through him to the world.

Wide comment among theologians and laymen generally was caused by the publicity given in yesterday's "Examiner" to a meeting between Inger and several of Alameda county's most prominent clergymen, during which the new exponent of exalted religious thought puzzled his questioners by the profundity and facility of his explanatory replies.

Inger states he will not permit one cent of profit to any person in the publishing of his teachings. He desires to emphasize his sincerity by sending forth, without personal gain, that which he declares will prove the second coming of Christ.

Regarding his meetings and the part that he is perparing to take in the redemption of mankind, Inger said:

"In the first place, I wish it to be clearly understood that this entire subject is of the utmost sanctity to me. My life is consecrated to the will of God. I have absolutely nothing material to gain, nor have I anything to lose.

"The world is ready and waiting for spiritual light. With supreme pastience Christ has delayed for nineteen senturies the fulfillment of His promise. His spiritual resurrection is at hand. He will not appear, in a literal sense, as the bodily expression of God. This was the manner of His first coming, and the memory of it has lingered to the present moment.

"Man has progressed as far as is possible without spiritual guidance. Were He not to come at this stage of the world's progress, civilization would go backward. According to man's spiritual rebirth he will advance. Material progress must henceforth depend upon spiritual knowlege.

"In abeyance to divine direction I am witholding the publication of manuscripts comprising fifty volumes descriptive of wonderful visions that have come to me since I first truly recognized the voice of God, now four years ago the 23d of July. But I shall gladly receive any investigator or skeptic who comes to me in a sincere spirit and with an honest desire to know the truth.

"I am not a fanatic, nor do I seek to expound anything that is not sane and logical.

"My father at one time belonged to the Mormon Church, but now indorses my faith. I have never been in any way associated with the Mormon Church. The Voice has warned me against that church as it is now conducted, but has never spoken against the founder of Mormonism.

"The actual knowledge of Christ's divinity is what the world needs. For centuries it has groped in blind belief of a future existence. The churches have failed to establish the truth."

LIFE'S CHANGES.

The Berkshires have their beauties,
But brief indeed their stay—
Scarce burst upon our vision
Ere passed from sight away.

The springtime and the summer
We barely recognize,
Ere all their charming glory
Has vanished from our eyes.

The gorgeous views of autumn,
On the mountain, hill and plain,
Are just as evanescent,
So briefly they remain.

Then comes the wintry blizzard—
The whirling winds and storm—
When lo! amid their howling,
Another year is born.

And thus, while we are musing,
Life's seasons come and go,
Till no more budding Aprils,
And blooming Junes we know.

The early years have vanished—
Have flown ere we're aware;
Old age is now upon us,
And hoary is our hair.

Earth's glories all have vanished,
The goal is now in sight,
Our life-tide fast is ebbing,
And soon we'll take our flight

To realms of the immortal,
Where fadeless bloom,
Afar from wintry tempests
And lowering clouds of gloom,

Where all is bright and sunny,
And flowery all the way,
In that fair land of promise
Where shines eternal day.

And there my heart is anchor'd,
In faith and hope and trust,
Where soon I'll reach that haven
Among the pure and just.

No matter for the fading,
And failures here below,
Nor yet the swiftly changing
Of seasons as they go—

No matter for the raging
Of winter's blighting storms—
Nor yet our earthy passage,
Though often paved with thorns.

Nor matters it the fading
Of youth while here in time,
For years no more are counted
In yon immortal clime.

But life beams ever brighter,
Mid scenes forever new,
Where love is everlasting,
And friendships ever true!

Camp Meetings Once More.

Impressive Thoughts and Valuable Statistics Confront the Spiritualists.

A recent article from my pen upon the subject of Spiritualist campmeetings has called forth numerous criticisms which, in the main, are courteous and considerate in character, and are, therefore, entitled to like treatment on my part. I did not expect that the people who read my article would accept my calculations without having studied the subject matter thereof most carefully, and determined for themselves the validity of my arguments. The history of our movement renders it imperative that people who think for themselves must needs arrive at certain conclusions, after having made a painstaktaking study of the facts they find on its pages. As for myself, I cannot escape from the influence these historical facts have had upon my mind. They clearly prove that our campmeetings have been a very important factor in the weakening and consequent declination of our local societies.

It was but fair that my friends, and my opponents as well, should understand that I do not mean to claim that the campmeetings have been the only cause of the overthrow of our local organizations. Perfect candor and honesty compel me to admit that three other causes have also served to hasten the decay and downfall of local work. The first of these deleterious influences is the "Free Love" element that succeeded in gaining control of our first National Association in 1872, and again in 1873. I am willing to concede that this factor was a most baleful influence in local work. I do not mean that it is so to-day, but it was the paramount issue with which we had to contend from 1872 to 1886.

The second influence that has wrought harm to our local bodies is the introduction of platform messages into our public services. From 1851 to 1861 the platform message was conspicuous by its absence from our public meetings. From 1861 to 1881, its influence was very slight. Our public meetings WERE MOST LARGELY ATTENDED at those periods when there was no test work to follow the lectures and none asked for or desired by the people in attendance. The thousands of people who filled the Auditorium hall in Philadelphia, Dodsworth hall in New York, Music hall in Boston and in all other large cities, from 1852 to 1872, afford ample evidence of the fact that the philosophical and religious aspects of Spiritualism were the topics in which thinking minds were most deeply interested. With the introduction of platform phenomena, the character of Spiritualist audiences radically changed, and, for a long time, the attendance rapidly decreased. A reaction came, and lovers of the marvelous thronged the halls that had previously been filled by the rationalists who drifted into the liberal churches as the wonders presented to the public failed to interest or instruct them.

The third influence that has militated against us in our local work is the infamous itinerant system that has forced our speakers to be CONSTANTLY ON THE MOVE, sometimes twice in a single Sunday. Had the speakers been settled and sustained, with competent mediums as their aides, I am inclined to believe that our local societies would have withstood evil effects of the "Free Love" movement, public phenomena, and even the campmeetings themselves. No speaker can do his best in giving only one lecture before a particular society. As a matter of fact, where speakers are changed every Sunday, the Spiritualist societies who follow this method, have no standing whatever in the communities where they exist, and exert no moral influence upon the city or town in which they are located. The settlement of speakers would have made it possible for the societies employing them to make themselves felt in the political, educational, and reformatory efforts of public spirited citizens. The itinerant system has cost both our local societies and our speakers heavily in finances, and in physical strength. The money wasted in railroad fares alone would pay more than half of the salary of a settled speaker.

In admitting that these three influences have seriously injured our local societies, I do not by any means retract what I have said with regard to campmeetings. I have only acknowledged that the camps are not alone responsible for the many disasters that have overtaken our local organizations. Everything I said in my previous article, regarding this same important subject, holds true to-day. In a certain state, in the year 1869, there were 63 local societies, and no campmeetings. In 1890, in the same state, there were four campmeetings and 28 local societies. 1908, there are four campmeetings, and 6 local societies, only two of which hold regular meetings throughout the year! DOES NOT THE MORAL DEDUCE ITSELF? This state does not stand alone. I have in mind another great state, in which I found that 119 local societies were in active operation 30 years ago. Two camps were established in that state, between 1882, and 1890, and today there are only 38 local societies at work, less than half of which hold regular meetings. To my mind it is very obvious that campmeetings WEAKEN, rather than STRENGTHEN, our local societies and State Associations.

I AM NOT THE ENEMY OF THE CAMPMEETING. I believe it could be made a help rather than a hindrance to our local work, if it were rightly managed. Those who oppose my views will have to admit that people waste a great deal of money upon questionable phenomena that they find at our campmeetings. They lose the spiritual and instructive influence of our thought in social pleasures, and what may be termed "psychic entertainments" to which they devote themselves while sojourning at these very pleasant resorts. If our camps were conducted as are the Chautauqua movements throughout the land, they would do us far more good than they do to-day. No one enjoys a ten days' sojourn, at a progressive camp more than I do. I like to listen to instructive lectures, and to attend seances at which I can study first hand the genuine phenomena that may be produced there. I should prefer to have those phenomena carefully recorded, analyzed and placed in orderly form by persons qualified by experience to do this important work. I make so bold as assert that our phenomena should be sought for INSTRUCTION AND SPIRITUAL ILLUMINATION, not for amusement and the "tickling of the wonder bumps" upon the heads of the curious. Some argue that this truth is ours, and that we ought to have the privilege of enjoying it. Can we not derive enjoyment from instruction, and spiritual illumination? Is not this the highest kind of enjoyment?

At this point, let me repeat my oft-stated declaration that I am not opposed to genuine phenomena of any kind, nor do I seek to rule out the platform message. I claim that all of our phenomena are too valuable, far too sacred to be used as vaudeville performances, or as objects of ridicule on the part of the unthinking. I therefore hold that they should have an honored place in the economy of thought and be presented in a dignified educational and uplifting manner to those whose privilege it is to witness their production. There are three places where our phenomenal work could be presented in a helpful manner. They are in the home circle, in the laboratory of the scientist, and in the communion service. In the home the phenomena there offered would comfort and console those who witnessed them. In the scientific laboratory, a careful analysis could be made of all of the demonstrations recorded as having taken place there, and utilized in educational work. In the communion service, the wonder mongers, and curiosity seekers, would have no place. Those who were present could enjoy the beautiful platform messages given them unto the uttermost.

It does not discredit any genuine medium to urge that she should be paid a living salary for her work, and that her demonstrations should be carefully safeguarded from the attacks of the over-credulous, and over-skeptical, who seek her. Florence Cook and Mrs. Piper are striking examples of what can be done when mediums are properly protected and cared for. No medium is protected, or even decently sustained, when she is compelled to give her demonstrations at the close of a public lecture, or in the form of a spectacular entertainment. Her phenomena are as valuable as is the lecture, when she is true to her mediumship. I am convinced that our lectures and platform messages should not be presented at one and the same service. DIGNIFY THEM BOTH BY GIVING THEM AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY TO DO, AND TO BE AT THEIR BEST.

I admit that the campmeetings have in past years done a great deal of good. I admit that it is more than pleasant to enter into the social life that can be found at all of these resorts. I admit that many of the lectures have been reported by the secular press, and thereby carried instruction to thousands of people who never attend Spiritualist meetings. I admit further that some of our phenomena have been published to the world through the same channel. These admissions by no means invalidate my argument. I claim that the concrete influence of Spiritualism is of far greater value than its abstract influence can possibly be. Local societies, and state association, ought to do concrete work. They would do it if they were rightly managed and sustained. Campmeetings interest people abstractly in Spiritualism, and do not lead them to unite with local or state organizations. If Spiritualism is only a diffusive, differentiated, and inchoate force, having no definite purpose other than abstract work, then that is all that it needs to offer to the world. Which do Spiritualists prefer, practical results or glittering abstractions?

All movements are judged by their effects upon the lives and characters of the people who follow them. There are reforms to be established in all fields of human endeavor. The sick and the needy should receive attention. Education should be provided for those who have it not, also for those who wish to pursue the study of psychic science. Elemosynary institutions are necessities as civilization is to-day. Provisions for those who are past labor, or who have been rendered helpless through seeming accidents, can be provided in no other way, unless funds are raised from which they could be pensioned. Where are the temples, or church buildings, that Spiritualist societies ought to have as their permanent homes? Where are our schools, hospitals, infirmaries, and other institutions that are designed to benefit the public? Where is our endowment fund from which pensions could be paid the needy, weak local societies sustained, worthy speakers and mediums paid living salaries, children's Sunday schools established, and all lines of progressive work upheld as they should be? The money that should be in this fund has been thrown away in the payment of excessive railroad fares, in sustaining questionable phenomena, in seeking momentary amusement, in large donations to the unworthy, and in almost selfish indulgence at some of our summer assemblies.

I have tried to treat my subject fairly, and without the slightest animosity in my mind toward any man, or body of men. If my conclusions are erroneous, I want to be shown my errors, in order that I may correct them. If my facts can be controverted in a kindly, straightforward spirit, let it be done at once, so that all of the workers for our Cause can meet upon a common ground and work together, as one man, for a movement that should be to us all the one great treasure of our lives. I do not expect the egotistic individualist to take any interest in reform work, in local or state organizations, or in any other movement that would help anyone else. Such a one cares only for himself, and always refuses the helping hand to every worthy sister or worthy brother. I will deal with this man at some future time in an article that will enable him to see himself as others see him. In these pages I am talking with my friends, and those who are honestly opposed to my views. I consider them also my friends, for I know they are as honest in their views as I am in mine. Let us reason together, and be led to the goal of truth by the facts we discover on our way.

Yours for Spiritualism. HARRISON D. BARRETT.

THE PROGRESSIVE CHURCHES

Another Preacher With Brains to be Ejected from the Church.

If matters go on long as they have been going, the ranks of orthodox preachers will contain but few men of ability and education. The men of brains are pretty rapidly leaving old orthodoxy, or are being forced out as heretics by the theological mossbacks who still believe in an infallible Bible, an angry God, the "fall," total depravity of children, infant damnation, the blood atonement, an endless hell for heretics and a glorious heaven at death for everyone who accepts free salvation through the shed blood of Jesus, no matter how atrociously wicked his life may have been.

One of the latest "heresy" trials reported by the associated press, has been held at Hope, Arkansas. The dispatch is as follows:

Hope, Ark., July 13.—The Uuachita Presbytery has assembled here for the trial of Rev. F. E. Maddox, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Texarkana, on charge of heresy. The charges are based on utterances in a series of sermons which Dr. Maddox delivered in his church, and which attracted attention throughout the south-west. The objections are based on Dr. Maddox's views in relation to salvation and the inspiration of the Scriptures.

Dr. Maddox holds that salvation is an evolution from within and not an importation from without, that is a development of a divinely implanted gift and not a new gift divinely implanted. He holds that men are saved from sin by grace as the child is saved from ignorance by education. As to the Scriptures he holds that they are inspired, but that they are not inerrant. The authors of them were neither reminiscent nor infallible, and there is no proof that they were made so by inspiration. The thought of the Bible came from God, but men expressed it as they understood it and in language most intelligible to them and their contemporaries. Scientific and historical errors and defective conception of morality are due to the defective knowledge of the writers and may be accounted for by the date the book was written and the elementary training of the author.

The defendant is regarded as a very able and scholarly man, aged about 40 years, who has built up a large church. When objection to his sermons was brought to his attention Dr. Maddox asked for an expression from his church, which all but unanimously upheld him in his theology."

It may be noticed in the foregoing account that the laity of Mr. Maddox's church almost unanimously sustained him. I have noticed in accounts of other heresy trials similar statements. This would indicate what I believe is true, that the laity are much more advanced and liberal in their theology than the clergy; and it is not strange that this is so. Preachers have been taught a great mass of fables and rubbish. Much that has been put into their heads about God, the creation, the fall, the flood, the virgin born God, salvation through blood, Heaven, hell, the physical resurrection of the body, etc., etc., has been shown to be false, both historically and scientifically. The masses have not to any large extent, studied these old pagan doctrines. Their brains are less beclouded and befuddled by the rubbish of ancient times. They have more practical common sense than the clergy, and a keener intuition as to justice and fitness of things. They are closer to nature, hence in nearly all the heresy trials of which I have had a knowledge, a large majority of the members stood by, and for, their pastor.

The clergy of the Catholic and Protestant orthodox churches are the least progressive, most conservative, and more mentally befogged than any other class of intelligent citizens. It is a hopeful sign, however, when we see the more intelligent ones breaking away from the paganistic doctrines of orthodoxy, and giving utterance to their best thought, even at the risk of being ejected from the church as heretics.

THE SONG OF THE SOUL VICTORIOUS.

I stand in the Great Forever,
I lave in the ocean of Truth;
I bask in the golden sunshine
Of endless love and youth.
And God is within and around me,
All good is forever mine;
To all who seek, it is given,
And it comes by a law divine.

In the deathless glory of spirit,
That knows no destruction nor fall,
From the immortal fires of heaven,
To the plains of earth I call!
Who is this "I" that is speaking—
This being is wondrous in might?
'Tis a part of the primitive essence,
A spark of the Infinite Light!

Blasphemous and vain they call me,
What matters it all to me?
Side by side we are marching onward,
And in time we will all agree.
Oh! I stand in the Great Forever,
All things to me are divine;
I eat of the heavenly manna,
I drink of the heavenly wine,

In the gleam of the shining rainbow,
The Father's love I behold,
As I gaze on its radiant blending,
Of crimson and blue and gold.
In all the bright birds that are singing,
In all the fair flowers that bloom,
Whose welcome aromas are bringing
Their blessings of sweet perfume.

In the glorious tint of the morning,
In the gorgeous sheen of the night,
Oh! my soul is lost in raptures,
And my senses are lost in sight.
Come back, O, my soul, in thy straying,
Let my wandering pinions be furled;
O, speed through the heavenly ether,
To this prosy and sense-bound world.

They say I am only mortal;
Like others I'm born to die;
In the mighty will of the spirit
I answer, "Death I defy!"
And I feel a power uprising,
Like the power of an embryo God;
With a glorious wall it surrounds me,
And lifts me up from the sod.

I am born to die!! Ah, never;
This spirit is all of me;
I stand in the Great Forever—
O God, I am one with Thee!
I think of this bright immortal,
And my being expands like a rose,
As an odorous cloud of incense
Around and about me flows.

A glorious song of rejoicing,
In an innermost spirit I hear,
And it sounds like heavenly voices,
In a chorus divine and clear.
Oh, the glory and joy of living!
Oh! the inspiration I feel!
Like the halo of love they surround me,
With new-born raptures and zeal,

I gaze through the dawn of the morning,
And I dream 'neath the stars of the night,
And I bow my head to the blessing,
Of this wonderful gift of Light.
O, God, I am one forever,
With Thee, by the glory of birth!
The celestial powers proclaim it
To the utmost bounds of earth.

Ye pilgrims of varied probation,
Ye teachers and saviors of men,
To your heaven-born revelations
My spirit shall answer "Amen."
With you in the Great Forever,
With the children of earth I stand,
And this light flowing out like a river,
Shall bless and redeem the land,

Thus I stand in the Great Forever,
With Thee as eternities roll;
My spirit forsaketh me never,
Thy Love is the Home of my soul.

EXPLAINS SPIRITUAL FORCES.

Two Interesting Lectures by Oscar A. Edgerly at Camp Chesterfield.

The increasing attendance at the Spiritualists' camp meeting at Chesterfield, Ind., says the Muncie Morning Star, has necessitated the utilizing of accommodations in the adjoing village of Chesterfield. Each car arriving at the park gate today was crowded with people from far and near. Many brought suit cases, suggesting several days' stay at the camp.

The lecture platform at both sessions today was occupied by Oscar A. Edgerly, of New York city. For two months each year Edgerly is engaged in giving test seances and demonstrations for the Psychological Research society at Washington, D. C. He has devoted the past twenty-two years to the exposition of the phenomena of spiritualism. Although having never studied the science of medicine or anatomy, Mr. Edgerly, while under the influence of his control, delivers a lecture which is said to be surprisingly accurate by members of the medical fraternity. The control at the morning lecture was said be that of a physician named Chandler.

The Processs of "Control"

The speaker stated that, in order for the spirit power to obtain control, the medium must first enter a somnambulistic state very similar to the hypnotic in material life. This was caused by the blood for a moment rushing from the brain, when the spirit energy assumed control of the medium's faculties, after which the control could play upon the faculties of the medium as a skilled musician might perform on a musical instrument. The manipulating spirit stimulates the perceptive energy of the brain and the medium can receive communicated information from all over the world as by mental telepathy, describing places, persons, and scenes in other lands, which they have never seen with the external eye.

The transmission of ideas from the brain of the spirit guide to that of the medium is accomplished by the utilization of vibrations upon the nerve energy, which are abnormally vitalized to respond to the will of the controling spirit. The healing of physical ailments is accomplished by the focusing of this energy upon the centre of the nerve centers, from which the parts afflicted are fed, and by suggestion the disarranged tissue is repaired and the pain disappears. In the practice of the physician's art and the use of drugs, one portion of the human body that is not impaired is utilized to build up the diseased or afflicted parts, and when the vitality of the body is sufficient to stand the strain, the patient recovers, but should the vitality be sapped, the patient's body disintegrates. The ailments of humanity may be treated by drawing upon the mighty energy that surrounds the earth and the sapping of vital elements from the body be avoided. As science advances this practice will more and more prevail until the ailments that now afflict humanity will be disappeared.

Forces of Nature.

The accomplishments of mediums, which are deemed miraculous, are but the applications of the forces of nature, he said, and will soon become as commonplace and as small a mystery as the phonograph or the telephone of today. The development of Spiritualism is but the awakening of knowledge of this wonderful power and energy in nature.

All nature is being materialized and dematerialized—as an example, the piece of granite which disappears from sight through the action of intense heat or the disappearance of metal under the action of strong chemicals. The materializing medium utilizes these powers and overcomes the forces of gravitation, as in the moving table. In this test there are no spirit hands that move the object. The controlling spirit focuses the vital energy of the medium above the table and by force of will power overcomes the force of gravity, and the table or object is drawn away from earth.

The necessity for darkness in the materializing seance, he said, is because of light being a disintegrating force in nature.

The controlling influence in preparing the materialized body gathers material from the atmosphere and forms a nebulae which assumes the form and feature of the spirit personally desired to present. Their ethereal figure is only perceptible by the inner or spiritual eye, hence its effervescence at the approach of light. As the intercommunication with the spirit world is developed knowledge of the mysteries of nature will be made more clear and what now are unsolved problems will become common knowledge. The subject of Spiritualism is a subtle one and requires concentration of thought and mind power to grasp its most beautiful and wonderful manifestations.

Influence of Heredity.

The afternoon address was directed to an exposition of the influence of heredity and environment on a human being. The speaker asserted that his control on this occasion was the spirit of a Presbyterian minister named Thomas Campbell and a descendent of the eminent Scotch divine, Thomas Boston, who preached in Edinburg, Scotland, in the seventeenth century. By comparison of the lives of children of common parentage he illustrated the influence of heredity upon the human race. The pre-natal influence of a child often determined its career in the earth plane, the environments of a human being largely determined by the attitude of the being toward society in general. The unfavorable environments of a being might counteract the good tendencies received through heredity or vice versa. The power to place one self in a position of susceptibility to the influence of friend in the spirit world was of vast importance to those living in the material world. The lives of those on the earth plane can only be influenced as the will is made submissive to the controlling influence of those in the spirit world.

The lecture was succeeded by a daylight seance by Mrs. Maggie Vestal and test seance by George Letford, the drummer medium from Florida. Spirit photographs were produced by the Bangs sisters.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y. writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

AND STILL ANOTHER DOUBTER.

The University of Chicago Again Heard on Bible Infallibility.

It is exceedingly difficult to explain why, after all these past years of outspoken condemnation of the absurd and incredible stories of the Bible not only by infidels, skeptics, agnostics, materialists and Free Thinkers, but by ecclesiastics, theological professors, preachers and laymen, there has yet no step been taken to erase, expunge and thoroughly eliminate those from the Bible, the catechism and all other literature of the church. They are all yet taught as orthodox truth, or avoided, evaded, dodged, or referred to as allegories, parables, etc., not intended to engage the serious attention of the parishioner.

The lamented late president of the University of Chicago frequently expressed his regret that during the last fifty years or more, not a single change has been made in the catechism of the Protestant church; the very same old fish stories being found in it to-day that were in it a half century or more ago. Nothing in the catechism or Sunday school book of to-day to show that even the Bible has undergone a revision, such as it was, and not one Sunday school scholar or teacher in a thousand can cite a single Bible passage that has been revised, and it is a question whether very many preachers in the pulpit can do so. How many of them know what disposition was made of the eleven last verses of the last chapter of Mark of the old version?

And now comes Professor Herbert L. Willett, an instructor in the divinity school of the University of Chicago, who also and likewise as many who preceded him have done, declares the Old Testament, to be fiction. He said the miracles of the good book were fabrications and nothing more than fables. Notwithstanding his assertions, which all intelligent men and women will accept as true, it is safe to say that those unseasonable stories will continue for the next fifty years to occupy their places in the Bible, catechism and general literature of the church as veritable truths. Strange how difficult if not impossible it is to wipe out religious error when once it has become aged, or after it has been taught for centuries as the truth.

Professor Willett classes the following stories as fiction.

Jonah being swallowed by a whale. And where is the intelligent man or woman to-day who believes this story?

The Red sea opening up to allow the children of Israel to escape from the bondage in Egypt. And who believes this story?

The story of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden. Who, pray, believes this story?

Lot's wife turning to salt when she turned and looked back at the forbidden city. Is there a preacher in America who really believes this story? If not, why are not some steps taken to wipe it off of the sacred page?

Abraham taking his son, Isaac, into the mountains and offering him as a sacrifice. Who believes this?

Samson slaying 10,000 Philistines with the jaw-bone of an ass. This certainly is more incredible than the phenomena observed at a Spiritualistic seance, and yet Christians who are supposed to believe that Samson did this job, are disposed to ridicule these phenomena.

The falling of the walls of Jericho. And who believes this story?

Is it not full time that the Christian's Bible was made more readable and credible than it now is, and that the catechism and literature of the church and Sunday school were correspondingly corrected, so that our children may not be taught now that which they will repudiate in after years. Is not the church itself making infidels by the course it is pursuing? Must our children discover in their maturer years that these Bible stories are no more true and to be believed than the story of Santa Claus? Will not the reaction when it does come be sufficient to obliterate from the minds of Sunday school scholars every vestige of regard, respect and reverence for even whatever is true in the Bible? I think so.

MRS. THEDFORD'S EXPOSURE.

She Was Found to be Posing as a Spirit, Standing Outside of the Cabinet, Dressed in Artificial Toggery.

To the Editor:—Under separate cover I send a copy of the "Oklahoman," containing a short sketch of the exposure of a Mrs. Thedford, of Texas, who came here as a materializing medium. She held her seance at Capitol Hill, a small town south of the river, to avoid the heavy occupation tax imposed upon such as her like.

Having heard of the arrival I attended the first "seance" held, just to see who had come and what was going on, and that one exhibition was enough for me. I posted my acquaintances as to the quality of her "spirits." They took the hint, somewhat astonished, but with the result that several tested the "ethereal" apparitions and found them to be flesh and bone—earthly. The climax came on Tuesday night, July 28, when flashlights were turned on a supposed "spirit" and all did see the alleged medium herself standing in the room with "spirit dresses" on. No further comment seems necessary, as this kind of seance is known to most investigators down to the finest detail. The many fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, the grand-fathers, babies and mother-in-laws, that "materialized," without exception had forgotten their names, and could only remember when reminded of them.

In the opening address the medium stated, that she had gone into trances, been clairvoyant, etc., since her early childhood, had been operated upon for supposed epilepsy once, and that she thought a stay of a month or two in Oklahoma would greatly benefit her health. Well, we hope it did.

Her performances were of the crudest kind, lacking the finer touches of a "higher" education that generally makes these 50 cents to $1.00 seances worth while having seen. Oklahoma City certainly wants a better show for the money.

"The Psychic Riddle." Wonderfully rich in Psychic Experience. Told in a sensible, practical way, by Rev. I. K. Funk. Price $1.00.

Gleanings by the Wayside.

Written by Henry Morrison Tefft, Norwich, N. Y.

It would seem, if the universe had been arranged upon an ethical plan, that it would not have been ordered for one grade of beings to live upon another, and that man, the highest moral and intellectual conception of the Creator, was to have his pick from the whole world of such creatures as he chose for slaughter and digestion. If there is a just God who presides over the destinies of men, then the inequalities of life need explanation.

If nature works in an orderly manner; if one rule applies to like events, conditions and persons, then we can see how reason prevails and arbitrary rulings disappear. "The deeds and doings of the human race," says a writer, "are just as certainly under the dominion of laws—that is, they are just as certainly bound together in an invariable sequence as are the facts in the laboratory."

Action and reaction are equal, otherwise there would be no equilibrium in the universe.

Along with the blessing goes the curse. Take away the shadow and we should not enjoy the light. All advancement in the physical, moral and spiritual world comes from sacrifice. A person who has had no difficulties to overcome has never achieved any victories. It is only through tribulation that the highest estate in mind and character is reached.

The greatest achievements are not accomplished in the calm moments of life—we must be moved by a mighty impulse. Failure to some men brings new vigor, to others despair. But the man who succumbs to adverse conditions never conquers. Plants and animals reach their highest perfection in the latitude where the temperature is the lowest in which they can live and grow well.

Things that are new and novel are not always the best. Inventions cheapen articles, but often debase them. Steel pounded out by hand makes a better metal than can be produced by machinery. Ordinary farm work develops better athletes than the gymnasium. Nothing ever succeeds except through struggle.

The beginning, whether in nature, art or invention, is crude and gives little promise of its future success. All life was once barbarous. The most delicious fruit was once a worthless berry. But the barbarian finally becomes the civilized man; the crude ore is converted into the finest gold; the Indian trail widens into the well traveled road. No one can tell the result of a single venture. The smallest incident suggests some universal law; an accident produces a revolution. The blowing up of the Maine precipitated the war with Spain and as Ingalls said, changed the geography of the country in sixty days; and now it is claimed that its destruction came from causes within the vessel and not from any agency without. We speak of things great or small, important or insignificant, without knowing the meaning of what we say.

"The marvel of a humming-bird's wing," says Michelet, "transcends the milky way." The greatest blessings come to individuals and peoples in disguise; misfortune becomes opportunity. What the world most deprecates is often what is most needed. War is as necessary to a nation as peace; it elevates and strengthens a people. Without it patriotism would die. As out of the storm and the tempest comes a purified air, so out of revolution comes a purified government. History shows that "revolutions, whether religious, political or social, mean progress. They give birth to our sweetest songs, our finest poetry and most exalted fiction. "The finest works of the imagination," says Macaulay, "have always been produced in times of political convulsions, as the richest vineyards and the sweetest flowers always grow on the soil which has been fertilized by the fiery deluge of a volcano. * * * Can we doubt that Shakespeare was in a great measure produced by the Reformation, and Wordsworth by the French Revolution."

I place no absolute faith in the makers of religions. They are good men, but not authoritative. All beliefs need occasionally to be revised. When a man gives you the formula of his creed, you have got his exact mental measure. "When you label your faith, you limit it."

It is lack of vision that requires us to need guides. If all men could see clearly, if error could be eliminated, if truth should ever become universal—then there would be no more need of preachers, teachers or creeds. It is in the power of any community to abolish all the evils within its borders. But if every sin was wiped out, if equity and justice everywhere reigned, what would become of the reformers, missionaries and priests? What would be the result if from every pulpit in the land there should come forth "the voice of God unchanged in word or tone?"

"And did there come from out the Holy See
The voice of God unchanged in word or tone—
To-morrow—and where would St. Peter's be?
Ask Carthage, Nineveh or Babylon.
And did that self-same message pathway find
From every pulpit straight to every pew,
To-morrow it would be the public mind
To give those preachers nothing more to do."

There is more saving power in Christ's sermon on the Mount than in all the theologies and creeds that were ever written. Printed prayers may do when the world moves smoothly and the weather is fair, but in a tempest the soul discards all forms. The most earnest supplication is not uttered in words. Thought is weakened when put into language. Aspirations cannot be voiced. The soul in its deepest need is dumb.

It is so easy to reduce substance to shadow, reality to form and ceremony that the heart sickens when we compare the simplicity of the Master's teaching with the complex beliefs which the church from time to time has prescribed for its adherents. No person was ever reclaimed from a life of sin by argument. The emotions, the sentiments, the feelings must be reached before the heart is touched. The moral law is stronger than statute law; love is a stronger force in the world than hate; more people are saved through hope than fear. Authority takes away liberty; stops growth and advancement—it means death.

No man can safely be given absolute power. Humanity can only be trusted when at bay. Both civil and religious institutions become cruel, arbitrary and unjust whenever allowed to hold supreme command. Unless surrounded with proper safeguards, church and state, alike, become dangerous to the people. Yet in every community, the world over, there is always a principle working for righteousness and which finally prevals. Carl Maria von Weber was right in saying that, "The individual is an ass, but the whole is, nevertheless, the voice of God."

The more intellectual and refined society becomes in mind the more barbarous it is of heart. The crude, unlettered person is far more generous in his nature than the cultured and mature one. If you want favors do not go to the rich and retired individual, but to him who is struggling from early dawn to late at night to earn his daily bread. Every dollar added to a man's purse hardens his heart.

Reforms always start from beneath and never from above. The rulers of society are always satisfied with things as they are. Those on top never want to be disturbed. The prophets and revolutionists come from the common people. The aristocracy of a country are dead; all growth and progress comes from the democracy. A revival, a reform movement, whether in religion, politics or on social lines, gets its enthusiasm from the multitude. In our own land the east is rich, cultured and conservative—the west crude, vigorous and revolutionary. "In some ideal ways," says Norman Hapgood, "the West pilots the East. * * * The successful purifying political movements are mostly in the West. The new note of politics is struck there; the moral note." As wealth increases morals decrease. There is more contentment among the lowly than among the high-born.

Culture, a high state of civilization, does not bring happiness but suffering. A savage does not know mental anguish as compared with civilized man. The higher the refinement, the greater the capabilities of misery.

Guizot in his "History of Civilization," says, "It may be asked, it is even now disputed whether civilization be a good or an evil." There is hardly a fact in life that is not both affirmed and denied. It has been said that the Past would not know hereself if she could read history. No man would recognize his likeness from the picture the biographer makes of him. Saints are transformed into sinners and sinners into saints according to the opinions or prejudices of the writer, regardless of facts. Contemporaneous history is uncertain. As a rule, all the people know about a man is what the newspapers say of him, and that is very unreliable information. They paint a person white or black, moral or immoral, honest or dishonest, according to whim, fancy or interest. The public is as ignorant as to the real character and personality of the individual as though he did not exist.

Some men increase and others diminish upon acquaintance. Some people dwell in palaces while living but their names go to the garret when dead; others live in poverty and degradation during life, but their names are indelibly written in the halls of fame—to remain there forever. "Cervantes and Bunyan moved countless multitudes from their prison, as Rousseau, Richter, and Goldsmith have influenced generations from their garrets." Time adds luster to greatness, and dullness to mediocrity. The name of the true patriot, the true Christian, the true statesman, or the true artist, always grows brighter as the years roll on. People do not stop to inquire, after a man is dead, whether he was rich or poor. Many questions which affect one in his life-time, after death, cease to be important or even hindrances to the spread of his fame.

"Because Schubert died in want and sorrow," writes Marie Corelli, "that does not interfere with his creations. Because Wagner is voted impossible and absurd by many * * * that does not offer any obstacle to the steady spread of his fame." The greatest books are the least read; the greatest men are the least understood. No man is a good judge of his own work. What will remain and what will perish cannot be foretold. The most insignificant event in his life lives, while that which he deemed important dies and is forgotten.

Milton, it is said, thought "Paradise Regained" a greater work than "Paradise Lost;" but little attention is now given the former while the latter continues to be read by each succeeding generation with unabating interest.

Lincoln little realized when writing his Gettysburg oration, that he was producing a masterpiece in literature which would remain a classic while the English language was spoken. Stanton, in speaking of the occasion of its delivery, is quoted as saying, "Edward Everett has made a speech that will make three columns in a newspaper, and Mr. Lincoln has made a speech of perhaps forty or fifty lines. Everett's is a speech of a scholar polished to the last possibility. It is elegant and it is learned, but Lincoln's speech will be read by a thousand men where one reads Everett's and will be remembered as long as anybody's speeches are remembered who speak the English language."

Lincoln's oration might not have had as much polish in it as did Everett's, but it had more soul. Oratory does not wholly consist in words or manner. The highest form of poetry is sometimes hidden in prose. Scholarship alone cannot produce a great speech. Some things cannot be made arbitrarily. You cannot manufacture a joke—it is born in a moment. You cannot write a national hymn as you can a speech, a lecture or a sermon; it has to grow; it must have a history.

Along with the visible powers that are at work in the world goes the invisible; the latter is more potent than the former and surer of the goal for which it is reaching. Customs, habits, laws, constitutions, are all growths, not creations. Each new religion must be taken from what has gone before. No one can tell where was the beginning of a single great invention, thought, principle or institution. It takes ages to mature a myth, such as tradition has handed down from the earliest records of recorded time. Each age gives it added value. A fable is a true gauge of the mental development of a people with whom it originates.

We are responsible for but little that comes to us in life. Circumstances make our religion, our politics, our conduct and morals. In the last analysis everything is a delusion; nothing definite, certain, tangible; love turns to hatred, friendship to indifference, faith to infidelity. Even what our senses speak to us is a deception. Physically, we are told, there is no such thing as light, heat, color or sound; that they are simply impressions made upon us by different rates of vibration or "modes of motion."

While many things in this world seem uncertain, transient and changing, in fact they are eternal; all leave a history. A word spoken never dies; an act done becomes a picture "incorporated in a ray of light," and never grows dim. The study of nature and her laws is more enchanting than fairy tales; her secrets more wonderful than are contained in a magician's wand. No fiction ever equalled in thrilling interest the true history of a single human soul.

AN EXCELLENT PROCESS

New Methods of Preserving Eatables.—A Blessing to Mankind.

Fresh foods by virtue of vapors is the new idea of Brussels, says the Chicago Tribune. The comestible is inserted in an airtight chamber into which is passed the vapor from a secretly prepared pastille, and food is immersed in this atmosphere for a certain peroid. Its surface becomes coated with an invisible film or sheathing, permeating to a slight depth from the oxidization of the air, and thus arrests putrefaction. On being withdrawn from the chamber the article of food can be exposed to the ordinary atmosphere for almost an indefinite period without any apprehensions concerning its wholesomeness and purity, since the gas deposit upon the surface does not evaporate until brought into contact with heat. When the edible is place in the oven or boiled upon the fire the gas is liberated, leaving the article precisely in the same condition as it was before treatment. No traces of the vapor can be detected either by the palate or smell. The tablets are composed of some ten ingredients. They are white in color, about the size of a silver quarter, and approximately four times as thick. The chemical composition of the vapor generated may be best described as the purest form of carbon. Its presence can be detected easily by its pungent odor. The process is fundamentally the same whether used in the home or on board ship, and it is supposed to solve the oft vexed problem of keeping for an indefinite period perishable foods, such as butter, meat, poultry, fish, eggs, and milk. After being sterilized these articles will retain their purity and full flavor for weeks without the slightest deterioration. Moreover, the carbon is an excellent germicide. Meat treated by it becomes immune from the ravages of flies and other insects. The carbon vapor completely kills all organisms within fifteen minutes, whether typhoid or cholera bacilli or less dread forms of life. The food is said to remain as digestible as ever with the same taste, precisely as before treatment. Milk can be treated with this vapor by passing it in the form of a spray through a carbon atmosphere for a fraction of a second. Milk so treated is rendered germ proof for a long period, irrespective of climatic conditions. Yet there is only one part carbon to one thousand parts milk. In eggs treated with carbon vapor the albumen remains perfectly clear, while the yolk retains its original bright hue.

CREDIT TO FATHER.

No picture has more welcome place
Upon the wall than mother's face;
But there is one belongs beside,
That ever smiles with manly pride,
As if to still protect his bride;
It is the face of Father.

When weary days brought children's needs,
And boyish plays and youthful deeds;
When noble tho'ts and manly aims,
And future promises and claims
Inspired for the higher fames,
There came the hope of Father.

When mother's hands were weak with toil
That marked the day with midnight oil;
When all our hungry forms were fed;
When all were snugly tucked in bed,
And each one's "lay-me-down" was said,
Then all was peace for Father.

No angel face can fill the place
Of mother of the human race;
But still the fact remains the same,
No mortal children ever came
To live and be, and wear a name,
Without some kind of Father.

Let mothers have all credit due
For life and love's expresssion true;
For smoothing down the rougher ways,
For blessed peace in childhood's days,
But give a little soulful praise
And credit unto Father.

A Suggestive Item.

The progress made in physiology and pathology in the last quarter of a century has been remarkable. The localization of brain lesions from their varied effects or symptoms, is one of the great triumphs of science.

We now know, also, that right-sided paralysis with loss of speech occurs in right-handed people, and that left-sided paralysis with loss of speech occurs in persons who have been left-handed in life. The faculty of speech is located in that part of the brain or its hemisphere which governs the hand which is most used. Hand and speech therefore are physiologically connected.

Verily, by constant, continuous searching and pegging away mentally and scientifically, we do find out things.

Lily Dale Camp, N. Y.

Any one entering the grounds at Lily Dale and seeing the throng here today, the largest during the season, would realize the fact that Spiritualism notwithstanding the knock-out blows that have been dealt to it, is still very much alive. From 8:30 in the morning, when Dr. A. D. Haines who leads the Forest Temple music sounds his cornet till 10:30 at night something is doing at Lily Dale. Not one day but every day. A continuous performance of meetings, classes, seance and entertainments. Sunday, just closed was no exception only that the population was nearly doubled.

E. W. Sprague and Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond were the principal speakers of the day, with Mrs. Sprague as test medium.

Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. R. S. Lillie and Lyman C. Howe improvised a poem jointly from subjects furnished by the audience.

Forest Temple was crowded to overflowing, two-thirds of the audience stood around under the trees.

Tuesday closed with an entertainment given jointly by local talent and selections from Elzor and McArthur's vaudeville entertainers located in tents outside the grounds. A trio of contortionists, father, mother and child, "Baby" June, six years old gave an exceptionally fine performance. So did Master Howard with his rolling globe and see-saw.

Frederick Stillman's impersonations were repeatedly encored, so also was Mr. J. T. Lillie in his musical selections closing with "The Web of Life" which was most beautifully rendered. Miss De Long in a musical selection and Mrs. Harris in a German one, completed the program, of amusement which has been opened with a concert by Assembly Band.

The Thought Exchange, held twice a week and presided over by our National President Dr. Geo. B. Warne, is one of the attractions at Lily Dale and like conference, it calls out bright people, many of them professional speakers and mediums not on the regular program. In discussing the subject "How can we distinguish between genuine Spirit Messages and that which comes from the sub-conscious mind of the medium or the sitter telepathically," Dr. Warne declared telepathy was not an established fact in science as many thought. He presented arguments and facts to prove that telepathy was spirit communion with a spirit at each end of the telepathic line.

He made a brilliant defense of this radical position but it was attacked by Hon. Chas. Schirm, National vice-president; and the two distinguished gentlemen succeeded in splitting the audience about equally between them and the question is still unsettled.

If Lily Dale did not have such deep love for the Morris Pratt Institute, the only college owned and controlled by Spiritualists, she might set herself up as a rival.

She is veritably a school for intellectual and spiritual education.

Classes representing all phases of development are being held by teachers of national and international reputations. The Lyceum with its fifty odd enrolled pupils represents the primary department of this much needed work. Mrs. Peterson and her corps of teachers furnish a pleasant entertainment each Friday as a result of their labors, and the little people enjoy showing the "grown-ups" how much they know.

Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader is assisting in training the Lyceum scholars

Mrs. Lillie's class in psychometry and clairvoyance is augmented by practical demonstrations Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mrs. Richmond and others assist. Mrs. Richmond's poetical guide Ouina entertained and instructed the class. When asked if she had known Mrs. Richmond long she answered, "Oh, yes, I knew her long before she was born."

Mrs. Sprague gave individual readings from the sound of the voice, from being touched while standing with her back to the audience, and in only one instance did she make a mistake, and that was caused by confusion in the audience.

Geo. W. Freeman, principal of the correspondence school of Esperanto, located at Sinclairville, N. Y., has organized a class in this international language, and the students are quite enthused over it, but when we try to talk in it here on the grounds, the uninitiated attribute the attack to Indian controls.

An Esperanto card party and a banquet are being arranged for, where Esperanto will be used instead of English.

Other classes are conducted by Mrs. Tyler Moulton, psychic palmist, William Frederic Keeler of the institute of Applied Psychology, Mrs. Royal Williams, occult scientist, H. O. Crocker, divine healer, and others.

A benefit seance was given by Ernest Armburg, well known at Lily Dale; also Mrs. MaryM'Farland of Pittsburg. Both these seances brought good results in tests given to the patrons, and help to deserving mediums.

The Morriss Pratt Institute has just been called to the attention of the people at Lily Dale by giving the conference time to its interests. Mrs. Richmond presided. Dr. Warne, E. W. Sprague and Rev. Thomas Grimshaw all pleaded eloquently for the support of this college. Dr. Warne gave the treasurer's report which showed that the students paid half the expenses, and the faculty's labor was mostly a labor of love. Prof. Weaver as principal and his devoted wife receiving only their board.

Time Corrects All Errors.

Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch, pastor of Sinai Temple of Chicago, prominent as a Hebrew scholar, in a discourse some time ago, proposed a revision of the Bible, with elimination of all matter appearing before the first commandment given to Moses. He said:

"The story of the earth's creation is unnecessary, because it is unscientific and ridiculous. It is a miracle from first to last, and miracles should not be believed in. What is worse, it puts God in the wrong light. It makes him out to have human qualities. From such an account as this we get the impression that God was a carpenter who worked so hard he had to have a rest."

Be patient, good friends, it is only a matter of time when the present errors, and of false history will take its departure with other systems of barbarian religion, and science will come to the front sustaining the truths of Spiritualism. Heaven hasten the day when such a desirable culmination of events shall be a reality.

Good Advice.

Said Rev. Chas. E. Jefferson, D.D., LL.D., in a sermon to his Tabernacle church, New York, awhile ago:

"Do not follow the preachers blindly, for they are human. Their insight may be defective, and they may not interpret correctly the mind of God. You cannot afford to follow them without thinking."

The reverend doctor should have repeated Bishop Grafton's statement, that "Ministers teach what the church instructs them to preach, not what they believe," so put no trust in any statement they make. They are the shysters of the church; God's pettifoggers, if the reader prefers, and the most worthless of human kind; for their knowledge of God is derived from a book whose origin and history from its very beginning was fraudulent.

Bravely Said.

A news dispatch from Akron, Ohio, of date July 28, said:

"Denouncing preachers as 'money grabbers,' the Rev. Arthur Gee, formerly of Philadelphia, retired as minister of Arlington Avenue Baptist church, in his farewell sermon made scathing reference to the ministry. He said in part: 'There is too much of a commercial feeling in the churches. Churchianity is taking the place of Christianity. I won't accept any creed to bind my faith. I want freedom of speech. I cannot have these as an ordained minister, and, therefore, I am going to quit. Many preachers will not accept a low-salaried church, and the amount of salary paid is the measure of the man. Most ministers of the day are out for the money.'"

Whistle as loud as they may to keep up courage, the number of honest preachers sloughing off from the church is constantly on the increase. To-day one cause is given, to-morrow another, and all demonstrate that there are good and true men in the pulpit who are not willing to subordinate their manhood to the church and teach its pagan creeds, in which they have lost faith. The creeds must be revised, regardless of Bible fallacies, else all must go to the wall. There is too much intelligence in the world to always subscribe to the priestly dictates of 500 years ago.

Two decisions from the bench on scriptural subjects are reported. A Kansas City Judge rules that our first parents in the Garden of Eden contracted a common-law marriage, and Justice Gaynor decides in effect that "the Sabbath was made for man."—New York World.

THE MOST VITAL FACT IN THE UNIVERSE

IS THE IDEA OF GOD AND OUR RELATION TO HIM. INSEPARABLY ASSOCIATED WITH THIS IDEA IS OUR RELATION TO OUR BROTHER MEN. UPON THESE TWO DOMINANT IDEAS RESTS OUR CHRISTIAN RELIGION, THE ONLY RELIGION WITH WHICH WE ARE CONCERNED IN THIS COUNTRY.

STRIPPED OF ALL CONVENTIONAL LANGUAGE, OF ALL THE IMAGERY AND TRADITION WHICH CLUSTER ABOUT THE WORD, RELIGION IS THE DIVINE LIFE IN THE HUMAN SOUL. IT MANIFESTS ITSELF, AS ALL LIFE MANIFESTS ITSELF BY THE GROWTH IT BRINGS FORTH, THE FLOWERS OF THE HUMAN HEART, SUCH AS UNSELFISHNESS, LOVE, COURAGE, PATIENCE AND SERVICE. REDUCED TO ITS SIMPLEST TERMS THIS IS OUR RELIGION.

"NO MAN PUTTETH NEW WINE INTO OLD BOTTLES, ELSE THE [NEW] WINE DOTH BURST THE BOTTLES." OUR CHURCHES AND THEIR DOCTRINES WERE THE OLD BOTTLES. INTO THEM WE POURED THE RELIGIOUS LIFE OF THE PRESENT DAY. THE BOTTLES BURST. THE RELIGIOUS LIFE FLOWED HITHER AND YON. IT BECAME CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, SPIRITUALISM AND CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM. IN ITS MORE EMOTIONAL AND FANTASTIC FORMS, IT BECAME THE SALVATION ARMIES, THE HOLY GHOSTERS, AND THE HOLY JUMPERS.—Appleton's Magazine (New York) for August, full of Valuable Thought for Free Thinkers. The Solomon Bubble "Busted."

(No. 6.)

"And King Solomon made a navy of ships in Ezion-geber, which is beside Eloth, on the shore of the Red Sea, in the land of Edom. And Hiram sent in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon. And they came to Ophir, and fetched from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to King Solomon."—1 Kings 9:26, 27, 28.

"For the king had at sea a navy of Tarshish with the navy of Hiram; once in three years came the navy of Tarshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks."—1 Kings 10:22.

The point designated where "King Solomon made a navy" must have been at the head of the Gulf of Akabah, at the northern extremity of the Red Sea, in "a land of desolation," as travelers designate it, some 150 miles south of Jerusalem. A long, circuitous route amid mountains and through barren deserts which were necessary to reach it largely increased the distance. It was more accessible along the Mediterranean coast than farther inland. The whole region from Akabah north, with Petra for metropolis, to Palestine, was anciently known as Idumea. The ancient inhabitants dwelt mostly in natural or artificial caverns and for lack of timber it was a rueful place in which to build a navy. The Bedouins of today probably well represent the ancient inhabitants.

It may be presumed the Phenicians, who circumnavigated Africa, leaving Tyre, sailed westward, generally keeping in sight of land on the left, as they had no compass to guide them. After passing Gibraltar and the long distance to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence sailing north, they doubtless entered the mouth of the Zambesi, a navigable river which rises in Central South Africa, about 17 degrees south latitude, flows in a generally southeasterly direction through Matabela and Mashonaland and entering the Indian Ocean.

Failing to find their coveted home, from which they had long been absent, we may well suppose they hastily explored the country, discovered its great wealth in "gold, silver, ivory, apes, and guinea-hens," which the English translators incorrectly rendered peacocks, in which the country still abounds. They then descended that river to its mouth, coasted northward to the Straits of Bab el Mandeb, through which they passed, the coast still at their left; then they ascended the Red Sea to its northern extremity, and through the Gulf of Akabah to the "Ezion-geber." From thence they must have made their way north on foot, some 250 miles or more, to Tyre. There, of course, they made their report to King Hiram, who, filled with ambition to possess the "gold, silver, ivory and apes," which the voyagers had discovered, and instead of "building a navy" the seamen, augmented with colonists and miners, reclaimed their abandoned shipping where now is Akabah, a rude native village at the head of the gulf of that name; thence they retraced their voyage to the land of gold. The return voyage could have been made with their rude pioneer sailing craft in less than three years.

The above long paragraph is suppositious. The voyage of the Phenicians westward, circumnavigating Africa and returning by the Red Sea is a historical fact. There was truth in the original Phenician account, to which the divinely inspired Bible makers added the name of Solomon, to glorify that character, if such a person ever existed.

It is simply impossible in a brief newspaper article to convey the information the reader desires in regard to that great country, unknown until recently to modern civilization.

Under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society of England, sustained by the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and the British Chartered Company of South Africa, in 1893, J. Theodore Bent, F. S. A. and F. R. G. S., author of several learned publications one, "Insular Greece," accompanied by his highly cultured wife, set out to explore an ancient mining region in Central South Africa, which pioneer settlers had met with, and of which they had no history. Of their journey and adventures by the way, and while there, we have no room, and scarcely space for a line, where the subject is worthy of many pages.

And, first, a multitude of ancient mines for gold and silver were met with, as were the ivory producing animals and apes. In place of peacocks only the guinea-hen was found, a probable error of the English translators as appearing in Kings. A well-preserved stone temple, such as are everywhere common to old Phenician colonies, was passably well preserved. An ingot of tin, bearing a well-known Phenician punch-mark, was found, as were Venetian and copper beads, a medicine phial of glass, bronze spear heads, battle axes, an iron belt, fragments of soap-stone on which letters were engraved, a column with a winged sun—positive evidence the ruins were Phenician. Innumerable other articles and evidences of a Phenician colony were everywhere discovered, showing these ancient remains were the production of the same people who wrought the tin mines of Cornwall. As bronze is an alloy of copper and tin the finding of bronze implements way down there in Central South Africa is suggestive of the source from which it came. It is told that the Phenicians were so careful to preserve the secret of their mines, the master of a vessel finding he was pursued, to avoid exposing the Cornwall mines, ran his ship aground, and was reimbursed by his government for the loss. Is it probable, with such vast interest in mining industries, Phenician ships traversing every sea, "King Hiram" took a partner, and that partner "excelling all others in the world in riches," with whom to divide his wealth? Quoting Mr. Bent, pages 147-8:

"It is incredible that such a style of architecture as we have described, and such a civilization as it signifies, could have originated and developed in South Africa, for such a development would have required a very long time, and would have implied at least a long and peaceful settlement in the country, and although the builders of Zimbabwe may have long possessed the place, yet it is apparent they never considered it their own."

There are scores of passages marked for quotation, all of which we sorrowfully pass for want of space. "But what of Tarshish and Ophir?" These have been sought in vain by scholars for centuries. Some have fancied they were in Spain. Others, with a "three years' voyage" to reach them, with a port on the Red Sea, concluded they were in India, yet no locality could be found to fit the description.

Dr. Carl Peters, a resolute German explorer, in 1901-2, visited all this vast region in South Africa, and sought for evidences of its ancient occupation by a civilized people. "There is no doubt," he reported to the German government, "that the Zambesi is none other than the land of Ophir of the Bible." Dr. Peters says: "The amount of life supported by the fields can be judged from the fact that 75,000 ancient gold workings have been found in this marvelous district, and 500 ruins of cities and temples, some of them on the Zambesi dating back as far as 2,000 years B. C."

Our task is mainly done. It has been shown by abundant Christian authority that the pretended translation of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek, was no translation; and the best scholars have no information from whence it came.

It has been proved by irrefutable evidence, that what is passing with the Christian world as the Old Testament is a rendering into modern language of that Septuagint, derived from an unknown fountain.

The long and unsuccessful search of Origen, after traveling for twenty-eight years in quest of a genuine Hebrew copy of their Scriptures, and finding none, then compelled to use a copy of the Septuagint of tainted derivation, suggests there was no original Jewish Scriptures.

The few cases cited where we could have quoted hundreds, show that what appears in the Old Testament as Jewish history is in fact Phenician, doctored and adapted to another people, if such other people ever existed—the only proof of their existence being a transcript of that fraudulent Septuagint, Josephus being comparatively a modern duplication of that transcript, a later forgery to prove the genuineness of an earlier forgery.

And as the New Testament has its base in this Greek fraud, it follows, the foundation gone, the whole system on which Christianity is based is swept away, and truth demands the several frauds and their priestly products, including their creeds, should perish, and all be buried together in a common urn.

Next week we shall close this series of articles, and quote historical facts, showing how this fraudulent Old Testament literature first came into Catholic hands, near the close of the fifteenth century, a wonderful revelation.

THE DUTY OF THINKING.

A Sermon for To-day.—"Intellectual Stagnation and Sloth Calls Itself Spiritual Fidelity."

Prejudice is the barrier to any degree of power, to any kind of progress. No matter how sincerely you may hold your views, if they are held in willful determined exclusion of any other possible views your sincerity will furnish no cloak to shield you from the consequences of your ignorance and bigotry.

If there is any such being as the devil, certainly his master stroke was executed when he persuaded men to lock up their minds and induced them to believe that it was a sin to think, led them to conceptions of religious truth as something fixed and immutable, and then split up the religious world into warring camps, each fighting for its own fixed views.

At first, when one confronts religious prejudice he is inclined to ask, What is the use of it all? Why worry at all about doctrines and creeds? Yet while philosophy is not the most important thing, it is to life and action as root to fruit. As a man thinks in his heart regarding the great questions of destiny and duty, so is he in his life.

It is of no little importance, then, that there should be right, clear thinking. In fact the habit of clear thinking is of greater value than the results of such thinking when formulated in creeds or doctrines. It is not only a question as to what you are thinking about and what your conclusions may be; there is the energy and courage to think through your problems at all.

In religion, as everywhere else, the need is that men should think deeply and thoroughly. Intellectual cowardice and mental sloth are serious foes of high character. Yet religionists are still often ready to hurl their denunciations at those who have the temerity to think about sacred subjects.

Intellectual stagnation and sloth frequently calls itself spiritual fidelity. They who are too lazy to step out and conquer new territory are busy holding the fort, defending doctrines long since outgrown; instead of fighting the foes of all mankind they are hurling adjectives and anathemas at those who have disturbed their mental slumbers by daring to think the thoughts of the infinite in this new day.

It is to be feared that there are self-appointed defenders of the faith who, if they ever arrive in paradise, will bring nothing but their lungs along, all other affairs, such as heart and brain, having perished from disuse. Yet today such blind, unthinking mouths would have men believe that they are the oracles of the Most High.

There never has been a time when there were no heretics. Leaders always must walk alone while the mob abuses them for their temerity. The world never has been entirely without those who saw that each day brought some larger light. But the declaration of this still stirs those who love darkness better then the light to these tactics of persecution that are as old as religion itself.

Every man must summon up the energy to do some of his own thinking and the courage to stand up for himself. There can be no living faith without freedom in thinking. We need not only to insist on this right for ourselves but to maintain and protect the right of all men to liberty of conscience, to discover and hold their own beliefs.

No man can be a true man who is afraid of the truth. No religion can endure long that flees from investigation. Only the friends of darkness and those who love its deeds fear the light. The foes of religion are its friends who would put faith into fixed forms, who fear the future's larger life.

Religion is the art of living in the light of infinite relationships. Intelligence is a means of knowing these relationships. What are we better than the beasts if we do not reach out with mind and heart to know all that may be known of this way of life? What are we better than broken spirited slaves if we dare not look up and out each for ourselves and see this goodly universe and wondrous life of all as the Lord of all has planned it?

HENRY F. COPE.

An Honest Priest.

Rev. Thomas Q. Mulvey, for nine years priest at St. Edward's Catholic Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., on July 15, resigned his pastorate as well as his ministry and membership, giving as a reason:

"I cannot do otherwise in view of the opinions I hold. These opinions are opposed to many of the dogmas which I am supposed to teach and defend, and are out of harmony with the practices and economy of the Catholic Chuch."

"An honest confession is good for the soul," says an old-time proverb.

When two men of equal intelligence and sincerity quarrel both are probably right.

A Remarkable Visitation Illustrating Spirit Power

An Extract from a Letter from a Gentleman in Barbadoes to a Friend Published in a London (England) Magazine One Hundred and Fifteen Years Ago, and Copied by E. D. Hammond, of New York, for The Progressive Thinker.

Many people will not believe that departed spirits can appear to mortal eyes, and among the incredulous I was one, until convinced to the contrary by the narration of a very affecting story of one that appeared to a youth lately deceased in this place; and which has been so strongly confirmed that I am no longer a heretic.

A great friendship existed between Thomas Ostrahan and Robert Straker, two youths of this island, which was contracted at school in England, and continued after their arrival here. Ostrahan died lately. Straker attended his funeral, and expressed lively marks of sorrow at the death of his friend. On his return at night to rest in his chamber, he there ruminated on Ostrahan's death, and consoled himself for his loss, in a hope that his friend would enjoy a degree of happiness in the invisible world that he could not have expected here. Whilst he was thus employed, he on a sudden saw a GLIMMERING LIGHT AT A DISTANCE from him, which seemed to approach near him, and directly there appeared to his sight a form that made every nerve in him tremble with fear, and so wrought on him that he sank speechless in his bed. After some little time he recovered from his swoon, and saw the same form sitting in a chair by the side of his bed, and notwithstanding the terrific appearance of it, he recognized the features of his late departed friend, Ostrahan, who thus saluted him:

"Do not be terrified, my dear friend, at my appearance. Be of good courage. Do not be surprised."

At these words he recollected his faltering spirits, and offered to take him by the hand.

"No, my dear Bob," says the spirit, "I am not to be touched by mortal hands. I am yet ignorant where I am to go, but at present I have received a command from the Almighty [so regarded by him] to warn you of an impending danger that hangs over your brother's head, which he is yet ignorant of. Tell your father that two intimate friends and companions of your brother will shortly seduce him to the most abandoned wickedness, and that unless he uses some precaution to prevent it, your brother will inevitably be lost. I know you love him, and would not willingly see him undone, therefore fail not to acquaint your father. You, yourself, will shortly die; at what hour I know not, and another of your friends will shortly follow. In order to convince you that I am commissioned from above I will tell you some of your father's thoughts. He designed to have you married at the age of nineteen to Miss W. This thought and design he has never communicated to any person living. As a further proof on Sunday night you will be drawn to church by a cause you yet know not of, and you will there hear the Parson S.——use these particular words [repeating them]. Fail not to inform your father of your brother's danger." At this he departed from his sight.

Straker was greatly surprised at what was told him, but feared to communicate it to the family. The Sunday night following, he attended the funeral of a neighbor to church, and there heard the Minister S. repeat the very sentences in his sermon which the spirit informed him would be said. This made a deep impression on him, and he returned home very melancholy, of which his mother took notice, and asked him the reason. He told her he should shortly die. She asked how he came to have such a thought, and in answer to her question he told her of his friend Ostrahan's appearance to him, which she laughed at, and told him it was a dream.

"Madam," says he (a little angry at her unbelief) since you will have it so, it is a dream." At night he retired to rest with his brother as usual, but being kept awake sometime by uneasy reflections on what the spirit had told him respecting his brother, he on a sudden saw A VERY BRIGHT LIGHT ILLUMINATING THE WHOLE CHAMBER, which was so beautiful and striking, that it both pleased and terrified him. At the same instant he jumped out of bed in order to alarm the family, but hearing a fluttering kind of noise, he looked toward the place, and saw his friend arrayed in celestial glory standing before him. Never did his eyes behold a form so beautiful. He was dressed in a long white robe that carried with it an air of inexpressible grandeur. His cheeks appeared adorned with a rosy-colored hue that surpassed the beauty of the blooming rose. A glorious illumination sparkled around him. Straker beheld the sight with the most rapturous ecstasy, while he stood some minutes silent to indulge the admiration of his earthly friend. At length this celestial inhabitant broke silence, and said:

"My dear friend, once more I am come to visit you. I am in a place of happiness, and sent by the Most High [as he conceived] to repeat the former command respecting that youth who now lies sleeping in the bed. Why did you delay communicating it to your father?"

Straker replied: "I designed to acquaint my father of it, but my mother ridiculing it as a dream prevented me. Will you permit me to awaken my brother? Your warning him of his danger might have stronger weight."

"No, it is not permitted," repeated the spirit. "Should you awaken him he might see me, because I am at present visible to human eyes; but it would also oblige me to depart instantly. You will yourself bid adieu to this world in a few days! Be resigned and expect the stroke."

"I am not afraid of death," replied Straker. "I think I am prepared to obey the summons of the Most High."

"Three hours before your death," says the other, "I shall appear to you. Be mindful of the injunction laid on you."

He then walked very leisurely towards the open window. Straker had resolution enough to follow him, and trod upon the skirt of the white robe, but it did not seem to feel like a common substance. At this the shining seraph turned round, and most benignly smiled upon him, and then appeared to soar up to the heavens.

The morning after this, being Monday, he told the particulars of this visitation to his father, who was very much alarmed at the recital, and felt all the agonies of a tender parent, at the afflicting thought of losing his beloved child.

"My dear son," says he, "I am convinced of the truth of what you have told me, from the circumstance of your marriage. I designed to marry you at the age of nineteen years. I must be content to lose you, my dear Bob, since it is the will of the Almighty. I hope you have made good use of your late hours."

"Yes, sir," says the son, "I have endeavored to prepare myself by prayer and meditation for the awful summons."

Straker a few hours after penned every particular of this visitation, and directed it in a letter to his father. He was soon after seized with a vomiting, which turned in a short time to its opposite disorder. After being seated in a chair, he presently raised his drooping head and cried, "I COME, I COME, MY DEAR FRIEND. I WILL SOON FOLLOW."

His friends around him being surprised, asked him the reason of his exclamation. "I have just seen," says he, "my dear friend, Thomas Ostrahan. I shall expire in three hours."

On being told that the young lady he courted was in the house, he desired his friends to introduce her into his chamber. He then embraced her with great tenderness, and kissing her mournfully, exclaimed, "Farewell, my dear M——! May heaven love you as I have done! Farewell my dear friends!" After this he prostrated himself on his face, and after lying some time in that posture, he expired with a gentle sigh."

Says Saladin: "The best quality of a preacher is that he should be able to look solemnly silly and blaze away, oratorically, over something which neither his congregation nor himself knows anything about. Everyone in the pews and who is not asleep is under the impression that he is listening to 'the deep things of God.' And you have been taught to believe implicitly that the post-mortem fate of your soul depends upon your listening reverently, however, stupidly, to those 'deep things.'"

The new church will be founded on moral science. Poets, artists, musicians, philosophers, will be its prophet teachers. The noblest literature of the world will be its Bible. Love and labor its holy sacraments—instead of worshiping one savior, we will gladly build an altar for everyone who has suffered for humanity.—Emerson.

THE RELIGION OF SCIENCE.

The Higher Spiritualism According to the Church of Universal Science, Illustrating How Teachings Diverge in Different Societies.—The Moon Brought Into Requisition as a Healing Agent.

Religion means to re-bind or re-unite men spiritually with their divine origin, which is God—the universal Spirit of Love, Wisdom and Power.

Such re-union can only be attained through knowledge of the metaphysical, or psychical and spiritual science.

All true moral development and growth must rest on that knowledge, because the moral life which men have attained through belief is only external, like a borrowed garment, and may some day be laid aside, but the moral life which is attained and developed from within, through knowledge and understanding of the law of the physical, psychical and spiritual kingdoms, will be a treasure of the soul and can never be lost.

Consequently there is no religion higher than science.

In the same degree as men become reunited with the divine Spirit within, they are becoming sons and daughters of God, redeemed from the outer darkness of ignorance, and saved from the consequences which sin against the law would otherwise bring.

Regeneration is properly when a man who has been living in the external world altogether is revived to a moral and spiritual consciousness, and comes to a belief that there is a spiritual life which it is his duty to develop through some system of religion; but such a conversion, or regeneration is no miracle but an effect of psychic power and the character is not thereby changed all of a sudden.

Therefore we see many converted Christians, who will commit wrongdoing as quickly as the unconverted.

After being converted to belief, a person may try to be good, but perfect goodness of character must come through struggle and victory. The personality must grow to it by conscious knowledge of cause and effect; or, in other words, he must see that every wrong doing will bar him from the inner happiness and peace with the higher life.

When a person is converted he should not allow himself to be robbed of his power of reason, but rather study a system of religion as a science, and keep that which he can understand for the time being. Thereby building up a spiritual individuality.

Faith and belief should not be confounded.

Although it is necessary to have belief in the possibility, in order to succeed, still the belief in itself has no power, neither has it any spiritual value; but belief in the possibility to attain a knowledge that will give inner life, power and gifts of the spirit, is necessary to have. The same belief will later be lost in faith, which is a life-giving, active attribute of the soul.

Faith in combination with Spirit (subjective will) and an action of the objective will on some material or elemental substance is creative and accomplishes things that the sons and daughters of God wish for.

As an illustration, to help the student of spiritual science, we will say: If you wish to cure a person afflicted with a tumor, or any abnormal fungus growth, take him in faith before the vibrating elemental substance of the moon, and do your actions, laying on your hands and making passes over the diseased parts towards the planet. Let the patient do the same, and tell him to concentrate his own mind on the diseased parts until cured.

You will find that inside of four weeks the "miracle" is performed, without drugs or cutting.

Such is the work of the Spirit on matter. It is not a miracle of the moment, but a slow and sure action under physical, psychical and spiritual laws in combination.

ELLIS I. JACOBSON.

Chicago, Ill.

Col. Ingersoll and Cardinal Newman.

In Robert G. Ingersoll's Centennial Oration at Peoria, Ill., July 4, 1876, he spoke as follows:

"The Catholics of Maryland were the first people on the new continent to declare universal toleration in religion. Let this be remembered to their eternal honor. Let it be remembered to the disgrace of the Protestant government of England that it caused this grand law to be repealed. And to the honor and credit of the Catholics of Maryland, let it be remembered that the moment they got back into power they re-enacted the old law. The Baptists of Rhode Island also led by Roger Williams, was in favor of universal religious liberty. He was the first grand advocate of the liberty of the soul. He was in favor of the eternal divorce of church and state. He was the only man of that time in this country who was in favor of real religious liberty. While the Catholics of Maryland declared in favor of religious toleration, they had no idea of religious liberty. They would not allow anyone to call in question the doctrine of the trinity, or the inspiration of the Scriptures. They stood ready with branding iron and gallows to burn and choke the man of free thought."

Cardinal Newman said: "Give me the children of England and England shall be Catholic." This is by no means strange or wonderful. It is historically true that children are very apt to adopt the religion or politics of their parents. Those who do not do so, are the very best examples of independent free thinkers, of which there are too few in every century.

Suppose I were to say that when I sat down to write this book, a hand presented itself in the air, took up the pen, and wrote every word that is herein written; would anybody believe me? Certainly they would not. Since, then, a real miracle, were it to happen, would be subject to the same fate as the falsehood, the inconsistency becomes the greater of supposing that the Almighty would make use of means that would not answer the purposes for which they were intended, even if they were real.—Paine's Age of Reason.

It costs more to revenge injuries than to bear them.—Latin.

There Is No Death.

Funeral Services of Ira Burroughs, Conducted by Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, April 6, 1908, at Cattaraugus, N. Y.

There is no death; there are no dead. The answer to the question, "If man die, does he live?" if these lips could speak you would hear the sound so sweetly saying, never so alive as when the mortal put on its immortal.

Nature is just awakening from her winter's slumber, and soon the banners of pink, white and emerald green will wave in the air triumphant, and give unto the world its message of life, beautiful life, for which there is no more death. It will have its time of seed and harvest, and again its rest; and beyond it but a space, the call of the Infinite.

It is a glorious thing to understand somewhat this truth of immortality; still grander to live the life that knows that whatever is sown on earth must be reaped in that land towards which all are turning. We are learning the building of the many mansions from the lives which are lived while in the mortal, the fashioning of the garments that will sometime clothe the spiritual body, by the thoughts which are thought, the words which are spoken and the deeds which are done. If we could draw aside the curtain and peer into the home that has just been entered, methinks our smiles would be sweet and our eyes would be bright, when we recognize the beautiful surroundings of our dear one, and know the message that met him, "Well done, good and faithful one, thou mayest well enter into that so justly earned; the beautiful life record that all who knew him can best understand. To know him is to love him, and to revere the life that was lived so unselfishly, both at home and in the community."

We could almost say to-day that we are thankful for this opportunity that brings us so closely in touch with that angel world; that brings us face to face with the bright and beautiful spirit born from mortal into the immortal. Could you have sat beside the form from which the breath was going, watching the changing expression, the slowly beating heart and pulse, you would not have seen those wondrously beautiful forms standing with open hands and beaming eye, you would not have seen coming from the top of the head that luminous something which finally took on the form of the dear one you were watching. You would not have heard the words of welcome, the sound that seemed to give new life and strength when that birth took place; but had your vision been opened and had you seen that birth, tears would have dried; you would have felt almost like saying, "Thank God for this truth, this divine revelation that brings heaven so near, so close unto us. In the past we have had faiths and beliefs. We have had many messages from the angel world; even the shepherds heard of the message at the quiet nighttime when he gave the presage of the birth of the child so divinely gifted. Many a one has heard the confessions of the spirit that has brought them consciousness of truth that is beyond faiths and beliefs; and when we read that which tells us not to be ignorant regarding spiritual gifts and all which pertains to its development, we are thankful to-day that our brother had solved the problem, knew of the gifts of hearing and seeing, of inspiration and healing, and it was not faith and belief unto him; but he went to that home not made with hands, with knowledge of that which he was to meet; the daughter who came with such loving face, form and hands, comforting and welcoming, looking upward over the many who were left, speaking "Peace be still" unto the suffering, restless one, saying, "It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die."

"I am going home" comes back like a sweet refrain; and that love of home so great and so strong while in the body makes the message doubly sweet and forceful to-day. "I have gone to prepare a place for you, and where I am with my loved ones we all sometime will be, an unbroken band, lovingly cementing the bonds of love so strongly and making the world better because of the knowledge we have and the lives we are living." This is not faith and belief, but knowledge regarding immortality. It is a record that will rest as a mantle upon the shoulders of the loved ones who are waiting and watching for the time when all shall be re-united where there is no more death, nor partings, nor good-byes.

When the message came unto this dear one, the thought was strongly in his mind: "I have lived for many a year. I have spoken full many a truth. I am resting now, and waiting to understand the message that calls me home. We who knew him best knew that good-byes did not flow easily from his lips. The welcomes were much more easily uttered than the words of parting; so it comes like a benediction upon us to-day, "I am not dead, there is no death."

As sweet as the dews falling at eventide, as beautiful as a setting sun at close of day, so does the memory of the life that has only just begun—not ended—continue; and sometime all will know and understand. Sometime we shall all clasp his hand, hear his voice, and live the life as he may be living it now—a beautiful expression, a beautiful memory and the beautiful life that is a legacy which one must be glad to inherit and feel blessed because of our treasure which is ours still.

This modern Spiritualism which was so dear unto him was not through faith, but through manifest evidences which have come to him again and yet again. He knew whereof he spoke. He knew there was no death; that which seemed such was transition, was birth in the beyond, since the body was the temple in which it dwelt. And sweetly to-day comes the thought, here we never saw our friend, only the body in which he dwelt. So to-day we hear the message from the lips that are not sealed:

"The half has never been told. I would not have one sob or sigh; I would rather have you turn your faces upward and feel that I am conscious of all that pertains to your welfare. I shall stand by your side. I shall touch your hands. I shall press your lips. I shall speak words of encouragement, and, I trust, of wisdom, when it is needed; and above all I shall place my arms around the dear one whom I have not left; I will not leave her comfortless. I am coming closer and closer and closer.

"And unto these dear children who have been dearer to me than words can tell, I will say unto them, 'I have much for you in the days to come. I shall be nearer than in the past when disease rendered me powerless, ofttimes, to do what my hands would find to do. I can look back to-day and find how many words I might have spoken, had the knowledge been mine as it is to-day, and again repeat, the half has never been told.'

"I would go to the sister, the brothers, the friends and neighbors, and I would say unto them, 'Heed the voice of the spirit. Remember, there is no death, there are no dead; and sometime the divine revelation will be made to all, and you will look, not as through a glass darkly, but face to face, and the truth will make you free'."

Then the voice comes to the dear one, the child who came so close in his heart, the one who spoke words of love to him and to whom he gave such counsel, dear as his own, and to her he will be counsel and loving parent in a sense far beyond that of mortal.

A smile crosses the face, and I see the look go beyond this place to where the babe is sleeping, and the love reaches out and I hear: "Indeed, of such is the kingdom of heaven, and angels will watch and guard until its eyes shall open to the truth, and it will speak words wiser than the human can comprehend in the days that are to be."

The Religion of Spiritualism, for it is a Religion, is one of deeds rather than creeds; it is one that appeals to the highest and best there is within the human consciousness. It ennobles the thought and inspires the action. It brings the world in closer touch and cements as a brotherhood. It teaches the Christ spirit and principle of life, recognizing that life is the strongest power in all the world, either of mortal or spirit, and life can never die; as the time goes on it grows stronger and stronger, dearer and dearer, until all mists will clear away, and we shall stand face to face, consciously, with this truth that maketh humanity stronger and better, as it learns to understand this truth.

Life is a wondrous problem, and we are solving it as we learn to live more truly and to live more spiritually. It is not what we profess, but what we are; it is not by creeds, but by deeds, and, verily, our works will follow us. And the works which are following the footsteps of the dear one are indeed such as the world might well emulate, and feel that he had done well unto all the world of mortal and of spirit. He knew naught but love in his nature; he knew naught but helpfulness unto whom his help was needed, and he gave in unstinted measure, yet he dared to be firm, he dared to do right in whatever method his sense of justice demanded. So we do not bid him good-bye this afternoon; we only try to follow him from the mortal to the immortal; we try to raise the veil and see his face, beautiful with love and strength to help those who are missing him.

It is human to sigh for the sound of the voice that is still, and feel the touch of the vanished hand; but in spirit we shall know, sense and feel, and be nearer, my God, to Thee, as we learn to know and understand and grow nearer to loved ones who have crossed over the river.

It is sweet to live, to die we never can;
It may be the thought that is held by man,
But Infinite love will answer our every prayer—
Love and life is eternal everywhere.
The word that is spoken to the wife today
Answers the prayers her heart must pray;
"I am not dead, but gone before;
I will stand waiting for you at heaven's open door.
Where I am, you then will be,
Dwelling with me through eternity."
Unto the children he held so dear,
To whom in spirit he comes so near,
"I will not forsake or leave you alone,
Greater care than in earth life, I have shown.
I will meet and share every hour and day,
And come to you in your need alway.
Be not sorrowful, dry your tears.
I am not dead, death allays all fears;
Only entered from darkness into light,
Only understand the truth and right.
The answer has come to my prayer to-day,
The angel world has not said me nay.
I have met my dear ones whom I love so well,
Their love for me so sweetly tell.
Unto all who are gathered here this hour,
I would that you could sense this power
That comes from spirit to mortal's sphere,
To cast out every doubt and fear,
And make you understand that it is not all of life to live.
In our ignorance we have seemed to forget
That God is Spirit, and God is Love;
It is the fulness of earth and of heaven above.
It touches our souls when you meet it here,
It makes the loved ones tenfold more dear.
Death loses its sting and the grave its victory
When from an olden body we can be free,
And into that home of many mansions in joy we have entered;
No sigh for what might have been.
Gladly we speak this sweet refrain,
This is a truth, not only a name;
But life immortal, tender and true,
A baptism of truth I would leave with you."

A LIVELY MEETING.

At Lake Pleasant, Mass., Camp.

Aug. 10 was National Day at this place. Mrs. T. U. Reynolds opened the exercises with an earnest and practical address.

Francis Bailey Woodbury, a former secretary of the National, created considerable enthusiasm by his earnest plea for a square deal for the National Society, at least up to the time of the next convention, when subjects now under discussion would be taken up by the delegates and ably adjusted. He recounted the work of the N. S. A. in distributing literature, defending mediums, giving financial assistance to the worthy poor, holding mass meetings, organizing societies, etc.

Mr. Woodbury begged of the Spiritualists present not to ordain people who morally, intellectually and spiritually could not dignify Spiritualism. In closing he made an earnest plea for funds to aid the Association.

Hon. Charles R. Schirm said the National Association was a practical business concern, that no movement could succeed without a head business centre. He alluded to the victories won, legal and otherwise, because of the existence of the institution as a National institution representing thousands of people.

He gave a minute ddescription of the work of the Association, and paid an eloquent tribute to Theo. J. Mayer, the great spiritual philanthropist, who had made much of this work possible by his liberality.

Mrs. May Pepper Vanderbilt made an eloquent plea for justice for those who had been loyal to the institution and who had given of their life forces to its support. She made a plea for funds and backed up her words by going after them with such success that about $50 was contributed for the N. S. A. treasury.

Considering the conditions existing at the Lake, this contribution was more than expected. This camp was devastated by an awful fire a little over a year ago, and the large hotel and one hundred cottages were wiped out.

Lake Pleasant has been scorched, but she has contributed beside the sum raised to-day some $40 for the Massachusetts State Association recently.

"PROGRESS."

FIGHTING! STILL FIGHTING!

Yes, Fighting the Pernicious "Animals" the Orthodox God is Alleged to Have Made.—What Consistency in So Doing.

To the Editor:—A cable telegram To the Editor: A cable telegram from Zetton, Germany, says an electric light trap is being employed by the Saxon authorities to fight the caterpillar plague which is having such a disastrous effect on the forests.

The contrivance consists of two large and powerful reflectors placed over a deep receptacle and powerful exhaust fans. The device has been on top of the municipal electric plant. At night two great streams or light are thrown from the reflectors on the wooded mountain-sides half a mile distant.

The results have been astonishing. The moths which lay eggs from which moths—which lay eggs from which the caterpillars come—drawn by the brilliancy, come fluttering in thousands along the broad rays of light. When they get within a certain distance of the reflectors the exhaust fans take up their work, and with powerful currents of air, swirl the bugs down into the receptacle.

On the first night three tons of moths were caught. It has been decided to build another trap on the Rathaus tower, and the fight will be continued.

The forests of central Europe have from time to time been ravaged by moths from Russia, whose larvae denude the trees of their foliage. The splendid pines of the Lausits mountains are this year threatened with destruction.

THE WAYSIDE SINGER.

Just a graceful singer, loitering down the way
Through the shifting sunshine of a summer day.

Just a careless singer, singing as he goes;—
"I was born to gather without thorns, the rose."

Stop awhile and listen; haply you have heard
Music something like it from a forest bird.

Stop awhile and listen as you pass along,
You will be the better a-hearing of his song.

If he had a sorrow it was softly laid
Underneath the sweetness that his singing made.

If he had a grievance—laugh, and it was gone
Like a dry leaf floating through a summer dawn.

Yet he had a reverence for the ancient times
He sometimes sang so deftly in his careless rhymes.

Chivalry and romance, love and fairy lore—
Ah, he sighed demurely; that they come no more.

Nothing harsh or hateful shadowed through his song
When a fiery rapture swept his pen along.

Lust of greed or living on the weaker one,
Cast no blot upon him when his work is done.

And, so much of weeping in these days of ours,
While the gold lies heavy on the hot-house flowers.

History might point him loves and wild desires;
He sung best the vestal by her altar fires.

Just a happy singer, oh, be thankful for his song,
Laughing, waving backward as he passed along.

Ancient myth and magic—these he loved to weave
In a slender chaplet where young lover grieve.

Just a tender singer, never knowing tears,
Dwelling in a vision, in the House of Years.

Warmly housed and sheltered—a stranger unto strife,
So he passed, like music, out of Light and Life.

Friends who read this, saying: "If you sing him thus Think what such a passing means to-day for us."

Oh!! be thankful, grateful, since you loved him best,
He is yours, unchanging, in his changeless rest.

She Doesn't Like Our Songs.

To the Editor: One of the things that is charged against Spiritualists is, that we, as a body, are inconsistent.

Are we?

We must admit this as a fact, so long as we include such songs in our literature as are now found there.

That old song, "Nearer My God, to Thee," must have drifted a long way from where it slipped its moorings before it anchored amidst our Spiritualistic hymns; that it has "come to stay," seems an undisputed fact. Why should we allow or encourage such sentiments.

Have we not hymns of a loftier type. Can not we offer something higher, something holding out more comfort, more assurance of eternal life for us all.

THE RAILROAD BRAKEMAN.

"He Gave Up His Life for His Friend."

Some two years ago I was on a short visit to my daughter in Lincoln, Neb. We had been investigating Spiritualism and psychic phenomena for some time, and there was a medium, Prof. Zalman, staying in my daughter's home for a few days. One night we had a private seance in the dining room. After several manifestations, there came the sound of a railroad train in the distance, coming faster and louder until it seemed to rush into the room and stopped at the table, blowing off steam, and a voice said "John Allen." The Professor knew the spirit, and after a few words of greeting he said: "John, tell the folks here how you felt when you left this life."

"Why," said the voice, "when I took my friend's place, I did not think that would be my last night on earth, but in some way my foot slipped. I felt a shock—that was all. Then I opened my eyes. I lay on a grassy bank. A woman stood by my side, and I knew it was my mother who died when I was a child. She took me by the hand, and we went up a shining slope into a beautiful city."

The voice died away, the train went out of the room with a rush, dying away in the distance.

The medium then told us how John Allen, a messenger on an express train had a dear friend who was a brakeman on the same train. One night the brakeman was too ill to go out on his run, and John Allen put on the brakeman's hat and coat and took his place. (This would not have been allowed if known), and as he had told us, his foot slipped, and so his life was given up for his friend. I heard John Allen speak again before I left. But after I came home I began seeing the aura or the soul color of my dear ones in the spirit world. There was one that came very often and I did not know who it was, and always with this color came the words: "He gave up his life for his friend."

After awhile I remembered what I had heard about John Allen. I then found out that this was the spirit of John Allen, and that he wanted something of me. He was persistent and at last the same lines in the form of verses came into my mind. As soon as I had written them I knew that was partly what he wanted.

Of late his spirit has been here often and I am now impelled to write this; He also says that he is not dead, but "just as much alive as you are," he has only lost the earthly part; that he can come and go as he wishes; that he is with his friends, seeing and knowing just what they do; trying to help them all he can; that there is no death—just another world where you can complete everything left unfinished in earth-life, only better. How it will depend on yourself whether you will remain in the world near the earth-plane, or progress on into another side, and you have all eternity to progress in. It all rests with you as to which you do after you leave this earth, remain earth-bound or go up higher. This is the message John Allen sends to you.

How Things Look To the Honey Bee.

A little dose of reason, to use Darwin's phase, is what the recent bee congress at the Franco-British exhibition decided was the modicum of the bee. Lord Avebury, who presided, declared that the accounts given by the ancients regarding the bee were both interesting and amusing. Aristotle noticed that each bee kept to one species of flower during one expedition. Bees, Lord Avebury said, were useful first in providing us with honey and secondly in giving us information as to the future by means of omens. The wonderful accuracy of the bee's cells always had been a matter of astonishment. Pliny accounted for their six sides by supposing each of their legs built on one side, an idea not much less far fetched than that of a modern writer, who favored to correlate them with [illegible] eyes. It is thought by [illegible] that bees touch, taste, smell and see. As to their hearing there is still some question. Possibly they do not hear the same sounds that people do, but rather the overtones. They have five eyes, too, which are constructed on a different plan from the other three, which is curious enough. They certainly can distinguish colors and the ultra violet rays which are invisible to men. The earth must seem to bees an entirely different place from what it does to us and it may be understood by them by the means of senses of which we have no idea. Finally the bees are endowed with a certain amount of keen intelligence and reasoning power.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

Golden Thoughts.

If any little word of mine,
Can make one life the brighter,
God help me speak that little word
To make that heart the lighter.

It is right and consistent with good, that we do the work we can to help each other, to cheer our fellow man, hew a smoother pathway for him, and bring about the millennium.

On knowledge seen is evidence founded, and the real inner knowledge can be gained by all who so desire; and you must come into this knowledge or aura of that spiritual life, in the life to come if you do not seek it here. And, why not seek to attain that knowledge here in this life? A knowledge that will tide you over the rough places that would otherwise be a burdensome load to carry.

Knowledge is the only Savior of mankind, or, as a great orator once said, "Intelligence is the only light; ignorance the only darkness." Then, why not seek it to further our own advancement, thereby furthering the advancement of our fellow man, not only in this life, but the life to come, and,

"When thy struggling heart has conquered
When the path lies fair and clear,
When thou art prepared for heaven,
Thou wilt find that heaven is here."

SUCCESS AND HAPPINESS, and How to Attain Them. By B. F. Austin. New Thought Lessons. Beautifully printed and bound in cloth. Helpful in every way. Price 50 cents.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The Writer, from His Standpoint, Doesn't Like Them, and Thinks Eventually They Will Be Suspended, While Others Entertain the Idea They Are Splendid Places of Resort, Spiritualizing and Soul-Elevating, and Will Be Continued Indefinitely in the Future.—The Future Will Tell Who Are Correct in Their Prognostication.

For the first time in many years I have not, so far this season attended any camp. During hot, sultry weather, I find there is no place like home for me. As home is where the heart is, it may be a room only ten feet square, if your heart treasures are there. I have been sitting under my own peach and plum trees, eating red, ripe tomatoes, with cream, and also large, red plums and delicious peaches; and at the same time reading the best literature on earth—The Progressive Thinker, Sunflower, Stellar Ray, and the American Journal of Eugenics.

If you don't know what these publications are, you had better find out "mighty quick." When I get a good idea, a good book or a good paper, I like to pass it around and share it with others. When I was in camp, I always gave away all the spiritual papers I could get; but I noticed the campers didn't read very much. I also noticed that they didn't attend the best lectures at the auditorium. The mediums and campers were absent when the very best speakers in our Cause occupied the platform.

I sometimes asked them why they did not attend those splendid lectures. "Oh," they said, "we have heard all that so many times we are tired of it." Now, it made me "tired" to hear them talk that way, knowing that those very lectures were full of the highest and most advanced thought of this age; that the language used was grammatically and scientifically correct; that the speakers were psychics and inspirational mediums of the first and highest rank.

Most campers didn't want anything but physical phenomena. Now Spiritualism is based on physical phenomena, just as the English language is based on the alphabet; but it doesn't end there. Suppose we only know the alphabet, we wouldn't know much about the English language or about Spiritualism. If the physical phenomena doesn't lead to a higher, better, diviner life, here on earth, better not have any. Spiritualism is based on physical phenomena, but it does not and should not end there. I believe that clairaudience, clairvoyance, telepathy and inspiration are the highest forms of mediumship. There is, absolutely, no limit to the exercise of these occult forces.

Another thing I noticed when in camp was that the management were anxious to have speakers and mediums that were popular, and would thus draw a crowd and make it to pay the camp expenses; that is, they were working first, last and all the time for the success of the camp, and not for the success of the N. S. A. or of Spiritualism generally. If a speaker failed to draw a crowd that would pay, he or she was not invited again. I have noticed that the most advanced and original thinkers and speakers are never popular.

Those who repeat the thoughts of others make the money, while the seers, the poet, the sage, the prophet always starve.

Several years ago when in familiar conversation with the president of a prominent Spiritualist camp, he told me confidentially that "camp meetings are bound to play out eventually."

I didn't believe it then, but the signs of the times indicate that he prophesied truly.

For my own part, I never could listen with any satisfaction to a speech delivered out of doors or in the woods. I would rather attend services in a clean, up-to-date temple, where we have clean seats, a clean floor, a clean people, congregational singing, led by the deep, religious and sacred tones of a grand pipe organ. This is better than anything they have at any camp.

For these reasons I am going to attend all the meetings and all the services of the N. S. A. convention at Indianapolis in October. For this purpose I am laying up money and expect to go there prepared to pay my own bills and help our glorious and world-wide Cause a little financially.

A Bazaar at Muskogee, Okla.

The Ladies' Aid Society, an auxiliary to the Church of Spiritual Harmony of this city, is going to hold a three days' bazaar in November. We would appreciate contributions of any kind suitable for a bazaar, from all that would like to help our noble cause in this new but beautiful city of the Southwest.

The Ladies' Aid was organized in March with eight members, and has held a meeting at the appointed time ever since. It has held three socials, all of which were a decided success, and has pledged and paid five dollars per month on the pastor's salary, and in one instance met more than its pledge, and paid ten dollars in a month, and is planning to do so again.

Any one sending 25 cents will have his name embroidered in silk as a cog in a beautiful wheel quilt, or for 5 cents will have his name in a spoke in one of the wheels.

This is the banner aid society for hard, honest work, and sacrifice.

Come, dear ones, and help such a noble band of workers in some way. "Freely give, freely ye will receive."

The Church of Spiritual Harmony decided to hold meetings during the summer months, which means something in this climate.

Kindly send all money or articles to Mrs. Emma Kruse, 343 Callahan St., Muskogee, Oklahoma."

A FREE TRIAL

of ACTINA, the Greatest

EYE REMEDY

Ever Invented.

No Cutting—No Drugging

If you have any eye disease or your eyesight is weak, you should lose no time in investigating "Actina." We can supply you with all the evidence the most skeptical persons could exact that the "Actina" instrument, invented and patented by Prof. W. C. Wilson, has cured many stubborn forms of eye disease of ten to fifteen years' standing even after prominent specialists had pronounced them as being incurable. Not only has it done this, but it has strengthened the eyesight so that spectacles in many cases have been entirely abandoned.

"Actina" is so simple in construction and so logical in application that it at once appeals to the common-sense mind as well as to the most scientific. One of our noted expert chemists states "Actina is an up-to-date method of treatment: cannot possibly do harm but can only prove beneficial."

So confident are we that the "Actina" is capable of relieving or curing the different forms of eye disease or strengthening the eyesight so that spectacles may be abandoned, we will gladly send you one on trial with full directions which you can thoroughly test for two weeks. If at the end of that time you are willing to part with it, send it back and no charge will be made. Here is an opportunity of testing a reliable treatment, sold by a reliable concern without any cost to you, if the treatment does not appeal to you.

Permit us to send you a copy of our 84-page book, which illustrates and describes the cause and relief of diseases of the eye, ear, nose, throat and head. It will interest you and is fully worth the postal card that will bring it. Address Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342F, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

Mrs. J. A. Murtha, 254 Jarvis St., Toronto, Canada, writes: "I am now making up my fall and winter engagements. During December I serve the Unity Society at Milwaukee, Wis. Societies wishing my services as speaker and message bearer this coming season, write me as soon as possible. Address as above given."

Correspondent writes from Camp Clinton, Iowa: "Frank T. Ripley is down from Wonewoc, and has his sign on the hotel front, and many other mediums are there. Max Hoffman and Elizabeth Jaquet, Mrs. Laura Jones, Mrs. Lichtig, Mrs. Sauer. Mrs. Elizabeth Harding has a home on the grounds, and when called upon practices mediumship. But there is one who was on the ground for rest—Mrs. Mary E. Weaver, of Chicago who was put to work because she was willing, and because her fame went ahead of her. She will no doubt, be asked to sign an engagement with the Association for next season."

Jane Goodwin writes from Hamilton, Ontario: "The First Spiritual Society (now termed Church) has been holding one meeting on Sunday instead of two, during the hot weather. Mrs. Fannie Spalding of Norwich, Conn., has just closed a three months' engagement with us. She has given us an excellent course of lectures, which appeal to the thinker and student, as she takes her subject from the audience. We hope to again welcome her to our platform in the near future. She has gone to Lily Dale, N. Y. We have Mrs. May Price of Washington, D. C., for August and September, so still the cause moves on."

W. R. Cooper writes: "Sister Hill, 320 Flournoy street, still continues to hold her meetings through the summer, giving the light and truth of Spiritualism to all who may come. Sunday the 9th, was an occosion to attract some of her old friends, and Mrs. Hill, as usual, was at her best, giving messages to all present."

The First Church of the Soul, Laura L. Crawford, pastor, Detroit, Mich., will resume its meetings, September 6, 1908, in new quarters—Bamlet Hall; corner Griswold street and Grand River avenue. An interesting program is being arranged. On and after that date regular meetings will be held at the same place every Sunday evening at 7:30 with Rev. Laura L. Crawford as paston, assisted by local mediums. All are welcome.

Reporter writes: "Rev. J. F. Ireland of Tampa, Fla., did some good lecturing at Clinton Camp this season, not under engagement, but because he was upon the grounds and was invited to do so and was willing. He is a ready speaker, under spirit inspiration. His son will be one of the students of the Morris Pratt School. this season. He is an aspiring and bright young man, we are told, and will doubtless fill an important niche in the future of Spiritualism."

Correspondent writes from Hamilton, Canada: "Mrs. May A. Price gave her first lecture to the Hamilton Society, August 2nd. The hall was filled although the day was very warm and as in the days of old, when the spirit moved over the face of the water, and there was light, so the spirit seemed moving in the Hamilton Spiritual Chuch, and all seemed to catch the inspiration of the moment and feel that some spiritual good was coming, and that the two months that Mrs. Price is to spend here will be a revival for the society. The lecture was followed by messages and tests, which were clearly given and recognized. There was a large attendance at Mr. King's home on Monday evening, the parlors were full and all received a short reading. Mrs. Price does not let any time go to waste when she gives messages, but under the control of the little spirit who does that work with her, goes from person to person, reading each one correctly, describing spirits and giving names."

Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue of Hartford, Ct., has had camp meeting engagements at Freeville, Onset, Lake Pleasant, and Queen City Park. Her lectures are always well received.

Irving Jackson writes: "Mrs. Edith McCrosson, formerly of Columbus, O., but who served the Psychic Research Society of Sandusky, O., a large part of last season as lecturer and messagebearer, is now located at 423 North Clark St., Chicago. Her many friends in Ohio unite in wishes for her success in her new field, and bespeak for her a cordial welcome at the hands and hearts of the Spiritualists of the western metropolis."

Camps and societies desiring the services of T. W. Woodrow, can address him at 526 Jefferson St., Hobart, Okla.

Frank T. Ripley is now ready for fall and winter engagements to lecture and give spirit messages. Address him at No. 112 North Beech St., Oxford, Ohio.

W. W. Aber writes: "Having at last closed our meetings at this place, we wish to announce to all who are interested, that we are now open for engagements for the coming year, my wife as lecturer and myself for materializing seances. Can receive communications at the address below for the next ten days. 616 Santa Fe Ave., Pueblo, Col."

J. W. Ring passed through the city last week, on his way to fill an engagement at the Clinton Camp.

Ferd C. Suhrer writes: "Nehr's Grove, at Lyons, is an ideal place for a picnic. About 100 members and friends of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists so declared Saturday, August 15, when we found the spacious grounds thickly carpeted with grass, shaded by numerous trees. Games were indulged in until here and there a group would quietly annex one of the many tables and spread lunch, until the well-filled baskets were only a shadow of their former selves. Dr. Caird and others were called upon for remarks, but declared themselves 'too full for utterance.' When the shower came we retreated to the nearby enclosed pavillion. Songs and hymns were enjoyed, in which all joined heartily. The doings of the F. O. O. S. are noted for their complete harmony and oneness of purpose which is the rule rather than the exception. All were happy and voted to hold another basket picnic at the same place on Saturday, August 29. Take Ogden Avenue car to end of lines, transfer to Lyons car, and the grounds are over the bridge. The car lands you at the entrance."

Mrs. Alex. Caird writes: "The Ice Cream Social and Donkey Party given by the Illinois Sunflower Club at the residence of Mrs. Squires, was a most enjoyable affair socially, and it also brought a neat little sum for the Club. The next Tea Party will be held at the room of the Club, 70 E. Adams St., Tuesday, August 25, at 2 p. m. Mrs. Ruth Coombs will serve tea. Mediums are cordially invited to be present, and each member should consider herself a committee of one to invite strangers to join with us. Come and spend a pleasant afternoon. Get a refreshing cup of tea, a reading, and we hope, a message from the dear ones who have gone before. Remember the place, Lincoln Hall, 70 E. Adams St."

Hattie F. R. Peet, Corresponding Secretary, writes: "Those who were present at the Summer Social, of the Band of Harmony, had a very happy time at the home of Ms. M. A. Burland, on Thursday last. Our next social will be held at the home of Mrs. J. H. Rohrback, No. 723 Chase Ave., Rogers Park, on Thursday afternoon and evening, August 27. Ladies bring lunch. Coffee served at 6 p. m. All are cordially invited. Take Evanston car and get off at Chase Ave.; second door east.

The Progressive Spiritual Church of Chicago, will participate in a Basket Meeting, at Rasch's Park, 7859 Bond avenue, Sunday, August 30, from 12 o'clock, noon, to 11 p. m. Speaking by some of the noted Spiritualists in the city. There will be messages given by some of the best mediums. There will be refreshments on the grounds. The way to reach this park is, to take from Stoney Island Avenue and 63rd or 64th Streets, the Rod South Deering Car to 79th Street and Bond Avenue, or the Yellow Windsor Park Car to Cheltenham Place and Coles Avenue. General admission, 25 cents. Rev. J. H. Demby, Pastor; Mrs. S. D. Spates, chairman Arrangement Committee.

The Spiritualist Camp Meeting at Forest Park, Ottawa, Kansas, will run from September 10 to 20; H. W. Henderson of Lawrence, President; speakers: Mrs. A. L. Lull, Will J. Erwood, Mrs. Ella Baldwin, W. P. Sailing, Prof. C. L. Livingood and D. G. Thompson.

The Fraternal Daughters' semi-monthly social of Wednesday, August 12, was a lovely success, both socially and financially. The supper, of which twenty-four partook, was a marvel. Tests, games, music and singing were heartily enjoyed. Many strangers were present. Soon the Fraternal Order's regular Sunday meetings will begin at Hygeia Hall, coner Ogden avenue and Robey street. Also, the Daughters' weekly Wednesday afternoon and evening meetings in Atlas Hall, which is down stairs in the same building.

Mr. Letford, the well known "Drummer" medium, has been visiting the various camps. He was delighted with Lily Dale and Grand Ledge. Last Sunday he had an engagement at the Chesterfield camp.

J. R. Sunderland writes from Carlsbad, New Mexico: "Mrs. Effie Moss, the well nown materializing medium, passed to spirit life at midnight of the 13th inst., of heart disease, after an illness of 19 days.

The Golden Rule Society will open its doors on the first Sunday in September with a fine program. The same hall is retained for the coming season that was used last—O'Donnell Hall, Paulina street, near Park ave.

A Unique Celebration.

To the Editor:—The First Spiritual Society of San Diego celebrated the twelfth ordination anniversary of John W. Ring at their beautiful Temple, on 7th street, Saturday evening, August 1st. It was rather a unique celebration, Mr. Ring being eighteen hundred miles away. A large portrait of him, wreathed in ferns, smiled a welcome from the rostrum. The decorations were rings of ferns and flowers, suspended from the chandelier, and a series of rings woven into portiers for the windows and doorways. Four large rings screened the rostrum; in the center of each ing were the letters, "R-I-N-G". The souvenirs consisted of gleanings from the writings of Mr. Ring, printed on slips of paper, tied to tiny rings with white ribbon. A fine musical program was given during the evening by the best talent in our little city. The proceeds of the evening went to swell the sinking fund of our Temple inaugurated by Mr. Ring last winter. A very pleasing feature of the entertainment was the reading of the Souvenirs, as each beautiful sentiment was read a contribution was dropped into a floral basket. A letter was read from Mr. Ring, full of Ring-ing words of cheer and truth. Refreshments were saved by the Ladies Auxiliary under whose auspices the celebration was given. We hope to have Mr. Ring with us again this winter.

The California Convention.

The Spiritualists of California will assemble in Convention, in Veterans Hall, 431 Duboce avenue, San Francisco, Cal., on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, September 4, 5 and 6, 1908.

The economic arrangements are in the hands of a committee, of which Mrs. Belle Johnson is president, Mrs. Agnes Secord secretary, and Mrs. Nettie Riley, treasurer.

This committee is composed of prominent members of the four Spiritualist Societies of San Francisco, auxiliary to the State Association, viz.: Ladies' First Spiritual Aid Society; Mediums' Protective Association; The Modern Church, and The Church of the Soul.

The financial demands have been met by the proceeds of two entertainments, under the management of Mrs. Jennie Robinson, and by contributions from various sources.

Veterans Hall is an ideal place in which to hold a convention; and no effort will be spared to make the stay of visiting delegates both pleasant and profitable.

The hall decorations will be under the personal supervision of Mrs. Anna Sexton.

A reception to delegates will be held on Friday evening, by the committee, under the personal direction of Mrs. Robinson.

The business of the convention will be transacted at the daylight sessions on Friday and Saturday.

Saturday evening, and all day Sunday will be devoted to conference and the presentation of the philosophy and phenomena of modern Spiritualism by competent speakers and mediums.

The spirit of fraternity and good will pervades the minds of our people, and we covet the best thought of all Spiritualists, that harmony and good works may abound.

Communications are being received from all sections of the State, filled with assurances of co-operation and helpfulness, and among the delegates appointed, an interest is manifested which is prophetic of a successful gathering.

A large number of prospective delegates were entertained at the home of Mrs. Clara Moore, 595 Waller St., on Monday evening, August 10, Mrs. D. N. Place presiding.

To the Spiritualists of Minnesota and Oregon whose conventiones are held simultaneously with ours, we send greetings of the spirit.

DREAM VISION OF A MURDER FREES CONVICT.

Texas Man Released Through Efforts of a Total Stranger.—Evidence Not Clear.—When Wife Sued for Divorce, He Cut Off Right Hand and Sent It to Her.

Pardoned from a penitentiary life sentence because of a dream—such is the romantic circumstances surrounding the release of George W. Jones from the Texas state prison at Huntsville, where he was incarcerated 11 years ago on the charge of murdering a woman.

In many respects Jones was a remarkable [illegible]. The murder for which he is imprisoned was committed in Harrison county. A woman whose name had been handled more or less by local gossips was found dead. Certain circumstances seemingly pointed to Jones as the murderer. He was tried and convicted. His wife showed her devotion by removing from her home to Huntsville, the penitentiary town, so that she might visit him frequently. He was well-to-do and furnished money for her support.

Jones maintained his innocence of the crime, setting forth that he was at all times devoted to his wife and never associated with other women. For about a year Mrs. Jones was a frequent caller at the prison. It was the one bright spot in Jones' prison life—those visits from his wife.

But there came a time when the visits were not so frequent. Jones pined, but his wife explained that she feared to gain the displeasure of the prison officials. She felt that they were annoyed by her calls.

One day after the visits had slackened there came a civil officer to the prison with a divorce summons for Jones.

Tragic Answer to Divorce.

"Here is a paper for you," said the officer.

Jones' heart fluttered—probably that faithful wife of his had secured him a pardon.

He glanced at it hurriedly—he realized its meaning.

Catching up the hatchet with which he had been working, he severed his right hand at the wrist, and with his left he handed the amputated member to the deputy sheriff, saying:

"Take this back to my wife, and tell her it is my answer to her divorce petition—my good right hand; a hand that has never committed a crime, but has worked all these years for her support."

The divorce was granted and the wife soon married again—married a man whom she met in Huntsville, where she was living to be near her convict husband.

Jones' wounded arm healed after a painful siege, but he always mourned for his wife and often in the night the guards on their rounds would hear him sobbing her name.

And now for the strange part of the story.

J. H. Waldrip, who lives at Chester, Texas, and who ten years ago read newspaper accounts of how Jones had chopped his hand off, dreamed a few weeks ago of the affair. He also saw in his dream, the murder of the woman—saw the tragedy enacted, he declares, as plainly as though he had been an actual eye-witness. Waldrip was not acquainted with Jones—had never even seen him, but he was familiar with his description from hearsay, and the man he saw in his dream—the man who killed the woman—was of entirely different appearance.

Acts Upon Dream Vision.

Waldrip was so impressed with his dream that he felt called upon to study the case. He neglected his own business and delved into the records. He interviewed the prosecuting attorney in the case. He sought the trial judge, long since retired, and begged him for assistance in freeing Jones.

"The man is not guilty, I know it—I saw another man commit that murder, saw him in my dream," Waldrip declared with earnestness.

At first Waldrip's dream was looked upon as a joke. His friends feared for his sanity. But he kept persistently at his task, and at last attracted more or less of a following. Little by little, the tangled skein was unwound, and now through the dream of Waldrip, a total stranger, the governor of Texas and the pardon board have set free Convict Jones.

Bereft of the wife for whose love he sacrificed his right hand, Jones has sought seclusion on a ranch near San Antonio, where he says he shall remain.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

CRIMES FORESEEN IN DREAMS.

They Were, no Doubt, Induced by Spirits.

Whatever may be the psychological explanation of the mystery, there is some authority for believing that certain crimes have been dreamed of beforehand in all their details by people wholly unconnected with their perpetration.

An eminent official of the headquarters staff of the Criminal Investigation Department owed his first chance to a premonitory dream in which the scenes of a cleverly planned robbery was foreshadowed some weeks before it was actually committed. The dream, which came to the young detective in a manner quite unaccountable, revealed the scene, the method, and the perpetrators of the robbery which had not taken place. Keeping the details of his dream in mind, he followed the movements of the man he had recognized in his vision, a well known and skilled criminal. Some weeks afterwards the entire dream was produced in reality; the place, the person, and character of the robbery corresponding exactly.

The incidents of a burglary at a neighbor's house were witnessed in a dream, some little time before it occurred, by a postal official, who was afterwards presented with a testimonial by the police for the information he was thus enabled to give. The dream of the burglary was so realistic that on awaking he went to the bedroom window, overlooking the house pictured as the scene of the crime, and there saw in reality two men breaking in. The action of the two thieves faithfully corresponded in all particulars with the dream; and they completed the burglary only to find themselves immediately afterwards trapped by the police.

Several medical writers refer to similar cases, and the famous Dr. Gregory relates that a lady dreamed that her son, living many miles distant, was robbed of a £50 Bank of England note by a thief who entered his room in the night. The dream picture was so vivid that the lady journeyed to her son's residence, and found that he had actually been robbed by someone who must have entered his room while he slept. It was agreed that he could scarcely found an accusation on the evidence of a dream; but the number of the note was known and publicly advertised, and stopped for payment at the bank. Some time afterwards the very man pictured in the dream was arrested for another robbery, and among his effects was found the missing note.

Dr. Abercrombie tells of a similar three-fold dream of a lady who thus saw foreshadowed an attempt at murder and robbery of her aged relative by a black man-servant. She was so impressed with her third dream that she found the means to have the suspected man watched next night by a person concealed in the room. Just as she saw in her dream, the intended murderer was found to have hidden a knife in a coal-scuttle which he had with him when he entered the room, and, frustrated in his design, his manner confessed his guilt.

An innkeeper named Adam Rogers, living at Portlaw, dreamed one night that he saw two men together at a spot near his house and that one man suddenly set upon and killed the other. His dream was so realistic that he awoke in great agitation and related the circumstances to his wife, and to several neighors next morning, afterwards pointing out the scene of the dream tragedy. Next day two men exactly corresponding to those observed in the dream stopped at the inn, and, impressed with the singular coincident, the innkeeper endeavored to prevent the two departing together, but without avail. Soon after their departure one of the two men was found murdered in the exact spot dreamed of, and the victim proved to be the one the innkeeper had seen thus killed. His missing companion was soon after taken and tried; and the innkeeper's evidence, including the circumstances of the weird dream, mainly procured his conviction.

The remarkable premonitory dream, which occurred three times, of the murder of Mr. Perceval, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the Lobby of the House of Commons, is well known and authenticated. On three occasions some weeks before the tragedy in all its details was pictured forth in a dream dreamed by a man in Cornwall who knew nothing of the parties, or the scene, and who freely related the dream locally some time before the assassination.

Of dreams which have supplied clues to the discovery of crimes already committed, perhaps the one that led to the revelation of the crime and the apprehension of the criminal in the Red Barn Murder, is the most prominent among dreams of this character.—Henry G. Swift, in Light, London, Eng.

LIZZIE.

How bright the winsome smile upon thy face,
'Tis like the sunshine stealing forth at morn,
Upon thy waxen features rest no trace
Of heavy burdens thy spirit hath borne.
Silvery threads run through thy dark brown hair,
Like rays of light amidst clouds black and gray,
Dear sister, thy sweet face freed from care,
Now finds sweet rest with friends of golden day.

'Tis but thy earthly form my eyes behold,
The dear companion of my childhood days.
Why should I mourn, thy joys are manifold
Yet must I grieve for here my spirit stays,
Yet thou art near, thy presence I can feel,
Death cannot sever pure love's subtle chain;
You have left the shadow and found the real;
My love recalls thee to my side again.

OBITUARIES.

H. J. Barber, age 65, passed to spirit life suddenly of apoplexy at his home, 1098 Arkwright, St. Paul, Minn. He was a kind and loving husbond and father, respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife, two sons and three daughters. He had always been a staunch believer in Spiritualism. He had been a sailor, soldier and cavalryman from 1862 to the close of the war. Mrs. S. M. Lowell of Minneapolis, spoke very nicely and appropriately at the funeral. He was laid away under the services of the Acker Post, G. A. R., having been a member at one time. He later became a member of the Naval Veterans' Association of Minnesota, and was an active member up to the time of passing away."

Sunday morning, August 2, 1908, Martha Louise Wardall, nearly eighty years of age, was released from the physical body. No pain or suffering attended her. Father (now 93 years old) and mother were lovers for 57 years, and were pioneer Spiritualists in northern Iowa. The ten surviving children are all strong in the same knowledge of immortality, and we know mother is near. Dr. Adah Patterson of this city, gave us words of courage and consolation, such as Spiritualism alone can give to grieving souls. FLORA WARDALL FOX.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Oh, what a term of love is this!
Oh, what a term of sweetest bliss!
And were it not the other shore
Is joined to this forevermore,
How little of happiness would there be
For two old lovers here to see.

Two old lovers who once were young;
And loves' sweet song is still unsung;
Two old travelers on life's road,
Two bearers of burdens with one load,
One has passed to a higher plane,
Where love eternally will reign.

There is a land for lovers fair,
With trysting nooklets everywhere;
There must be peace and perfect rest
In a land with such true lovers blest;
There must be beautiful flowers found
Where old true loves for aye abound.

'Twere sweet to know of love's sweet dream;
'Twere sweet to see love's brightest gleam,
And sweet to know when one is gone,
There lies beyond another dawn;
Where spirits from the body free
Will sometime reunited be.

DR. T. WILKINS.

At Detroit, Mich., Elizabeth Reliance Howard passed to spirit life July 23, 1908, in her 67th year of earth-life. She left a husband, three sons and a daughter to mourn her passing on. She was a kind wife, a loving mother, and will be missed by the entire community. She will return, for she has promised us she would, and her word was good as law. Oh, how we will miss her loving hands and smiling face. She was our ideal sister.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often the clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

R. I. Smith:—Q.—In what portion of the earth did man originate?

A.—In answer to this question, perhaps I can give nothing better than a passage from the "Arcana of Nature." "Mankind, when first historically known, were distributed over the greater part of the Eastern hemisphere; yet they appear to have originated in a common center, and traditions of different nations indicate that this central region of dispersion was located on the high table lands of Asia. From this region, all man's dogmatical knowledge, early inventions and traditionary records emanate. How the dog, horse, ass, camel, ox, sheep, goat, cat, and gallinaceous fowls were first domesticated, and in and around it many of these still exist in a wild state. Here must have been the seat of man's first development, or those high table-lands must have afforded protection to a portion of human beings, when a more ancient zoology was swept away by convulsions of which mention is made in the traditions of all nations. The latter is probably the correct opinion; for we find this region skirted by lofty mountains, such as a people fleeing from destruction would naturally seek; and these still bear the sacred names which a grateful people would bestow. To the south of these highlands, far into the Indian ocean, everywhere are written the records of the grandest and most prolonged convulsions, which probably gave rise to the myth of the deluge. On the islands of the Indian Sea, which appears to be crests of mountains, rivaling Dhawalagiri in height, and which may have escaped those conditions which destroyed the existing fauna, we find the Pithecas, or orangoutang, in stature as large as a man, and in strength equaling eight or more, which, from its strong resemblance, has received the name of "wild man of the wood," and which of all brute creation approximates nearest to man.

"Still more remarkable, on the eastern coast of this southern border, the transition from brute to man is made by degraded Papua tribes, cannibals so low in the scale of humanity, in them gleams not a ray of spirituality or morality.

"Man originated near the equator, where the climate was better adapted to his defenseless condition, and food abundant. If facts continue to support the present theory, that the Simiae (orang, etc.) of the Oceanic islands are the remnant of an earlier zoology, the seat of man's original development should be placed on the submerged continent, the tops of whose mountains those islands alone represent."

Moralist:—Q.—What are we to understand by the resolutions of the National Education Association, recommending moral training in the public schools, on the foundation of the Bible?

A.—The National Education Association, composed of teachers, met recently in Cleveland, O., and in their resolutions, appears the intent of the God-in-the-constitution clique, which has its lobby in Washington, and which is bound to win unless the liberal thought advocates are vigilant. With what velvet softness the tiger claws of this theocratic despotism is clothed! Read:

"We earnestly recommend to boards of education, principals, and teachers, the continuous training of pupils in morals and in business and professional ethics, to the end that the coming generation of men of affairs may have a well developed abhorrence of unfair dealing and discrimination."

How is this new method of teaching to be inaugurated? The "Educators" let the cat out of the bag in the following resolution:

"We hope for such a change in public sentiment as will permit and encourage the reading and study of the English Bible!"

How this is interpreted by the ever sycophant press to priestly beck, is shown by the editorial comments of the Interior. The writer presents a specimen of the shrewdest sophistry. Thus: "The state cannot take up the Bible with any view of sanctioning its spiritual authority." Why then introduce it to the public schools more than the Koran? Because "nations which have observed the morality of the Scriptures have been strong nations of persistent vitality and steadfast orderliness."

Hence: "The right of the state to teach morals in the public schools, wholly or partly on the basis of Biblical ethics, is at bottom the right of self-preservation, because moral nations live."

It is a police measure, without the least regard to the desires or beliefs of the people who send their children to the schools. Government, that is the officials in power, decide that the Bible must be read and studied as a part of the common school education!

Well, if we are to have the Bible read in the schools, let it be read continuously—let all the passages be read! That is not done at the Sunday schools. Children, with purity of ignorance may read it without hesitation, but their teachers would blush with shame at chapters that the post-office department would confiscate if the attempt were made to send through the mails, and condemn the publishers to the penitentiary for circulating obscene literature. If there is no other book but the Bible on which morality can be founded, read and study every passage, that the school children may fully understand. Teach them that God sanctions polygamy, slavery and horrible cruelty. That he loves war, and that his garments are stained with gore, as are those who tread the wine-press with red wine. After forbidding them to attend the theatre, let them read the songs of Solomon, pronounced the wisest of men, and a worthy example! The lowest vaudeville stage would not permit the singing of these songs. Perhaps these Bibliomaniacal teachers will open the exercises by singing these lustful lyrics!

The nations that have the Bible, are "the strong nations," not because they have the Bible, but in spite of it. A strong swimmer may sustain himself with a mill-stone tied to his neck, and so may a nation advance, though the dead weight of obsolete centuries be sustained.

The Japanese are a "strong nation," a moral people, and in devotion put to shame the most exemplary of Christendom. Missionaries are constantly repeating the necessity of their conversion, so that they may have penitentiaries, houses for the poor, saloons and dives like good Christians! The morality of Mohammedans is mentioned by Bayard Taylor, in his narrative of a visit to Constantinople. His luggage was left on the quay, and he mentioned the fact to his guide. "Never fear, it is safe; not a Christian in a mile."

The splendid civilization of Greece and Rome were not offsprings of the Bible, and the nobility of character and elevation of moral instruction of the ancient sages, have no parallel in the Christian world.

The majority of teachers are allied to the churches, not because they have any serious convictions, but because they think it policy, and will further their cause. They know liberals will make a weak protest if they do not remain silent, and church members will applaud and give them preference.

They are docile tools in the hands of priestly manipulators. There is one thing, however, they have not allowed for. There is more than a Protestant Christianity to count for. The solid forces of Catholic power will not be dormant. If the Bible is going into the public schools, which Bible shall it be? Protestant or Catholic? The teachers say the "English" Bible! Then the Catholic is excluded, and the contention that church sets up that the public schools have become sectarian, and its children thereby excluded is demonstrated.

Pressed to its conclusion, this scheme of marplot "gospel ministers," will disrupt the public schools and the grand scheme of universal education will be wrecked by sectarian greed. Morals can be taught better without the Bible, which itself is the least desirable of books for ethical instruction. The teachers nor anyone else who forces the reading of the Bible, mean moral instruction. They mean religious—and more distinct—sectarian, instruction. They want to make the public schools vestibules of the churches. They want to create a social atmosphere that will be unpleasant to anyone, adult or child, who does not belong to the church.

Why not take the Bible for what it is worth? As a collection of the literature of an early and barbarous people, a people just struggling into the light of civilization, bringing with them the superstitions and child-lore of savagery? It is to the western nations what the Vedic lore is to the eastern. It contains many excellent and truthful passages. We are constantly told this by the Bible worshipers. Its quaint old English is believed to be sacred language, such as was spoken by Jehovah in the garden of Eden, and by the serpent when he betrayed Eve! Its legends were immeasurably older than the Hebrew nation. They belonged to the childhood of the Semitic race of which the Jews were a slender branch.

Contains good things! Verily, but not one truth not found elsewhere, often better expressed. It teaches morals! Yes, and the most villainous cruelty, fraud, deceit, and merciless hate, and the most abhorrent feature is that the example and model of all these horrible characteristics, is its God!

On the other hand it examples a Christ as a type of human excellence, an impossible being, impossible to imitate. A book of moral teaching, by the examples of the character portrayed! Will some advocate of Bible reading by pupils in the schools mention one name in the Bible he would desire his sons and daughters to imitate in their lives? The very first man, named Adam, was a sneak and whining sycophant; the first woman betrayed her husband and sold herself to the devil. Would he like to have his daughters imitate Lot? Or his sons David, or Solomon? Would he have his daughters follow after the Magdalen, or his sons take as their model any of the wandering apostles?

There is not a soul biographed in the "Sacred Book" who, if dropped down into this age, would not be taken for a tramp or escaped madman, and run in by the police to the first lock-up. They were all right for their race and age, but have no place in the civilization of to-day.

A Nut for Skeptical Scientists to Crack.

A Little of My Own Experience.—By Amelia Petersilea.

One night, a short time since, after retiring to rest and becoming calm and passive as one usually does before falling asleep, there appeared, standing at the foot of my bed, the spirit form of my dearly beloved husband. He looked as natural as he ever did in this life—a trifle more grand and noble—that was all. But it must be added just here, that I did not see him with the natural eye, but with the spiritual eye, or as some would put it, with the eyes of the astral form. He held by the hand a little boy, perhaps twelve or thirteen years old, but small for his age. The child appeared to have just been received into the spiritual world. He looked very pale; his head and forehead rather large for the rest of his body. He was light-haired and blue-eyed, with fair complexion. He had on one single garment, a little night-dress reaching to his feet.

Just behind him, there appeared a young man, perhaps twenty-one or two years of age. He also was of light complexion, with blue eyes and brown hair. The boy and the young man were entire strangers to me, never having seen them either on earth or with the spiritual sight.

Mr. Petersilea looked at me with great earnestness, as he said in a very solemn and impressive manner: "Amelia, remember, remember! this is a twin." He then went on to say: "This boy has just been received into the spiritual world, and I bring him to you as a test."

The boy then tried to make me understand something himself. He placed his hand just over his hip, and then drew it around to ris back, just over the kidneys; and then he told me that great pain and trouble in those regions caused his departure from earth. This was about all the little fellow could make me understand at this time.

Then the young man spoke and said that his departure was caused by trouble in the chest, and he placed his hand over his lungs and imitated a cough; then he said: "I am this boy's uncle, his mother's brother; and we are together."

Then Mr. Petersilea said: "I have received this boy, together with his uncle, into our conservatory of music and art. Do not forget what we have told you."

Now I did not hear them talk with any natural ears, but with my astral or spiritual ears. Every word that I have thus far written is strictly true; and now comes the sequel:

Two or three days after this vision, as it may be called, I received a letter from a lady in Massachusetts; one whom I had never seen or heard of in all my life; I, living in California; she, in Massachusetts. This was not over two or three days after my vision, and as nearly as I could judge it was mailed a short time before.

The letter was most pitiful. In it she said she had read some of the communications given through me in The Progressive Thinker, and thought perhaps she might get some comfort for her sorrow through me. She said: "I have just lost a dear, little son; one of my twin boys. I am absolutely broken-hearted, without a ray of hope or comfort in my awful bereavement! My dear little boy, that I worshiped, is dead, and I am in such utter darkness with my grief, I know not what has become of him." Thus the letter ran on for some time.

Now, it must be remembered that in this letter she said nothing about what caused the death of the child, or how old he was; and nothing whatever about the uncle, her brother. I forgot to state that in the vision the uncle told me that he had been in spirit life quite a length of time.

I then answered her letter, and told her exactly what had been given to me a day or so before. I told her of the uncle, and what the boy had said about his back; also what the uncle said of his lungs.

She answered me that her boy was between thirteen and fourteen years of age; that he had died from an operation performed at a hospital; that the cause of his trouble had been, that in playing ball, the ball had struck him in his back, or rather a little to one side, just over the kidney; that in consequence the kidney had become inflamed and afterward the inflammation had spread throughout the stomach and bowels. The doctors performed an operation and he died under it. She then added, "I lost a half brother some years ago, with consumption; and he answered to the description you gave of him. O, can it be possible that my dear little boy is still alive and well?"

Afterward Mr. Petersilea came to me, with the boy a number of times, and the child dictated cheering messages to his mother.

Now at the present time many think, and try to prove, that all these things are done by the subconscious self; and other scientists try to prove that it is all telepathy, and these things being in existence the vibrations impinge upon minds to which they are attuned; and I want some psychical researcher, or scientist, to show exactly how all this was done, and write it up for The Progressive Thinker. I know that the whole world would be interested to hear just how it was done—and answer some of the following questions:

First: Why did my husband appear to me as my husband and not my subconscious self, and why did he appear to give me these things and not the vibrations in the ether? How did it happen that he held the boy by the hand, and told me to be sure and remember he was a twin? Did the vibrations, or the subconscious self, do that? And how did it happen that the uncle appeared and told me what caused his death? Why did he not appear, as I would naturally suppose, as an elderly man instead of a young man as he was? How could the vibrations, or the sub-conscious self, tell me that he had been in spirit life a good while, and how could they tell me just how he looked? How could the sub-conscious self tell me about the boy's back and kidneys, and what caused the trouble of which he eventually died?

Now I want it all explained just how it was done; and all the world wants it, too.

If I had received the letter before my husband appeared to me and told me these things, or if I had ever known or heard of the woman who wrote to me, the explanation might be easier; but such was not the case.

The most of us want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Most surely this is what I want, and I am willing to swear before a notary public, or in any court of justice, to the truth of what is herein written. MRS. CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

Onset Camp Meeting.

One more message from this beautiful camp by the sea. We are enjoying all the beauties of nature and much spiritual food. We have had with us since last we wrote, Miss Susie C. Clark, whose lecture on "Cheerfulness" did us all good; the only W. J. Colville, who was with us for one week, and whose reception was one of the pleasing features and whose class work was of the best. Rev. F. A. Wiggin's lectures and test work have been of the best, and many skeptics have been convinced of the continuity of life through his wonderful work. Rev. A. P. Blinn has given one of his masterly lectures, and Mrs. Helen Russegue is to be with us this week. We have had a Massachusetts State Day, which was all that the name implies; an Equal Rights Day, with Prof. Zubelin as the orator; and a Grand Army Day, that could not be surpassed, with hosts of Grand Army people present.

Our Lyceum is one of the best, and Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn is the conductor; the children all love her, and there are forty-five children in the school. We have had Mrs. May Pepper Vanderbilt with us in camp, and she gave two seances in the Temple to large audiences.

Onset is booming, and we hope to see the friends of the West here before our camp closes.

Everybody speaks a good word for The Progressive Thinker, and all send greeting to the editor.

Our genial chairman, Dr. G. A. Fuller, has had a birthday while here in camp, and his many friends wished him a substantial happy new year.

We are all sorry to lose our singer, Mr. A. J. Maxham, a man who has sung his way into all the hearts of our campers, but he had to leave us for more important business, but we are glad to say that the management have been able to secure the services of Dr. W. A. Hale, editor of Herald of Truth, who has a sweet voice, and magnetic presence, so our camp will continue to have good music.

We waft to you a breeze from good, old Onset.

The Camp Meeting Situation.

Mrs. M. T. Longley, the Noted Medium, Author and Lecturer, Gives Her Views, Which Will be Read With Deep Interest by Every Spiritualist.

It is to be presumed that when Brother Barrett wrote his opinion that the larger number of the Spiritualist camp meetings should be closed for the good of the Cause, that he invited criticism on his attitude and an expression of thought on the subject from other workers in the field. I have read his article with care and have just perused that of our good Brother Peck in reply, and I feel that the question is such an important one that it invites discussion and attention.

I must confess that I am of the same opinion that our friend and brother, Professor Peck holds, though none know better than I the earnestness and heartfelt sincerity of Brother Barrett on all points that touch the work and progress of Spiritualism; so do we all accord to him credit for his efforts to advance the Cause and to free it from aught that may contaminate its purity or impede its growth; yet we may differ in opinion from this good worker on some of the questions which he deems of vital importance to Spiritualism, and this matter of camps is one that will touch the hearts of thousands of earnest Spiritualists who have gained their knowledge of immortality, their spiritual compensations for the loss of dear ones and their instructions concerning Life, here and hereafter, at the summer meetings by lakes and in groves and dells.

Brother Barrett does not advocate the closing of every camp—at least not at first; some few, he thinks, might be maintained without much detriment to the Cause or to state and local societies, but he will not surely ask that such centres of spiritual work as the larger camps, such as Clinton, Iowa, Lily Dale, N. Y., Onset and Lake Pleasant, Mass., and some few others, shall be abandoned; and yet it is at these very places that the thousands congregate during the camp season, that our brother claims find all they want of Spiritualism in summer, and are depleting the Cause of its life-blood and energy, by not sustaining the state and local societies during the remainder of the year. If we do not close the larger camps, but continue to allow them to flourish, I do not see how the evils that our friend thinks are created and supported by them, are to be remedied. If we close the smaller camps, we shall not add much to the coffers of National, State and local bodies, since but comparatively few people attend these small retreats, and moreover, many who do, are dwellers in country places where no society could flourish and where perhaps but two or three Spiritualists reside.

While it is true, that many of our people who annually attend the camps, do not belong to any spiritual organization, I doubt if they would do so if no camps existed; but there are many camp visitors who do belong to local societies, and who are friends of the National and State bodies, while thousands of Spiritualists in the land never attend camps at all, and these could easily support the local societies if they chose. It seems to me that the closing of camps will not solve the question of National, State and local society work and finance; the support of such organizations must come from the deep convictions of our people, that society work is useful, is needed, and that it is a moral duty and obligation for each one to lend a hand to the proper encouragement and support of such work.

Close our camps and one step may gained in the efforts of our enemies to suppress the influence and power of mediumship and of our Cause; the next will be gained later on by the indifference of home Spiritualists to the local work, and societies here and there will go down.

State after state is enacting laws against the practice of mediumship; city after city is making ordinances that distinctly declare that it shall be unlawful to give advice of any nature, with or without pay, by means of occult or psychic powers, facilities or forces, clairvoyance, psychology, psychometry, spirits, mediumship, seership, etc.,—I have literally quoted this last sentence from an ordinance now in force in western cities of different states; an ordinance, under which no medium can hold a seance or give a sitting, even in his own home and without pay, to give advice, comfort and prophecy that spirits often do without injury to anyone, but rather, with blessing and help to many.

We have been told that the full letter of this law will not be enforced against honest mediums, but it can be, and our mediums are liable to arrest, conviction and criminal imprisonment at any time under such a statute.

Had we not better pause awhile before relegating our camps to oblivion? As for their utility, I wonder where our speakers (and hosts of them) would find support during at least four months of the year, if they could make no camp meeting engagements? They surely cannot earn enough during the remainder of the year to live in idleness during the summer months, and we are equally sure that hundreds of persons, yes, thousands, would never have the opportunity of listening to the fine lectures of our brainiest workers, did they not hear them at camp in the summer time.

I for one, plead for the continuance of the camp meetings, not for any personal reason, but for the good I believe they are doing to our Cause and to humanity. I have spoken for the speakers and may also mention the mediums who do good and loyal work for the many who visit them in camp; but they could perhaps live and find plenty to do if they were not at camps; that is, if the city ordinances do not become so numerous that mediums will be driven from the field.

I am not a camp worker. Years ago I lectured yearly at one and another of the camps, and for several successive years during the later part of my service as the secretary of the N. S. A., I lectured at Onset, because I was chosen to represent the National Association there, and hold its N. S. A. day. But I have not given sittings at camps and have only occasionally lectured. As one who deals with Spiritualism and its works every day in the year, I do not need to go to camp for spiritual sustenance and instruction, but thousands of souls do need that help and the spiritual, as well as physical, recreation that our camps can give, and I trust that it will be many years before these beautiful resorts are closed to the seeker after truth.

MARY T. LONGLEY.

Washington, D. C.

Wonewoc, Wis., Camp.

Having spent three weeks at Wonewoc, Wis., I am more than pleased to be able to report the camp very successful.

Many friends from far and near in the state as well as from Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois and elsewhere were present.

We had the pleasure of listening to Will J. Erwood, who delivered a number of very instructive lectures, and with regret said farewell when his time came to leave us.

Mrs. C. McFarlin, after having filled her own engagement, was called upon to take the place of Harrison D. Barrett, who was unable to fill his engagement. Mrs. McFarlin, with her able guides and teachers, delivered some very beautiful and instructive lectures, also helped untangle the subjects given at the conference each morning.

July 3 was State Day, which was well attended by the officers of the State Association, and many new names added to those already on the list of membership.

Monday, Aug. 3, was the annual convention held by the Camp Association. Following are the officers-elect for the ensuing year: Dr. C. W. Sanderson, president; Mr. C. C. Pratt, first vice-president; Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, second vice-president; Miss N. Pribbernow, secretary, Wonewoc, Wis.; Mr. A. W. Foster, treasurer, Baraboo, Wis.; trustees, Mr. Alfred Britton, Mr. H. M. Root, Mr. W. E. Bristol, Mr. J. Matteson.

Delegates to the state convention: Mrs. Whitwell, Mr. C. C. Pratt, Mr. A. Britton, Mrs. C. C. Pratt, Mrs. H. M. Root.

Alternates: Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. G. S. Griswold, Mrs. A. W. Foster, Mr. Stoderforth.

Delegate to the N. S. A. convention, Mrs. H. M. Root. Alternate, Mrs. A. W. Foster.

Mrs. Paul Buehler from Minneapolis, Minn., and Frank T. Ripley, were the message bearers, and many were the messages given and acknowledged by attendants.

The weather all during the camp season was ideal.

CORRESPONENT.

The Cause at Oakland, Cal.

To the Editor:—Just now quite an interest is taken in Spiritualism in our city. There are three or more societies, and many worthy workers in our ranks who are doing good and presenting our cause in a very commendable maner. God-speed them on their mission of Spiritualism.

As it has been some time since you have heard from our society, I trust a few lines may prove of interest to the people who read The Progressive Thinker. The First Trinity Spiritual church holds meetings every Sunday evening in Woodman's Hall. Conference at 7 o'clock. At 8 o'clock the regular meteing of the church. The capacious hall is filled and here and there a strange face among the many faithful in attendance tells its own story, and gives encouragement to the workers. The meeting is opened by an invocation, congregational singing, a short address by some local medium and speaker, followed with song. After that the worthy pastor, Mrs. Rev. R. Cowell and her assistant, Mrs. Dr. Stewart Ellis give their guides full power to express from the spirit world in test and message, other proof of the continuity of life.

Nearly everybody gets some crumb of comfort, some word that sustains and helps them to have hope for this life, and knowledge of life we all hope to attain.

Mrs. Cowell is one of the pioneers of Spiritualism in California. She has thrown out "the life-line" all along this coast, and held at all times for Spiritualism as a religion; ever doing good to humanity has been her motto, and endeared her to the hearts of the people. I can not close without saying a word in the interest of dear brother and co-worker, Mr. Cowell, who has been so helpful in all the work for Spiritualism, selling The Progressive Thinker each meeting, and always speaking a word of its merit.

Put Him to Bed This Minute.

Son—Papa, didn't you tell me that I must believe the Bible?

Father—Certainly, my son; everybody should believe the Bible. But why do you ask such a question?

Son—Because I was reading where the whale swallowed Jonah and after three days cast him out on dry land as good as new, and I wondered if I must believe that, too.

Father—Well, son, that is probably an exception. That is a "fish story." Fish stories are always taken with a grain of salt.

Son—What do you mean, papa? Who furnishes the salt?

Father—How ridiculous! Who do you suppose now, furnishes the salt?

Son—Well, I don't know. I thought maybe Lot's wife had something to do with it.

Father—Sarah, do you put that boy to bed this minute!

Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Ia., Camp.

Your correspondent writes from the Clinton, Iowa, Camp (Mt. Pleasant Park) for the first time in 16 years, and the fact remains that the camp remains, and many of the old-time campers are there.

I must not attempt any special write-up of the program in general, it will be left to others. The development and progress of the camp are all that I shall attempt to deal with.

I felt a little like Rip VanWinkle must have when he awoke from his twenty-years' nap, a little bewildered, at the scene before me, the changes wrought by the lapse of 16 years' absence, but the cheery young faces interspersed among the old ones—the cheery, smiling faces soon brushed the cloud away. The trees are taller, and more stately—those young oaks are the babes that stood beside their parent trees in days agone—they called me back and spoke to me, and their foliage bowed down from their aerial place and said some dear, dear words to me.

What a magnificent American flag is that presented by Frankie Cole, and how grandly it stretches its protecting stars and bars out over those beautiful hills. Everyone is proud of the flag, and Mrs. Cole has no lack for help to run it up to its place each morning. Many important improvements have been made and many more should be made in the near future—when the management gets the Association out of debt.

It is only fitting to state, it seems so foolish to think of starting a new camp within a radius of 500 miles of this beautiful old camp when it cannot get patronage enough to keep it free from encumbrance and make the necessary improvements. What a hard pull it must be for a new one, with nothing to begin a session with and everything to buy. It seems extremely foolish to think of. But it is nothing to your reporter, only, with my experience with camps in the past, it is a wrong idea to have so many that none can be properly supported. This is no doubt the inspiring thought that touched the brain of Brother Barrett, when he wrote a certain article, to which reference has been made by others.

This little city on the hill overlooking the peaceful old Mississippi Valley, is a fine place for inspiration, a beautiful place to rest, a peaceful little home, and a lovely place to hold spiritual—real spiritual—services, a place for the seen and unseen to meet and commune, the door between this world and that other just out yonder.

The grounds are being managed as a rule by the sons and daughters of the old-timers, and as they have grown right up in this school of experience, it is but natural that they are well managed. All officers seem to be efficient and doing their duties.

Mrs. Emma R. Abbott has charge of the Lyceum work, and right well does she do her part, and so do the children, and they all love her.

Frankie Cole, besides being a busy girl every day in the week was the president on Woman's Day, and she proved very methodical in her management of the day's proceedings. She was ably assisted by all the other officers, and the day was pleasant and interesting all through.

Morris Pratt School Day was a wet, rainy one, and the attendance was likewise very much the same—not wet, but possessed a dampened ardor. Some funds were collected, a student secured for the coming season, a club of ten started to "chip in" by the month and aid some poor aspirant to pass through the terms necessary to fit him for the platform, and more is being collected by a drawing scheme now, and those gone to higher planes must be proud of the enthusiasm with which Our School is being pushed forward, and patronized. I will prophesy a larger attendance this year than ever before. The people are just awakening to the importance of this phase of spiritual unfoldment and improvement. Morris Pratt Day at the camp was dark and gloomy, and rainy from morning till night, but much good was done by the students and others who took part in the exercises. These were, Eugene Cooper, a graduate of the school, as chairman, and who in a nice speech presented the financial side of the matter; Judge Wm. Smith of Janesville, Wis., who gave us the historical side in his very explicit style, and your correspondent, who took about fifteen minutes—all the time left—to present the educational side. In the morning conference those taking part were Grant Abbott, Mrs. E. J. Owen, Miss Eula Golden, Mr. Fred Goddard, and Mrs. Emma Abbott, as the real representatives of the school—the goods the school is delivering, the students, some of whom are graduates; also Judge Smith, Dr. Peebles, your reporter and others. A good feeling and interested spirit was manifested by everyone. There is no fear for the safety of Spiritualism when these old wheel-horses fall from the traces. These meetings, these students and these old voices still at the helm, inspire confidence in the future for the rostrum devotees and we well know that the phenomena will always hold its own in all times to come.

Mrs. Mary E. Weaver accompanied your reporter and for the first time in her life visited a Spiritualist camp. It is safe to say it will not be her last time. Her message work proved an inspiration to the camp.

Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig, under an engagement, gave good satisfaction, and by her forceful presentation of her phases and her readiness at recitations and entertaining proclivities, won the hearts of all.

Mrs. Laura Jones was an important acquisition to the program of Mt Pleasant Park this season. Her work was good and appreciated.

Mrs. E. J. Sauer of St Paul held her place in the ranks of the honest workers. She had charge, with Mrs. Bessie Bellman, of the N. S. A. Day, and wielded the influence of their womanly nature throughout the day. Much perceptible good was done the cause and the N. S. A.

One of the most important and most interesting features of the camp is the ladies's dances—when it is a real leap-year hunt, the camp over and over for men—a veritable man-hunt.

The Clinton Camp might as well be made a district affair by Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and Indiana, as it was originally intended, as to financially cripple the cause by establishing camps in all the different states. It seems wrong judgment to try to support so many and not properly support any, and leave other vital interests, also, such as Our School, Mediums' Homes the Press, and State Associations and the N. S. A. to suffer from neglect. A few camps might be well supported, with all the other phases of the ism, and be sufficient unto good judgment.

Dr. Peebles was one of the most active on the grounds, and is doing a great work for the cause, and his familiar face seems like the star of hope left beaming out of the great broad spiritual canopy still overarching the earth.

Lois Waisbrooker, another old-time worker, was there with her thought and her books.

DR. T. WILKINS.

STATE OF WASHINGTON

State Convention and Edgewood Camp Meeting.

The following is the report of the annual camp meeting and convention of the the Washington State Spiritual Association, held at Edgewood, Wash. from July 12, to Aug. 4, 1908, which is repectfully submitted.

At Edgewood Camp, situated on a beautiful little lake, with the sunlight filtering through leafy boughs, and Mt. Rainier looming lofty and splendid in the distance, the devoted followers of Spiritualism throughout the State of Washington, gather. Like happy holiday children they laughed and sang and danced, and were in joyous accord and harmony. Each Sunday brought many people on Interurban trains, and we feel confident that our faith will be spread throughout the State. In the evening huge bonfires were kindled, and the occupants of the tented city gathered about them, and were joined by many who lived in the vicinity, and who manifested an eager interest in the exercises.

There were many eloquent speakers there, who gave a clear exposition of our faith; there were psychics who demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt, that we can commune with our departed loved ones.

The ordination of Mrs. Minnie Jennings, of Seattle, was an impressive event, and the friends gathered there listened with tear-wet eyes to the solemn and beautiful service that ordained her a Minister of the religion of Spiritualism.

The report of the various societies showed a growth that was gratifying. The society at Bellingham now holds meetings in a temple they have erected, and publish an interesting little magazine called "Echoes from the Temple," which was adopted as the official organ of the W. S. S. A. Societies from Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, Bellingham, Puyallup and other cities throughout the State were represented, and a decided interest was shown in a matters pertaining to the work.

The assembled exponents of the faith, feeling the grave need of some action, relative to the persecution of our worthy mediums, after much discussion as to ways and means, framed the following resolution:

"Resolved, the State Ass'n communicate with each auxiliary society, and raise a separate fund to protect and defend in the courts, workers who may be arrested for demonstrating honest mediumship, this protection to be granted to those who are endorsed by the W. S. S. A."

The case of the Rev. Helen Rice Burleigh, Pastor of the Seattle Psychic Society, who has suffered at the hands of the authorities, and who has borne persecution sweetly and nobly, and whose conduct has had sufficient influence with the Seattle authorities that their attitude towards mediums has changed, was touched upon.

The people identified with the Spiritualist movement today, have placed our belief in a more dignfied and lofty relation to the laymen than ever before, and with confidence and pleasure we take up the work for the ensuing year.

The convention followed the close of the camp meeting, and was characterized by harmony and unity. The minutes show that much important work has been done, and the report of the resolutions committee shows profound thought on the economic and spiritual questions that perplex us.

The Association extended a vote of thanks to the outgoing Board of Control for their efficient work, and to Bro. Benson, of Seattle, manager of Camp, Sister Fincham, who so ably assisted him, for their untiring efforts to make the camp a success, and paid tribute to all deserving workers, and finally in a hushed voice Bro. Knowlden called for a vote of thanks to the Unseen Forces that had aided them in the work. It was an impressive moment, and all present responded with a silence that was eloquent. The following officers, and delegates to the National Convention, at Indianapolis, were elected for the ensuing year. Officers of W. S. S. A. President, R. F. Little, of Seattle; Vice-President, Geo. E. Knowlden, of Tacoma; second Vice-President, Mrs. Emma Lapworth, of Seattle; Secretary, D. D. Foster, of Seattle; Treasurer T. S. Benson, of Seattle.

Trustees: Geo. W. Matthews, of Tacoma; Felix Auerbach, of Seattle; Thos. W. McPherson, of Seattle; A. E. Taylor, of Bellingham, and Mrs. E. L. Fincham, of Tacoma.

Delegates for the National Convention: T. S. Benson for Charter, and R. F. Little for membership, D. D. Foster to represent Seattle Psychic Society, Mrs. Mary Stevens from the First Spiritual Church of Tacoma, and Mrs. Emma Lapworth from Seattle Spiritual Association.

After his speech of acceptance, President Little asked that those present should not break the close psychic relation that had been established, and called upon Mrs. Minnie Perkins, of Bellingham for the benediction, and with her gentle words of blessing and encouragement the camp closed, and the convention of 1908 was declared adjourned.

The Mt. Pleasant Park Camp, Clinton, Iowa.

The friends gathered at Mt. Pleasant Park wish to send greeting to one and all through the columns of our valuable paper.

The people throughout the Mississippi Valley have realized the value of our camp this season and have absorbed with its the beauty and inspiration which have been given us throughout the past two weeks.

We are as one happy family gathered on the sunny slopes of our beautiful park. While a few of the friends who were with us during the years that are past, are absent, we know they are still with us in spirit, and will be glad to hear of the success and harmony which unite us.

From the hour when Old Glory gave forth the glad signal of welcome and progress we have enjoyed a continual feast.

Mrs. Richmond's grand lectures, and those that have followed, have awakened a desire to impart to all a realization of the success of our meeting.

We feel that our new president, and those who have so ably assisted him, should feel their efforts in behalf of the camp have been well repaid. The attendance has been good, and the enthusiasm is increasing.

The first masquerade party ever given during camp was held Friday evening, and was indeed a jolly affair. The pavilion was crowded, as all the campers united to make it a grand success.

From the program we realize that the next two weeks will be as good as that which has been given.

Come and unite with us in our march toward freedom and a universal brotherhood.

GRACE S. WHITMORE.
Mt. Pleasant Park, Iowa.

Two Colors only Seen in Dreams.

Red and yellow are the dream colors, if Dr. Havelock Ellis is right. No other hues come to the dreamer of dreams. Simroth has declared that red is the most primitive of colors, and long ago protoplasm from which human beings derived their origin on the new earth probably responded to or was affected by red color waves. In the depth of the sea, the algae or sea weed are red. With the savage red is the favorite color, and for a bright piece of red calico African savages gladly would give valuable elephant tusks. Red strikes the note of intense emotions. It is the color of joy, exultation, jubilation. Savages paint themselves red, and rejoice at seeing each other in burning hues. German women of the early ages daubed their bodies with brilliant red and yellow, and considered themselves most beauteously adorned. On sacred festivals in Rome and Greece, Pliny records red was smeared over the statues of Jupiter, and was the color of religious rejoicing. The human eyes, it is said, can distinguish 100,000 different hues or colors, and can appreciate and differentiate twenty shades of each hue. In other words, the eye is capable of 2'000'000 color impressions.

Niantic, Conn., Camp.

The Connecticut State Association held a State Day in conjunction with the Spiritualist Camp Meeting Association, at their beautiful camp grounds at Pine Grove, Niantic, Conn., Wednesday, July 29, with Miss Elizabeth Harlow as speaker. 10:30.

The morning session was opened at 10:30 by Mr. A. D. Thompson, president of the Camp Association, welcoming the State Association with pleasing remarks, which were responded to by Vice-president George Hatch, who presided in the absence of President Gustine.

After music, Miss Harlow spoke on "Organization," urging the necessity for it, and the support of the State and National Associations. At 12:30 the meeting was adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon session was opened at 2:30 with music. Miss Harlow, taking for her subject, "The Three Distinct Evolutions," gave an eloquent and forcible address, holding the closest attention of the large audience for an hour and a quarter.

Mrs. S. L. Hand was called upon and gave a few messages, which were very satisfactory. Mrs. M. A. Gridley also spoke briefly. A vote was passed inviting the State Association to meet again for a State Day with the Niantic Association in the summer of 1909. The meeting adjourned at 5 p. m. by extending a vote of thanks to the Camp Association for their courtesy to the state.

The day was all that could be desired, the weather being perfect, and a large crowd in attendance. The Ladies' Aid of the camp furnished lunch at their building after the afternoon session, and a pleasant time was passed in social concourse. A large number were present from Hartford, New Haven, Norwich and New London, and it was very gratifying to the management to have the first State Day such a success.

Music was pleasantly rendered by the Dowset quartette of Norwich, Conn. JENNIE E. B. DILLON, Hartford, Conn. Secretary.

The Grand Ledge, Mich., Camp.

The Grand Ledge camp is continuing its good work. This week's engagement is being filled by W. J. Erwood, who has, through his practical, logical and eloquent addresses, pleased the minds of his hearers. New friends are seeking the camp daily from different parts of the state.

The mediums are active in their work. On the grounds are Mrs. H. M. Russell, Mrs. Oswald, Miss Mattie Woodbury, Mrs. Fulgheim, Madame Star, Chas. Barnes, trumpet medium, and others.

We have with us the state president, Mr. James A. Walker, bringing with him the same cordial spirit and enthusiasm for the state work and its power and growth through organization. Mrs. Emma Snow-Hoyt, state secretary, and daughter, arrived on the grounds this evening and will remain for a few days in the interest of the state work.

Mrs. Amanda Coffman will arrive Friday evening to begin her week's engagement. Oscar Edgerly will return Saturday from Chesterfield, to remain the balance of the camp session. MAY F. AYERS, Secretary.

A Splendid Opportunity for Our Readers to Make Money; Both Men and Women. Write Today.

How often have many of our lady readers prayed for the death of wash-day troubles, for cleaning clothes without rubbing, ruining health, looks, etc.,—for the man to cut wash-day in two.

He lives—a genius of Cincinnati has invented a new device that is proving a blessing to women folks. Made wash day troubles all over—changed—there's a new way of cleaning clothes—astonishing, but true. A family washing can now be done in 30 to 50 minutes, while you rest, with no more work than getting a meal. No backache, headache, heartache—much less time—no rubbing, squeezing, pounding—no injury to clothes—no drudgery—that's past. Goodbye wash boards, washing machines, etc. Throw them away. The easy way of cleaning clothes is here to bless our dear women.

The invention that killed wash-day troubles is named Easy Way. Name tells the whole story—easy on clothes, easily used, kept clean, handled; easy on women, makes wash-day easy.

See How Simple, Different, Easy.

Put Easy Way on stove; add water, then soap, then clothes; that's all. In 5 to 8 minutes clothes clean. Laundries clean clothes without rubbing—the Easy Way does the same at your home. Dirt removed automatically, except to move knob occasionally. Entirely unlike old methods. Scarcely anything to do but wait between batches. The Easy Way develops energy by mechanical manipulation associated with hot water, superheated steam, soap-suds and scalding vapor, utilized as a compound force all contained in a closed metal compartment.

It is a caution how the Easy Way goes after dirt—gently, but thoroughly. Surprises all who see. Sounds strange, may be hard to believe—but listen, the writer saw it demonstrated—it's all true. No experiment—going on daily. Thousands are in use and customers are delighted. It not only cleans without rubbing white goods, finest laces, curtains, bed clothes—but also woolens, flannels, blankets and colored clothes. Saves time, fuel, labor, clothes, buttons, strength, looks, health and money, because there is no rubbing, wear, tear or injury. No soggy bad-smelling wood, but all metal—strong, durable, sanitary, light in weight. Always ready. Child can use it. It will therefore be seen that the Easy Way does in one operation the combined work of wash boiler, wash board and washing machine, and in 30 to 50 minutes cleans a washing which before took entire day.

HUNDREDS A WEEK.

While at the factory in Cincinnati, the writer found that this invention has caused remarkable excitement all over the U. S. Factory already rushed with thousands of orders. Evidently the company's agents are making big money as they offer good commissions to active agents and will also send a free sample to those who mean business.

As will be noticed from the engraving, this Easy Way Washer is different from any other device for cleaning clothes.

Construction very simple—easily and safely operated by anyone, and built on the latest scientific principles.

THOUSANDS PRAISE IT.

The writer was shown hundreds of letters from actual users of this grand invention proving it a positive success and giving splendid satisfaction. The following extracts may interest our readers.

J. W. Meyers of Ga. orders 12 more and says: Greatest invention for womanhood, forever abolishing miserable wash-day." I am ready to have my old washer accompany all others to the dump." J. McGee, Tenn. writes: "One young lady cleaned days' washing by old methods, in one hour with Easy Way, another in 45 minutes." A. P. Poppleton, N. Y.: "Greatest invention on earth." Gives perfect satisfaction. Washed bed quilts, greasy overalls and finest laces." Walter Glenn, Ohio: "For superior to any other method." Cleans clothes perfectly without rubbing. H. E. Conley, N. C. writes: "Ship 25 Easy Ways. Been out one day—Have 12 orders. Beats all other washers." Mrs. Celestia Thompson, Ill.: "Easy Way exceeds all expectations. Best device I ever saw, have used washing machines 30 years." I. Beck, Ga., writes: "Enclose order. Easy Way as represented. Worked 4 days, have 15 orders." J. H. Burrett of Ark. after ordering 38 "Easy Ways" says: I don't understand why it does the work but it does—You have the grandest invention I ever heard of. L. D. Hendricks of Ill.: "Beats anything I ever heard of. F. E. Post of Pa. "Received Easy Way—Done a two weeks washing in 45 minutes—clothes cleaned without any rubbing. You don't recommend them high enough. E. N. Illiott, N. C.: "My wife highly pleased Says its a God send blessing to woman-kind." Lauretta Mitchell, O., writes: "Received Easy Way today. Done big washing with it in 45 minutes. Sold 3 already." H. C. Smith, Va.: "Easy Way perfectly satisfactory. Does all claimed Friends delighted; would hardly believe their eyes.

This invention must indeed be wonderful, yes a God-send, that requires less than an hour to clean a wash which before took an entire day.

Cleans without rubbing, squeezing—without lime acids, or other chemicals.

The writer personally saw an Easy Way in operation, and after using one in his own home is delighted with it and after a thorough investigation can say to our readers that the Easy Way made by the Cincinnati firm, seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the makers fully guarantee every one.

A Dweller on Two Planets,

OR, THE DIVIDING OF THE WAY

A Story of the Great Atlantis.

One of the Most Remarkable Books of the Age.

Physical Science was much farther advanced in Atlantis, 12000 years ago than it is to-day. As understood by the Poseidi (Atlanteans) the prime principle upon which it was based—"Incal Malixetho," i. e., God is Immanent in Nature—was FIRST; to this they appended "Axte Incal, Axtuec Mun"; translated: "To know God is to know all worlds whatever." They held that but One Substance existed, and but One Energy, the one being Incal (God) externalized and the other His Life in action in His Body. Applying this principle to their scientific work they accomplished through it aerial navigation without gas or sails, circumnavigating the globe in a day; conveyance of sound with reflection of the sender; heat and power conduction to whatever distance without material connection; transmuted metals; obtained, by electrical action, water from the atmosphere. These and many others were in common use. (Some of the things approach re-discovery, but the reader must remember that this book was finished in 1886, when the modern world knew them not. It knew not the cathode ray till 1896).

The book is endorsed by Prof. E. L. Larkin, the great astronomer and scientist; he regards it as one of the greatest books of the present age. Address

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 29, 1908 NO. 979

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE IN REAL LIFE.

"In Efforts Looking to the Reformation or Development of Character the Mistake is Generally Made of Attempting to Crush Out All Animalistic Propensities, With Little or no Effort Put Forth Calculated to Awaken the Latent Spiritual. Experience is Demonstrating That the Reverse of This Plan Gives Far Better Results. Man is a Slave to His Animal Nature—Commonly Called Wicked Nature—Just in Proportion to His Spiritual Deficiency. We Cannot Kill Off Mr. Hyde but We Can Make Dr. Jekyll the Master. When This is Done Reformation is Accomplished."

The generality of novel readers who have read the world-famous story of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde have doubtless set it down as a groundless narrative, purely a work of fiction, with no foundation in fact. To close observers and students of human nature, however, the characters and incidents throughout the book are but reflections of real life. Certain is it the great novelist, Robert Louis Stevenson, did not lack human models when he outlined the seemingly remarkable composite character of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. It is to the actuality of these human models I desire to call attention.

Biologists divide the mind into the conscious and subconscious; I wish to call attention to a further subdivision of the conscious mentality into the animal and spiritual. I mention the animal first because at the start man was a mere animal or brute, his spiritual nature remaining embryonic throughout thousands of centuries.

It is a matter of common knowledge that man is a composite of the animal and spiritual. Phrenologists, psychologists, biologists assure us that the portion of the brain employed as an instrument through which the intelligence manifests is divided into the spiritual and animal tracts; that man's higher faculties manifest through the top brain, while his grosser nature manifests through the back and lower brain. Common observation tells us that a low flat head, wide in the vicinity of the ears, is low in spirituality, being indicative of strong animalistic propensities. Remote prehistoric remains prove that primitive man was almost, or quite, devoid of the frontal and top brain. As man has slowly and laboriously arisen during the span of thousands of centuries, from the low level of the brute to his present exalted station, the connecting link between matter and God; the human skull has gradually changed to accommodate the growing aspirations and desires of the Divine Principle—that self-existent spark which is and ever has been an elemental part of every creature in Being's endless chain. As age succeeded age the frontal and top brain, being more and more called into use, necessarily expanded. To fully grasp the cause underlying brain development we must first master the fact that the soul promotes the physical, rather than that the body develops the soul.

In contrasting the man of to-day with his pre-historic progenitors, we must not ascribe his present superiority to any marked deterioration of his animalistic nature. The shape of the skull unerringly informs us that the brute is still domiciled in the human form, though in general caged and domesticated. Common observation, coupled with a knowledge of brain topography, assures us that the most cultured, most virtuous, most noble of the race possess the primordial animal instincts—instincts which are held in check purely by the predominance of the spiritual.

Obviously, then, to impair or weaken the spiritual throws open the door of a cage of dangerous beasts; for whenever the spiritual nature, or the brain through which it manifests, is impaired or stupefied the ever-alert brute instincts at once assert themselves.

Medical annals record hundreds of instances where injury to the top brain has resulted in sudden transformations of character. Honesty has been replaced by roguery, virtue by lewdness, modesty by vulgarity. Instances are well authenticated where a ruptured blood-vessel in the top brain or a depression of the skull in this locality has caused women of the most refined, delicate, modest natures to indulge in lewd, obscene speech and actions. In such instances a restoration to normal physical conditions, by a removal of the blood or bone pressure on the brain, has seldom failed to restore normal mental traits. Thus we perceive that sudden degeneracy may be accomplished simply by dwarfing the spiritual without necessarily exciting or stimulating the animal nature.

There are many methods by which the spiritual man may be dethroned. In Robert Louis Stevenson's Dr. Jekyll a chemical compound accomplishes such a result in the space of a few seconds after being swallowed. There are many known drugs and beverages that will produce an effect on the nature of man similar to that produced on Dr. Jekyll, though not always to such an aggravated degree, possibly, or in so short a time. But every symptom alleged to have followed drinking the hellish compound by Dr. Jekyll occurs in real life every day in every great city in the land. Alcohol and narcotics rivet fetters on man's higher nature, thus giving free rein to his animal instincts.

The victim of alcohol, opium, chloral, cocaine, Indian hemp, or other narcotics is in time brutalized, from the habitual deadening of his higher faculties, a result that necessarily accompanies any injury to the frontal-top brain—the sole instrument through which man's higher faculties manifest. Psychologists declare that these portions of the brain soonest succumb to alcoholic and narcotic poisoning, finally undergoing structural change, or a breaking down of the cells of the grey matter. It has been observed that a quantity of these poisons which will merely operate to stimulate the rear and lower brain tract is often sufficient to partfally or wholly paralyze the vibratory action of the frontal and top brain cells.

The destruction of instrument generally renders the operator idle. Naturally when, from long impairment, the top frontal brain cells have ceased to vibrate responsive to spirit impulse the higher faculties become weakened from non-use, for action is the main-spring of growth and strength. Hence the habitual use of alcoholic and narcotic poisons must sooner or later weaken the Dr. Jekyll element of the composite man until it becomes completely submerged, permitting the Mr. Hyde characteristics to dominate all thought and action. If while in this condition the individual passes out of the material form a lengthened term of years must be spent in the lower spirit sphere before he can recover his lost ground.

Thus do we conclude that the novelist drew on real life for the material in his Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde narrative. On every hand evidence obtains that whisky can and does transform the most cultured, most refined, most intellectual beings into brutal, imbecile wretches, who do not hesitate in committing the worst of crimes. We see opium dragging brilliant, professional men, modest, sensitive women down to the depths of hell. We see honor, truth and reputation sacrificed to appease the appetite of this insatiate demon-god. We behold an army of vile cigarette and cocaine fiends recruited from the play-grounds of adolescent youth and the walks of early, promising manhood. All of these unfortunates find their spiritual faculties gradually weakening, and unless through voluntary effort or compulsory measures the pernicious habits are abandoned, the brute instincts must in time gain complete ascendency, when only the fiendish character of a Mr. Hyde can manifest its presence.

Nor does it necessarily require an immoderate use of alcohol or narcotics to partially hypnotize the spiritual. All about us we may see men and youths whose finer sensibilities have been blunted by even but a short acquaintance with these poisons. How often is a refined, considerate nature replaced by coarseness, immodesty, cruelty and a lack of consideration for the feelings of others by a short season of moderate drinking or the use of narcotics, to say nothing of the physical degeneracy. Many a fond mother can testify to such change in a dear son soon after his fellowship with alcohol and tobacco began.

Because of its well known power to stultify the intellectual and spiritual man whisky is made the companion of nearly all the soul-destroying evils that menace the peace and integrity of society. Whoever knew of a gambling resort of any consequence without a whisky annex? The patrons of the race tracks, the pool rooms, the faro and roulette tables, the card and dice dens all require alcoholic drinks and cigarettes to stimulate their gambling instincts, as well as to deaden their sensibilities that they may become callous to the schemes of jobbery and robbery in which they must engage to win out.

Who ever heard of public prostitution that did not make a yokefellow of wine, whisky, beer and narcotics? Destroy the traffic in alcoholic beverages and narcotics and the vexed problem of the so-called social evil, especially in its flagrant form, will solve itself.

There are, however, means other than poisoning the brain with alcohol and narcotics by which the Dr. Jekyll side of human nature may be permanently put out of commission, so to speak, permitting Mr. Hyde to enjoy uninterrupted sway. The healthy growth and strength of mental faculties, as before observed, require frequent exercise thereof. No physical organ or mental faculty can develop and strengthen without use. Exercise imparts strength to mind as well as to muscle. Lack of exercise inevitably leads to deterioration and to all but rudimentary extinction. Where the higher mentality is permitted to slumber indefinitely the spiritual in time becomes subordinated to the animal. Hence, if an individual be wholly given over to sordid ambitions and greed, or if he allow unrestricted license to appetite and lust, he necessarily neglects the cultivation of his higher attributes. In time the well-springs of human sympathy become dry, the promptings of generosity but withered fruit on a dead branch, pure love a vanished dream, laudable ambitions unwelcome strangers. In fact the very brain cells created to vibrate responsive to spiritual impulse become atrophied and useless—Dr. Jekyll dead, with Mr. Hyde as undertaker and sole administrator without bonds.

Before closing I desire to call attention to the fact that man's animal instincts are a necessity while he remains wedded to material life. In this primitive side of his nature repose all physical desires, appetites, sex passion and the instinct of self preservation. The animal is an excellent servant but a tyrannical, dangerous master.

In efforts looking to the reformation or development of character the mistake is generally made of attempting to crush out all animalistic propensities, with little or no effort put forth calculated to awaken the latent spiritual. Experience is demonstrating that the reverse of this plan gives far better results. Man is a slave to his animal nature—commonly called wicked nature—just in proportion to his spiritual deficiency. We cannot kill off Mr. Hyde but we can make Dr. Jekyll the master. When this is done reformation is accomplished.

THE SECULAR PRESS TO THE FRONT.

Psychic Phenomena and the Voice Heard by Archie J. Inger as Set Forth by the Scientist, Edgar Lucien Larkin in the San Francisco Examiner.

"Please explain immediately the automatic writing of Archie J. Inger, here in this city. He claims to hear words in the brain not by means of the ears. Can this be possible?"—A. C.

Q.—Is automatic writing true or false? You have probably read the account in "The Weekly Examiner" of Mr. Inger, living in Oakland, who says he writes words that he hears by means of some organ in the brain not connected with the mechanism of the ear. Is this true or imaginary? A number of persons here wish you to explain this strange case.—A. N.

Q.—Does history give authentic cases of automatic writing like that of Mr. A. J. Inger in Oakland?—C. P. R.

Yes; I read the account of Mr. Inger's writing in Tuesday's issue of "The Weekly Examiner" with no more excitement than that occasioned by reading an account of a convention or that of a musical recital. A. N. uses the word "strange." There is nothing more strange about it than in space telegraphy, telephony and telepathy. It appears that my three questioners have not been reading the gigantic mass of occult literature that has spread around the world during the last ten years. They are not to be censured at all for this, for perhaps they have not had the time to explore these amazing deeps. None could do it in less time than four hours per day.

The nations of the earth are feeling the influence of some—to them—unknown force. Only occultists know anything about either it or the meaning of the Book of Revelation. I am in constant touch with mentalists throughout the world; nothing psychic or mental in the way of "phenomena" happens without being reported to this observatory. Human thirst for exact facts is intense.

The Case of Mr. Archie J. Inger.

Of course he heard the voice speaking in the interior of his brain, and in regions of cells connected with hearing, but these cells were not actuated by nerves leading from the mechanism in the ear. Thus, if a person is walking in the city street, and suddenly sees his father or mother, sister, or brother, or any friend whose body is in a grave, he does not see by means of the retina of the eye, but by excitation of the optic thalami in the brain. He may not be insane, but in perfect health, mentally and bodily. If he is, the messages and visions will be clear and definite. But if the brain is diseased, then, of course, the communication will be as incoherent as if received from any person whom he might meet. The voices heard by Mr. Inger are as real and from the same source as those heard by Ahura, Lika, Sethanthes, Litabakathrava, Adama, Nughan, Anuhasaj, Aph,Cpenta-Armij, Badarayana, Kapila, Brahma,Sakaya-Muni (Buddha), Zoroaster, Confucius, Mencius, Lao-Tze, Abraham, Moses, Isaac, Jacob, Lot, Solomon, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hammarubi, Thotmse, Memnon, Isis, Osiris, Hôrus, Anubis, Ra, Ashtoreth, Ishtar, Homer, Plato, Zeno, Epictetus, Socrates, Jesus, John, Virgil, Seneca, Paracelsus, Luther, Milton, Bunyan, Davis, Abdul Baha, Walrath, Newbrough and many other world revelators.

I have not heard invective, scorn and ridicule hurled against the mighty world-teachers, Confucius, Buddha, Moses and Socrates; and hope not to hear it against Mr. Inger; for the voices heard are all from the same colossal power. And here comes C. P. R. asking if "history gives authentic accounts of automatic writing." I have read fifty-two different bibles." They are all in automatic writing; in fact, there are no other kinds.

The Study of Mind Should Be Supreme.

In an article in "The Weekly Examiner" some time ago I thus spoke upon these abtruse questions. "I must caution the reader, for the literature of the world is now saturated with strange recitals of mysterious mental operations. Without a doubt 90 per cent of these are false." I reassert this to be true. But 10 per cent is true; and this tenth is sufficient in supreme importance to attract the attention not only of every mentalist on earth, but, here with low breath, every giant mathematician also. Let them train their tremendous analytical minds to that supreme thing—the study of mind. Daniel, xi:31, speaks of an "abomination that maketh desolate" as being set up. I interpret this occult sentence to apply to those abominable signs of fakirs that disgrace the streets of all modern cities, as well as the most ancient.

We should wipe out ninety per cent false, and protect the ten per cent true, I have not seen Mr. Inger, nor a word he has written, but I can easily form an idea of what these words teach. He has written 100,000 words, but I have the startling new Bible, Oahspe,containing 726,000 words; and sufficient other books, every word written automatically, to make somethingover 1, 100,000 words. Oahspe was written only twenty-seven years ago, namely in 1881, A. D. I feel certain that the writing of Mr. Inger is merely a continuation of the marvelous Latter Day story, now being slowly revealed.

Two great mathematicians actually study mental phenomena. Sir William Crookes, one of the world's standard physical scientists, recognized as such everywhere by other scientists, was the first great scientific man to experiment with mental things. This was in 1870. He lost a little caste. But then an incredible thing happened twenty-five years later—the British Association for the Advancement of Science elected him president. In his inaugural address he stated before the great body, that his opinions had not change an iota since the day he witnessed his first, now historic series of phenomena—occult as they were. Flammarion is the other mathematician who is not afraid or ashamed to study the mind powers of man. Physical scientists in all parts of the world are now working night and day in these wonderful occult realms. What has happened to the University of Paris? One of its members went to Acca, Palestine, made a long visit to no less personage than that wonderful seer and man, Abdul Baha. This great prophet and world teacher of the human species, like a child, unfolded his true character to the scientist from Paris—M. Hippolyte Dreyfus. He saw the enormous power of the mind of Abdul, returned to the university, and actually was allowed to speak on these purely occult things within the classic walls.

An era of some hitherto unknown kind is either here now or about to appear. Positively it is beginning now, and entirely in mental, or if one prefers, psychic realms. All that I can give out here from Daniel and Revelation, Oahspe and Abdul Baha is this: A mighty new age or era has already commenced. It is the Era of Mind, and an innumerable number of changes that go with it. How it does make an occultist toss in unrest, to be seated and silent, and hear the venerable scriptures of mankind "explained," Especially the Hebrew, Old Testament, and Greek (Alexandrian) the New Testament. They are scientific occult textbooks, like a work on mathematics in a university, whose meaning is totally unknown to any not an occultist. Certain awful conditions in Europe and the United States just now render it impossible for the masters to explain any statement in either of these occult handbooks.

A DESERVED TRIBUTE.

Given to One of the World's Noblest Workers, Dr. Allen Pence, of Terre Haute, Ind.

It is never too late to say good words of one who deserves them, though it is more becoming the observer or the recipient of good deeds to say them earlier, than when passing time may have dimmed somewhat of the luster of their glory.

I am reminded of the tardy recognition, long since due, to one of the noblest workers in our cause the history of Spiritualism has ever known, through a recent visit from his former co-worker and companion, now the widow of Dr. Allen Pence, of Terre Haute, Ind.

Twenty odd years ago, Terre Haute was a great mecca of Spiritualism, Dr. Allen Pence, its most unselfish and devoted patron and promoter.

He was to the Mid-American and Western World, a factor to Modern Spiritualism, relatively what Thomas W. Stanford, promoter of the Charles Bailey phenomenal seances, has been and is, at present, to the wondering Australians in Melbourne; individuality, in maintaing cabinet seances for public demonstration as well as private, through several of the best and most widely known phenomenal mediums the world has ever known. Among these the Davenports, Will Church, Jennie Ferris (Holmes) and Anna Stewart.

Above his drug store he built a large hall which he gave the use of free to the society for meetings, also the two large seance rooms in the rear of the hall. From these rooms has emanated some of the most marked and startling phenomena of history, many of which I have myself been witness to.

He practically supported mediums during their operations there, and often gave free entertainment to the speakers at his home, adding to the speakers' fund $5 monthly from his own purse, and did many acts continuously, unobserved, to make brighter and more successful the life of the worker. Often during my engagements there I have arrived or departed to other fields of engagements far in the night, and have found the little doctor," or his co-worker, "Deacon" Hook, or both, awaiting at the station to escort me "home," for I was always assured that I should always consider this this place and the doctor's, and his good wife's home as my own, as one of the workers, to whom they were at all times most loyal and devoted.

In the conducting of his seances, the Doctor was most conservative and careful to see that every test condition was complied with, and the medium subject to no interruptions or annoyances, and the spirit world was met half way in every method desired, giving to every detail his own personal supervision. What wonder that they responded with greater results. So great was his faith in those he entertained, that though it was rumored at one time that one of these had given way to deception in aiding the spirits, that he brought her back from the nearby city of her temptation, tried her again, and faithfully labored with conditions and regular sittings at which only the two or three faithful ones were admitted, until her former powers and controls were fully restored to her.

The poor, the needy, the erring, found in him and his sympathetic wife true friends and benefactors. He passed out as he had lived in this world with his hands outstretched in an act of mercy and relief, on Feb. 22 last, beloved, and revered by all who knew him. Eighty-eight years of service to mankind should place him in our grateful memories as among the saints.

PROOF OF IMMORTALITY.

A Deep and Thoughtful Discussion.

To the Editor: In the issue of July of your valuable paper appeared an article by Cortland Ball, of Indianapolis, in which occur a few statements, which are frequently made by superficial critics, and which, I think, need modification. Leaving the main question at to the possibility of soul disintegration to a later occasion, I will only refer to two statements: First, that the human soul had no beginning and consequently can have no end. In other words, that whatever had a beginning must also have an end. Second, that the immortality of the human soul is absolutely unknowable. Both statements are the result of superficial observation and thinking. I venture the assertion that Mr. Ball will maintain that he knows that ten times one million equals ten millions. Yet how does he know this? Did he ever count off those figures and convince himself that the statement is correct? Certainly not. He reasons, that inasmuch as ten times one equals ten, so also does ten times one million equal ten millions. And no one will dispute him. This sort of reasoning is perfectly conclusive as far as figures aare concerned. But if we were to apply this same kind of reasoning to any other department of nature, we would be told that we could not possibly know anything about it. That the laws of mathematics do not apply to anything but mathematics. And that it is absolutely unknowable whether a soul had any beginning or not, or whether it will have any end or not, or whether there is any God or not.

Looking at the matter superficially, such critics would seem to be correct and their logic unanswerable. But when the human race will have been educated to study nature not only from exterior effects but also from interior causes, then these critics will disappear, and in their place we shall have men and women who will be able to say that they know the nature, the origin and destiny of human souls with the same certainty and exactitude as we know facts in mathematics. For there is no question and no doubt about the fact, that this whole universe and all it contains is subject to and the outgrowth of law, certain invariable rules of procedure, which apply with equal exactness to all departments of nature. The physical, the spiritual and the department of souls.

We are told that it is absolutely impossible to know whether a human soul had any beginning or not, and that Mr. Ball favors the conclusion that it had no beginning evidently because he does not favor the proposition, which he considers inevitable, that in case it had a beginning it would also have an end. Now let us reason together.

I consider it as a proven proposition that this universe is a progressive universe. History proves that humanity, physical humanity, of course, is progressive. Races come and go, but every next race will exceed and outshine in development every preceding race, when fully developed. So, also, is the planet on which we live progressive, as proven by geology. Therefore, if a part is progressive, the whole must also be progressive. The universe must therefore be progressive, not only as a whole, but in ALL of its parts. Human souls are parts of this universe, hence human souls are likewise progressive, as is proven by the progressive nature of their physical expressions, known as human being. What does progress consist in? In the case of human beings it consists in the accumulation of knowledge by experience. Each succeeding experience is added to the fund of experience already on hand. If then we mentally retrace the line of experiences acquired by any human being, we finally arrive at a time and place when it went through the first experience. That was its beginning. The same is true of the planet on which we live. The condition of the planet to-day certifies to the sum of all the experiences it, as a planet, went through.

Retracing the various cycles of planetary experiences we finally arrive at a time when the planet went through its first experience as a planet. There is no escape from this conclusion: All things and entities which are progressive in their nature, must necessarily have had a beginning to their existence as such, and previous to which they existed as parts on a lower plane of being.

This is equally true of human souls as of the universe at large. For if planets had a beginning, then the universe must have had a beginning, and all human souls dwelling therein must have had a beginning to their existence. And previous to their beginning as human souls, they must have existed as parts of a lower plane of being, which is the animal plane. Every human soul must, therefore, be a collection of animal souls, every animal soul must be a collection of vegetable souls, every vegetable soul soul must be a collection of mineral must a collection of mineral soul must be a collection of atoms, ultimate atoms, indivisible particles. Each such atom, being likewise progressive must also have had a beginning to its existence as an atom, must, therefore, have existed as parts on a lower plane of being. These facts were or are, FORCE and SUBSTANCE.

Force, per se, is unchangeable and unprogressive, is, therefore eternal. Substance, per se, is undifferentiated and unparticled ether, which fills all space and interstices between the particles. Force, per se, is mere motion. Motion of substance or ether, of course, as there is nothing else to move. The conclusion is, therefore, inevitable that all human souls had a beginning to their existence as such.

The question then arises, will they also have an end? Answer, NO!

The axiom that all things which had a beginning must also have an end, has only reference to things, not to entities. It only holds good on the physical and spiritual planes of expression, not on the soul-plane, or life-plane. All THINGS are merely a temporary collection of primitive unconscious entities, called atoms (indivisible particles), brought about for the purpose of acquiring experience by association. These associations are subject to disintegration and reformation on higher and higher planes, until finally a condition of perfect harmony has been established among the constituent atomic entities so that no further separation is possible. When this degree of perfection has been attained, such a collection of atomic entities constitutes a soul-entity or soul-group, a life centre, which is capable of acquiring physical and spiritual embodiments for the purpose of soul-growth, whereby they acquire soul-consciousness. And as soon as this soul-consciousness has been established firmly, the soul-entity is thereby rendered permanent. All acquired experiences can only add to its growth and power. Knowledge once acquired can never be lost, it must forever remain with the soul which acquired it. Hence souls can only increase and grow in power, knowledge and wisdom. They can only advance and progress, they cannot retrogress or decay.

Let us take the case of a single atom. I can prove by mathematical calculations and with mathematical exactness that every atom is subject to a slow and constant reduction in size and increase and refinement by association. This reduction of size and sphere of influence amounts to about one-twenty-fourth of its surface during one universal period, which perhaps amounts to ten thousand millions of years. Now it would seem at first sight, that if this is true, the atom would be finally used up. But not so. The atom loses only one-twenty-fourth of its surface during one period, during the next period it only loses one-twenty-fourth of the remainder from the last period, and during the next only one-twenty-fourth of the remainder from the second period, and so on. The loss, per se, diminishes as fast as the bulk of the atom and only the proportion of loss remains the same. So that as in the first period there remained twenty-three times as much as was lost, so during all subsequent periods there will remain twenty-three times as much as was lost, and therefore the atom, although it began in time, it can never end even in eternity, even should these losses continue forever. But they do not continue forever. As soon as the atom has entered into an association of perfect harmony, like a soul or life-centre, then there is no further loss, because there is no farther friction capable to reduce its sphere of influence, because the sphere of influence of the soul-group is continually increasing. And if atoms have an eternal future before them, then all permanent associations of atoms must likewise have an eternal future before them. And that such permanent associations of atoms exist, is proven by the facts and phenomena of life all around us, if properly understood and interpreted.

This universe is built upon exact mathematical and mechanical laws. Every phenomenon is the outgrowth of mechanical activities based upon the laws of mechanics and mechanical motion. This includes not only physical phenomena, but also spiritual phenomena. Thought, love, will, wisdom and reason and logic. All facts in nature are the outgrowth of conditions. And if all the conditions were known, the results could be predicted. All facts and phenomena connected with this universe must and will be known by man in the flesh. There is nothing unknowable. Nature has no secrets. Man's ignorance is the only bar to universal knowledge. And this ignorance is continually being reduced and knowledge increased.

GOOD-BYE, BUT NOT FAREWELL.

In memory of G. A. Wentworth.

Good-bye, dear one;
We will not say farewell.
Perhaps ere long—
'Tis not for us to tell—
The earthly portal will Again be opened wide
As loved ones join you
On the other side.

How kind you were,
How thoughtful of us here,
And in Death's change
You knew no doubt, no fear.
Your life so noble
Always, here on earth
You saw God's Beauties
And all Nature's worth,
You saw the grandeur
In the fields and sky
And loved your Maker
With no question why.

Your faith was perfect,
Childlike, as 'twas pure,
And where as mortal
Ails and pains endure,
You rose above
The sorrows of this sphere
And lived beyond
Our griefs and troubles here.

And so in passing
To the spirit land
'Twas but a little change
To join the Angel Band,
And while we miss you more,
Far more than we can tell,
We'll bravely say, "Good-Bye—
But not Farewell."

SPIRITUAL PARALYSIS.

As Vividly Portrayed by Henry F. Cope.—A Plea for the Emotions to be Exercised Properly.

In certain types of religious meetings you may hear people deplore the loss of emotional exaltation once enjoyed; they pray for a return of spiritual blessings; they earnestly seek for the repetitions of experiences, the return of floods of emotions once felt. So many a person is wondering why the emotional pleasures of religion have gone from him.

The reason is simple: That stimulus of religious emotion which seems pleasant to the memory fails to return because when it was first felt we fail to obey it, to put it into active expression. Subjectively, the pleasurable experiences of religion are the emotions and exaltations of high ideals. The price of continuance is the practice of the ideals.

You cannot do away with feeling in religion; the extent to which it will be manifested depends on the individual, even undemonstrative natures are influenced by it to an extent which no one can measure. You might as well look to have patriotism without excitement as religion without emotion; bnt the danger is that religion shall evaporate in emotional excitement.

Every time you enjoy an emotion without attempting to employ it as a dynamic for some definite service you both lessen the power of that emotion to appeal to you and the possibility of your answering to its stimulus. Arouse deep feeling and high sentiments and allow them to become ends in themselves and their ends are sure to be only evil.

Any impression to which we do not give expression results in inner paralysis both of emotions and will. When pity, sympathy, aspiration, indignation, or the passion for righteousness stir within one needs carefully to watch lest we lose sight of the duties, the toil, and service to which these are calling.

We are all in danger from the atrophy of our emotions. One views a dramatic appeal in which social wrongs are shown, one reads a novel appealing to the sense of justice or pity and goes his way, having enjoyed the sensations of anger or pity, but making no attempt to give voice and form to his sentiments. He has seared his soul. He has stiffened the finer moral muscles.

There is only one way to keep the heart green like a fair garden where the emotions spring up and flow refreshingly, and that way is to make life's fruitfulness, let every tide of every emotion contribute in some way to life's fruitfulness, let every tide of feeling, every passion and impulse, find expression in action, either the action of obedience to its call or of resolute and positive opposition.

The emotional life is worthy of cultivation. For us all it constitutes one of the perennial souces of joy and strength. The pleasures of the home, of friendship, of love, of doing good, of helping one another are all emotional experiences. They are kept alive and we remain sensitive to these finer feelings in the measure that we do their high bidding.

We need to keep our hearts tender one to another; we need to watch lest selfishness sear the soul, lest the fear of imposition make us deaf to the cry of genuine suffering. It would be better far to suffer some small loss from imposition than to lose one's heart, one's power to respond from the practice of constant calculation and skepticism.

If we are seeking lost joys in religion we shall never find them until we turn from that search to seek out the joyless, to yield to every good emotion of kindness, to care nothing how we feel or what we gain if only our dreams of a better world and of happier humanity which once refreshed us may be realized.

In the endeavor to make real those visions which, as they broke upon us, appeared so beautiful, we find that they return to us. Service is the one hope of the salvation of our powers of feeling; endeavor preserves emotion; expression makes possible new impressions.

If you would keep your faith alive you must keep it busy. If you would hold on to your religious joys you must give them away to the joyless lives. No man feeds his heart by thinking about it; it is when he actually feeds the hungry that his own heart is refreshed, it is when he carries the cup of cool water to another that the well of eternal water springs up within him.—Chicago Tribune.

Speakers and Societies.

To the Editor: In your paper, No. 974, Mr. Harrison D. Barrett has an article at some length entitled, "Some Unpleasant Truths." This article finds fault with the sum that Spiritualists pay their speakers. He says that, with the exception of three societies, the highest salary paid any speaker in a certain section of the country is $12 per Sunday.

Now, what is the remedy?

Supply and demand will adjust this question like all others. The speakers can settle this by fixing the price they think would be equitable to both parties. If the societies will not pay it, the speakers could do as many ministers of the Gospel have done—go into some other employment that pays better, as a Methodist preacher did. He said: "I have five reasons for leaving the ministry and going into business, viz., "A wife and four children." This course would be more manly than saying, "Please give us more." This is too much like begging or finding fault like a spoiled child.

Spiritualist Lyceum Lessons.

Issued Quarterly by the National Spiritualists' Association, 600 Pennsylvania Ave. S.-E. Washington, D. C.

Editorial Committee: Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, National Superintendent of Lyceums, 617 Congress St., Toledo, Ohio; Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle, Berlin Heights, Ohio; Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, 1243 N. 13th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHILDREN'S PROGRESSIVE LYCEUMS.

Under the sustenance of the National Spiritualists' Association, the Lyceum Lessons issued this year have produced an impulse for Lyceums to improve and create interest, that is very encouraging. Many new Lyceums have been organized, and the instruction of members has become more and more a feature of importance.

These lessons have not ended in the Lyceum sessions, as the members have been supplied with copies to take home, where, under parental guidance they have been further studied and discussed. And, unto many who do not have the privilege of Lyceum attendance, the lessons have been a boon of great value.

We voice the sentiment of all Lyceumists, by stating that the N. A. should be supported by all in their endeavor to give proper sons and generous assistance to the Lyceum cause.

COMMITTEE.

THE SPIRITUALISTS' CHURCH AT STURGIS, MICH.

The cut we present of the church at Sturgis, Mich., will interest all, because it was the first church ever erected for the Spiritualists to hold meetings in their own edifice. Since then many churches have been erected by Spiritualist societies throughout the United States, and in many lands across the seas. These provide a room, usually, for lyceum sessions, and furnish splendid privileges for libraries, entertainments and social gatherings.

The church at Sturgis was dedicated to Spiritualism in the year 1857. Meetings have been constantly held there, and at present the friends of our Cause are steadfast and true to the best interests of Spiritualism for the young and aged of their community.

We would like to have any interesting photographs of Lyceums and their special features for use herein. We secured a photograph of the St. Louis, Mo., Lyceum members, whose bright faces would have cheered all, but the picture was too wide to display well in the space allotted, hence, we must delay until next issue to present these loyal Lyceumists to you, and no doubt they will supply us with a more appropriate grouping. They will be disappointed for the present; but next issue will do them more credit by a better presentation, and they will be glad the delay occurred. Always try to realize that disappointments are apt to bring greater joys and benefits to us.

THE NASH LYCEUM ENDOWMENT FUND.

Mrs. Elizabeth Nash, of Dillsborough, Ind., in the name of her spirit husband, sent to the N. S. A. collateral of $120, to be used for the commencement of the Nash Lyceum Endowment Fund. The intent is to secure money for such a fund, in order that the N. S. A. will have a special fund to assist Lyceums wherever possible, to establish and carry on the good work of training young minds in spiritual ways of life. The object is a worthy one. It might have the "mite" savings of every Lyceum, until the sum shall increase to obtain many results of great value to the Lyceums. The promise is too great for present outlining. Send donations for this fund, either in small or large amounts, to the N. S. A. Secretary, 600 Pennsylvania Ave., S.-E., Washington, D. C.

FAITH.

Faith is confidence, trust, belief.

Knowledge destroys faith, because confidence, trust and belief are made actual; hence faith is then unnecessary.

Faith is necessary to all who do not know.

The child expresses faith, because it trusts with full confidence, the parent to protect and care for. When the child learns self-confidence, it does not lose faith, necessarily, but adds unto faith self-ability. It is then able to accomplish and care for, and protect.

Question—Can you by these means arrive at a conclusion why religious faiths have existed?

Answer—I hear you reply: "Because they did not have the necessary facts upon which to arrive at knowledge."

Q.—Then religions of various character have been because people did not have necessary knowledge?

A.—That appears to be the foundation of beliefs.

Q.—What is the most important faith held by people?

A.—Faith in immortality.

Q.—Can that sort of faith be destroyed?

A.—Yes; by proving spirit life as an evidence of immortality.

Q.—How can we prove spirit life?

A.—By communications with spirits.

Q.—Is there any other way?

A.—Yes; the fact that matter is indestructible is evidence of life continuous; because, if you cannot destroy, then the elements, which are of spirit force, prove a survival.

Q.—Then belief in spirit life is not simply a faith?

A.—No; it is provable; and it is being proved.

Q.—Is faith necessary?

A.—Yes; it destroys much that would cause sorrow and despair.

Q.—Then is faith good to have when knowledge is not possible?

A.—That depends upon how faith is applied.

Q.—What do you mean?

A.—Faith in the bad and untrue might work evil.

Q.—Then some faiths have worked evil?

A.—We think so.

Q.—Can you tell some instances?

A.—Belief in heaven to be obtained by repentance.

Q.—What is wrong about that?

A.—It will not be an earned heaven, and seems contrary to the law of nature.

Q.—What other faith is harmful?

A.—A belief that God will save a small minority by electing them to salvation, and damning to eternal perdition the greater number.

Q.—But, what is the better belief of God and Satan?

A.—That God is all-wise and just, because all things of earth and air go forward by progressive unfoldment from the the lower always into the higher. As children are "heirs of infinite possibilities, so all things animate and inanimate are under the divine law of evolvement, and will develop into higher and purer forms.

Q.—Tell me more about Bible faiths. Tell me all you can about how faith operates in place of knowledge. Think of any faith or belief that you have heard, and tell what it is.

GROWTH OF THE BODY.

By Emma Rood Tuttle.

Question—What must be felt before one will begin to grow?

Answer—One must feel hunger. The first work any of us did in our lives was to eat. We did not then know why; but it was nature's way to make us grow.

Q.—But we continue to be hungry after we are grown to be men and women. Is that for growth?

A.—Oh, yes, we must eat to sustain; to replace the parts of our bodies which we break down by exercise, work or disease. The broken down cells are thrown off, and must be replaced by healthy ones.

Q.—How can this be done?

A.—By having our bodies in good condition to make use of the food we eat.

Q.—How can we prepare our bodies for this work?

A.—We must breathe pure air, night and day; be clean by taking baths; drink plenty of water; sleep, and be loving and good-natured.

Q.—How can we know we are breathing pure air?

A.—We must have the outdoor air coming into the house, and the indoor air going out, all the time, night and day.

Q.—We call that ventilating a house, and it is just as necessary in our sleeping-rooms as in our parlors and other living rooms. Can you tell us why?

A.—Because the air which is breathed over and over again is poisonous. It makes us ill and puts our bodies in bad condition.

Q.—How does it make us feel?

A.—We have headaches; our mouths taste bad; we are ill-natured, and cannot digest our food. That prevents healthy growth.

Q.—Why should we drink plenty of water?

A.—The blood needs it, and we should keep our inner bodies washed as well as our faces, hands, and the rest of the outside of our soul-houses.

Q.—Does anger, selfishness, or ill-nature prevent healthy growth?

A.—Yes; hope, love, kindness and good-nature, help to make healthy, promising boys and girls.

Some Things You Cannot Capture.

There are many things which can be seen and identified. If you lose them, or if they escape from you, you at once set to work to find them and bring them back.

Can you think of, and name, some things which can never be captured and restored to you? You did not see them when they flew away from you, and you, nor your friends, nor officers, nor detectives can ever catch them and place them safely back where they started from. They are out, and gone, for all time.

Can you tell what they are?

The words we utter. They are the invisible things which, once out of our mouths, can never be caught and forced back into secret thoughts, which they once were. They are being passed from lip to lip, and there is no telling how far they will go, nor the extent of their influence for good or evil on people in whose ears they stop on their wanderings through the world.

Knowing this, should we not be careful in our speech, and only let such words go beyond our control as will be an honor to us, and not a disgrace to our intelligence and love of truth?

No doubt we can all remember many things we have said which would never escape our lips again if we could re-capture them.

What kinds of words do you think we should keep back, and what may we set free?

Home.

Help to make it, and love it. Froebel says of it: "Thou art the sanctuary of humanity. Thou art the temple wherein the flame of divinity is kept alive and burning." This ideal sanctifies our love and labor in maintaining a suitable home for making boys and girls into good men and women.

There is no place like a good home in which to cultivate steadfastness, integrity, affection, cheerfulness, industry, order, repose, co-operation, loyalty, kindness, and all of the traits which are indispensable in a well-rounded individual.

How should you cultivate these various traits? Discuss them singly. (Give illustrations.) How are homes unmade by the lack of these virtues? Can one member of a family make an ideal home without the co-operation of the other members? Why not?

Our idea of heaven is that it is a beautiful, restful, eternal soul-house for us and our loved ones.

HURTING OTHERS.

By Eleanor K. Eager.

"No one can injure you but just you, yourself," said a Lyceum leader to her group.

"I know by your faces, children that you do not agree with me; and I hope each will tell me what you think."

One girl said: "A boy threw a stone which struck my nose and broke the bone. I think he injured me."

A boy said: "A playmate of mine through an accident, by his chum, had his eye put out. I should think he had been injured for life."

Another child stated that a certain girl "made others think that she (May) was envious, jealous and spiteful." It made her "feel bad to be lied about," and she thought that she was injured.

"Well, children, I still repeat that no one can hurt YOU; can injure YOU but yourself; and we will take each case and prove it," said the leader.

"Mabel had her nose broken. Whose nose was it? Mabel's, of course. It belongs to Mabel. But, the nose is not Mabel, is it? No; it is an organ of smell, which Mabel possesses. Then Mabel, the real person, has not been injured. It is the thing she owns which was injured."

"In the case where the sight of an eye was lost, the eye is not the boy. The eye belongs to Charles. Who is Charles? The one who owns the eye. But, the real Charles is not injured."

"And as for May, who has been misrepresented, she knows that she is not envious or spiteful. She knows that if she could show her real self, other people would know the truth. So the girl has been guilty of falsehood, and we know a lie is sure to be found out, or die at last. As long as May is honest and true, her actions will show it. She will rise above lies. Some day the girl who has been falsifying, will show to her acquaintances how untrue she is. That girl is injuring herself."

It is unfortunate to have any organ in the body impaired, whether it be the nose, eye or any part; and it is very trying, to say the least, to be misrepresented. We can try to curb our tempers and not injure others. (You see we really cannot injure them.) It is our own self, the real spirit, we hurt by being unkind or vile. This is what is mean by "Chickens coming home to roost."

The arrow we shoot comes back to strike us.

A Few Thoughts About God.

We shall not attempt to tell you what God is? because we do not know. Neither does any one. When we were very young, an old lady gave us a terrible impression of God, much to our parents' dismay.

The narrow-minded have narrow ideas of God; and the broad-minded persons have the reverse. Every one has different ideas.

Among the churches, some hold the opinion that God is three person; others think of God as one. God is spoken of in the Bible as spirit,—not as a spirit. Also, that God is Love.

Everything in this world seems to work by rule. Each season has its own peculiar characteristics. We do not plant in winter, nor reap in the spring. The sun is always shining, even when clouds obstruct our view of it. Everything is for a purpose; and we like to believe that we are necessary in this world. We like to feel that we are loved and protected. We see good in and back of everything. An intelligence is expressed in everything; it is infinite. This infinite intelligence, this infinite wisdom, this infinite love, we call God. We are a part of it; we belong to it.

A LESSON ON DUTY.

By I. O. I. Evans.

"Ki, yi, yi."

Little Tommy looked up quickly from the pile of sand in which he was playing train with a row of spools. A glance told him that the dog-catchers had caught his little white dog.

Tommy was a little boy, about five years of age, small in size, and his face was very thin and pale. The little white dog was his playmate, his chum, his daily companion. Tommy had heard of the dog-catchers, but it was not his fault that his dog didn't have a tag. His dog had not done anybody any harm, and anyway it was his dog, and he loved it.

When he saw the little dog in the net he quickly sprang to his feet, shut his teeth hard, and closed his thin lips tighter than ever before in his young life. The tears immediately welled to his eyes as he gritted his teeth and clenched his fists, and that meant something. There was a look of defiance and determination upon his face as he rushed to his dog.

The dog-catcher, a large, burly, colored man, had seen the little white dog running in the street without a tag, and it was his duty to gather up all untagged dogs and take them to the dog-pound. The negro had not seen the little white boy, the owner of the dog; he was busily endeavoring to untangle the dog from the net, and the first idea he had of any impending danger was when little five-year-old Tommy sprang upon him.

For the next few minutes it was almost impossible to keep in touch with the boy's movements. He was a veritable whirlwind of activity With his little hands tightly clenched, he rushed upon the negro, and without a single word of explanation used his tiny, sharp nails on the face of the black man, who was struggling to keep the little white dog in the net.

Tommy's finger nails soon plowed small furrows in the face of the colored man, from which blood flowed down his face. After some little time a stream of blood trickled from the black man's forehead into his eyes, blinding him for a moment and causing him to loosen his hold of the dog in order to wipe his eyes. Quick as a flash the little white boy sprang into the net, soon extricated his little dog, gathered him in his arms and ran.

A large crowd gathered as the fight had progressed, and they loudly cheered as the boy made off with his dog. The dog-catcher acknowledged his defeat, picked up the net, climbed onto his wagon, and drove away as fast as his horse could go.

After the cheering had subsided, one young man stepped in front of the crowd said:

"Boys, I know this little white boy. He lives just round the corner. His father died two years ago, and his mother has a hard struggle to make a living. She takes in washing and does any odd chores can find to do, and possibly earns about seven or eight dollars a week; but you know that seven or eight dollars a week is pretty poor living for a woman and her boy in Washington, and she can't afford to pay for a tag for her little boy's white dog. Let us buy him one! I am going to start by donating a dollar to help the little boy who just put up such a struggle for his pet." The by-standers cheered; and when the collection was counted, it was found that $17.65 had been contributed.

Tears came to the mother's eyes when they recounted to her the story of the little dog's rescue. The collection was enough to purchase a tag, and besides pay for a couple of suits for her boy.

The story got in the newspapers, and the proprietor of one of the small establishments in Washington wrote to Tommy's mother, asking her to call upon him at his office. She did so and was assigned to work, and so well did she perform her duties that she is now overseeing the work of a number of girls and receives $60 a month, all as a result of the little boy's grit.

The above story is typically illustrative of duty. When the dog found itself entangled in the net, it was its duty to call for help; which it did, lustily. Its little master performed his duty when he rushed to the dog's assistance, regardless of consequences, and fought the best he could save it. The dog-catcher was performing his duty in endeavoring to capture all untagged dogs. That is what he is paid for. The by-standers did their duty when they contributed so generously toward buying a tag for the little dog. But they had no right to interfere with the dog-catcher, who was only doing his duty.

The little dog wears a tag now, and there is not a happier group in Washington to-day than Tommy and his mother, and Tommy's little white dog. For they all live better now. Tommy has good clothes and plenty to eat, his cheeks are beginning to show the color of health; and if he continues to do his duty as determined and as bravely as he did in this instance, he is bound to succeed in life.

LYCEUM INSPIRATIONS.

By Dr. T. Wilkins.

No sun e'er shone so bright and hot
But somewhere left a dark, cold spot.
No truth so plain was ever known
That everyone its truth would own.

A man may steal and kill by law to-day
And go scot free to-morrow;
But on the whole, sometime will come his pay
In suffering and in sorrow.

To soil your hands in doing good
Is better far than riches;
The man who would not, if he could,
Will find life full of ditches.

Deserve success and you can command it;
If undeserving, you need not expect.
Be honest and you can then demand it;
Naught good is merited by neglect.

The more we sow of good seeds,
The more we do of good deeds
In unselfishness in life,
The better chance we have to reap;
The higher will our harvest heap
Within this field of strife.

There is music in the whirlwind,
In the billow's mighty roll,
In the calm and peaceful sunlight,
When there's music in the soul.

This old world seems not so gloomy
(Though 'tis cloudy all the while)
To the man who has to labor,
If he only wears a smile.

There's a star to guide the person
Who aspires to the height.
For the one who seeks true wisdom,
There is e'er a brilliant light.

WHAT IS EVIL?

By L. O. Harvey, Lafayette, Ind.

There is no evil in itself; all is the wrong use of some good thing.

The best things are sometimes used for the worst purposes.

All the evil that has ever been in the world has been human misuse of God's good gifts.

There is no such thing as evil. "Good" and "evil" are relative terms; good is positive, evil is negative.

There is no such thing as "darkness;" it is the absence of light.

There is no such thing as "cold;" it is the absence of heat.

(These are not things, or entities, but conditions or effects.—Editor.)

What we call evil is only the absence of good. God never made anything evil. Whatever is, is right if we use it right.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
OR
Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

ORIGIN OF LIFE
and How the Spirit Body Grows. By M. Pomeroy. Price, 10c. For sale at this office.

Alcohol can be and sometimes is used for a good purpose outwardly; but when taken into the stomach, its effects are evil and only evil.

Tobacco, if used around flowers, is good, but used by man through the mouth is bad. Tobacco is the giant evil of the age, sapping the life out of human beings; its use causes some of the worst kinds of diseases; it dwarfs, pollutes and degrades both body and mind.

Tobacco and alcohol are twin evils. They enervate the brain, congest the heart, weaken the body, and debase the conscience.

Children, big and small, refrain from all profanity, all narcotics, and all alcoholic beverages, because they rob people of their mind and of the best that is in them. Strive to bring body, mind and heart into perfect harmony with the beautiful laws of nature and the universe; and then at last your souls may pass into the spirit realms unclouded by any earth condition.

WHAT IS LIFE?

By Lyman C. Howe.

Wise men differ in definitions.

Kant defines it, "An internal principle of action."

Treviranus give it, "The constant uniformity of phenomena under diversity of external influences."

Bichat: "Life is the sum of the functions by which death is resisted."

Duges says, "Life is the special activity of organized beings."

Spencer defines life thus: "The continuous adjustment of internal relations to external relations."

Do any of these definitions meet with our ideas of life? Evidently most of these have special reference to the life manifest in organized beings.

We hold that all nature is alive.

What is called death is but a change in the expression of life.

I would suggest a definition more fitted to the Spiritual philosophy, and the ideals that Modern Spiritualism evolves. Thus: Life is that property of matter that evolves consciousness and sensation.

All life is the same. Why, then, do we see so many varieties of life?

Answer—Because the expressions of life, by which we judge it, depend upon organisms. The more complex and perfect the individual structure, the more complete is the life it expresses.

These suggestions are not for juvenile classes; but for leaders of thought who may evolve such lessons for children as their development invites.

What is the Purpose of Human Life.

To realize the object of life in its deepest and highest significance is essential to a correct understanding of the uses of all our faculties and a proper application of all our efforts.

Question—For what do we live?

Answer—To evolve individuality and develop character.

Q.—What is meant by evolution of individuality?

A.—It means that all the qualities that time, or eternity, may develop, are latent in the human germ. To evolve is to unroll, or roll out. The most perfect individual life is in the germ, which eternal progress evolves from age to age. The object of life is to improve ourselves; to grow wiser and better day by day.

Q.—How can we best do this?

A.—By carefully analyzing our habits and motives, in all our conduct; and as fast as we discover faults in ourselves, making an effort to correct them.

Q.—By what standard can we determine if a desire, or act is right?

A.—By studying the effect upon others, and its influence upon our own character. If it is helpful to others, it is, as to them right.

If it improves our own disposition, makes it easier to be just and kind, it is as to ourselves right. If it be right towards all others, and right in its effect upon ourselves, it must be wholly right and proper. If it be harmful to others, it must also harm us, and therefore, is wrong.

Habits.

Habits are tyrants. We all have them or they have us. But they constitute the stability of life. Without the conservative force of habit our individuality would be chaos. We should follow no line of thought or conduct to any sane conclusion. The tendency to repeat, fixes the impression of thoughts and actions. The more a thought is repeated the more permanence it obtains; and it soon becomes a habit that persists. Actions are the expressions of thoughts and feelings. The first repetition does not establish it, but makes it easier for the next. A dozen repetitions may make but slight impression upon consciousness, but establishes a tendency which may, unnoticed, continue until it becomes an automatic habit. It is then, in a limited way, a law of the mind; for law is but a fixed manifestation of habit. The brain cells assume certain positions when impressed by observations, thoughts or feelings. The same or similar impressions, emphasize the tendency, and fix the rotations, and motions of the brain, or that special area affected by the thought and its repetition. More and more readily it repeats the same until it becomes a habit of the brain; and if not arrested by voluntary effort and directness, it soon establishes itself with authority that resists change, and requires vigorous and persistent effort to overcome.

The boy is startled by some sudden noise, or by a sharp hurt to a sensitive nerve, and without thought, by force of imitation, utters an oath. That is, he involuntarily swears. If he is made to realize, then and there, how deeply that harsh word, or sentence, has sunk into his immortal soul, and how it has wounded his finer and better nature; and how important it is that he guard his speech at the next sudden impulse, and keep his language pure, he will easily check the tendency and keep his mind fortified against uttering an oath. As he learns more of life, and its relations, and the value of pure speech, in refined society, he will feel the blessedness of early attention to all habits that mar the beauty of character. If the indulgence in vulgar or profane language be allowed to go unchecked, it becomes an enslaving habit that will probably mar his whole life, and place him to a great disadvantage among cultured people.

Childhood.

Childhood is the fertile period for the cultivation of impressions—good or bad—and in life's tender years bad tendencies should be corrected. Good feeling toward all people should be cultivated. Hate is an enemy and should not be allowed to poison the mind. Love is always blessed and should be cultivated in feeling, thought and action. Anger is weakness. It injures both in soul and body. Whenever the impulse is felt, it should be checked before it has time to make a sensible impression. Never allow it to become a habit.

"Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry; for anger resteth in the bosom of fools."

Many people seem to think it a mark of self-importance to exhibit anger. But it is a great mistake. It is always a sign of weakness. The man or boy, who betrays anger in any controversy, is always at a disadvantage. But if one indulges it whenever anything goes wrong, it becomes his master. If we would make the best of life we must be on guard against all habits that are not conducive to health of body and mind. The more we exercise self-discipline—self-control—the easier it becomes. In a little time it becomes a habit of life, easy and pleasurable.

Suppose we invite the children to a pleasant exercise of mind, and see how nearly we are alike in our thinking.

A class may be self-educating by practice. Let the mind dwell upon each question until it becomes familiar, and then thinks of the answers until they seem plain.

Question—For what do we live?

Answer—To learn the lessons nature presents to our understanding.

Q.—Is that all?

A.—No. We should develop ourselves by cultivating proper habits, thinking pure thoughts, encouraging good feeling, helping the weak and unfortunate, cultivating a spirit of kindness and love and seeking to make others happy.

Q.—Can we love the unlovely?

A.—Not without adapting it to the law of uses, and learning to find the beautiful hidden in the unseemly, and the good in souls that are covered with bad conditions and hateful habits.

Q.—Is this life and its attractions all we live for?

A.—No. This is the primitive state, a sort of kindergarten, to prepare for a higher and larger life.

Q.—What and where is that higher and larger life?

A.—It is the spiritual life we are developing here, which becomes our natural condition after the physical body is dissolved in death.

Q.—Has it a location?

A.—Yes; all things are located somewhere. We could not be natural without a habitation. Spirits and seers have described varied scenery, beautiful landscapes, rivers, groves, and flowers, where spirits dwell in a state of spiritual happiness and joyous associations.

Q.—Is our life in the spirit world in any way dependent upon the way we live here?

A.—Yes. We are building character here, which we take with us after death; and the qualities of our character determine our associations and degrees of happiness in the spirit world.

THE SUNFLOWER.

By John W. Ring.

Serene the sombre Sunflower stands,
With stalk of sturdy mien;
So tall and stately, it commands
Due note wherever seen.

Upon this stalk, great outstretched leaves
Of living green abound,
So formed and hung, that each relieves
Some awkwardness, else found.

Nymph-like on top of this green throne,
The yellow flower has place,
With majesty that's all her own,
She sits in regal grace.

Fidelity from her we learn;
Her bright and smiling face,
All day unto the sun will turn,
To keep with him apace.

Look up and smile, the light is bright,
If we in Truth but seek;
With patient love, pray trust the right,
And walk in spirit meek.

O'er every life will Autumn come,
For full fruitions glean,
As when the childhood span is run
Then comes the grown up scene.

With ample load of goodly deeds,
We wait Time's tones unheard;
So give the Sunflower many seeds,
To plant, or feed the birds.

Engraved forever may there rest,
In each and every thought,—
"All, all is good, each thing is best;
By change our lives are wrought."

Right rules, light guides, though leaves may f..
And flowers decay and fade;
Law to Perfection moves through all;
From atoms worlds are made.

Surely, then, you and I will do
The very best we can;
To cheer and bless, our whole life through,
Each passing fellowman.

Among the myths of the past, we find the story of a beautiful maiden who became infatuated with the sun. Each morning she took her place on a rock, and kept her face turned toward the "Lord of Day" his daily round. This devotion to the sun displeased the gods; they caused the beautiful maiden to turn into an awkward yellow flower, intending to portray their displeasure and jealousy. The spirit of devotion, yet lives, in the Sunflower; and all day long its bright, yellow face follows the Sun.

"As the Sunflower turns its face to the light of the Sun, so Spiritualism turns the face of Humanity to the Light of Truth." The bright face, always turned to the light, reminds us that we should be smiling and happy, and devoted to the Truth. The bright yellow petals bespeak the many channels of inspiration, by which the soul-life is flooded with light, truth, love, hope, patience, and all those things that go to make life beautiful indeed.

Comparatively, all religious concepts find their origin in a myth. From the early worship of nature comes the signs, symbols and holydays of Christianity. The crossing of the Sun, in its apparent journey, which indicated to the ancients the birth of a new year, gave rise to the "sign of the cross" whereon the Son (Sun) died; also to the birth of a Messiah. About the time of the mid-winter equinox, is the declared birthday of the Messiahs, Saviors and Christs. The re-birth of Nature at springtime, which was long observed before Jesus was known, gave rise to Easter celebration of the Resurrection. So a careful study of ancient myths will give excellent insight into the "songs" of present-day religion.

Gather up the helpful in each. Find the good in every thing. Appropriate, for use, the best to be found; it is yours insofar as you can use it. From a Sunflower learn:

Growth, and the necessary care of the body and mind for a pleasing expression of the inner self.

Order.—How systematically the petals and leaves are placed. "Order is heaven's first law.

Devotion.—With what persistence the face is turned to the light. How much we need of devotion to the cause of truth, and its advancement.

Patience.—The greatest virtue in the world! May we so lean on the Magic Staff: "Under all circumstances, keep an even mind" in order to possess patience.

Care of Little Things.—The Sunflower makes use of the small amount of moisture, and will grow with little attention, yet always proves the value of care, by growing better with cultivation.

NOTE.—The acrostic can be made effective by having ten small children, each holding a respective letter, recite the verses, and then all in unison recite: "As the Sunflower turns its face to the light of the Sun, so Spiritualism turns the face of Humanity to the Light of Truth."

WILL AS THE INSTRUMENT OF THE SOUL.

By National Superintendent.

I am always glad to talk with children, because I am a child only a little larger and older than some of you little people.

I will try to teach you a lesson that I learned when I was a very little girl. At that time I lived in the city of Paris, way over in France, where I was born. When I was not yet three years old, my mamma sent me to a kindergarten. My teacher was a sweet woman. She wore a white mull cap on her head, instead of a hat. That was about thirty-three years ago. At that time hats were not in style; all of the women and girls in France wore white caps.

The first lesson our teacher thought we should learn was: "We can all be what we WILL to be." Every morning we would rise in our places and together would say, "I can be what I WILL to be," about ten or twelve times in succession.

After about two weeks our teacher gave each one of us a little seed, and told us that in that seed there was, sound asleep, a beautiful vine; and if we planted the seed, the sleeping vine would wake up and push its way out of the ground. And then if we would provide something for it to climb on it would grow up beautiful and be a source of pleasure to everybody who sees it. "So now, let us go out and plant our seed." We each planted the little seed in a place set apart for that purpose in the kindergarten yard. Each child had a stick with his or her name on it, which we stuck into the ground near the seed. Every morning we went out together and watered our seeds; because, unless we gave them water to drink, they would not sprout and grow. When the tiny shoots showed themselves above the ground, we watched them every day. One morning our teacher came to school with her arms full of wire frames, which we covered with cloth.

There was a cross, a wreath, a triangle, a harp, a crescent, a star, an anchor, and a number of other designs. Then she gave each one of us a frame, and explained what the designs or symbols stood for.

We stuck the frames in the ground and trained our vines to climb on them. Every day we watered and trained our vines until the frames were filled. There were no two alike; yet each was beautiful.

Our teacher explained that we were little seeds planted on earth to grow beautiful. Through the years of our life, we can become wreaths of spiritual glory, harps of spirit, harmony a triangle of spirit, unity a star of spirit, light an anchor of spirit, hope a cross of sorrow; because in our body is planted a little seed called the Soul. We can be just whatever we want to be; but we must train ourselves while young. Begin now by pure thinking and pure living, and nourish the vines of Spiritual Harmony, Glory, Light, Love and Hope that is in us, so that these may push forth and be a source of helpfulness to everybody who is seeking for Truth.

What do you want to be? And you? And you?

I will tell you what I wanted to be. I wanted to be a good and wise woman, and teach people; and live so that my life would prove that my teachings were Truth. But my parents could not afford to send me to school very long; and so I did not get an education like most children do. However, I hoped on (the Anchor was my symbol) and kept up the thought: "I can be what I WILL to be;" and the Angels heard my prayer and came to my assistance through the glorious light of Spiritualism. By their help I have become a teacher among the people; and the wishes and desires of my childhood are being fulfilled.

So can each one of you by holding the right thought, right desire, and persevering in it, acquire spiritual development and become useful men and women in the world.

ALWAYS remember: "I CAN be what I WILL to be." And ALWAYS WILL to be examples of Light and Truth.

Faith, Knowledge, Wisdom, Power.

Faith is an attribute of the soul and becomes useful only as knowledge is added unto it.

Therefore add to your faith knowledge, for without knowledge it would be utterly useless.

To own the very best set of carpenter's tools and not know how to use them would be useless, but if we do understand how to handle them we can make many beautiful and useful things.

A folio of Sonatas is a beautiful possession when one understands the rudiments of music, but without such understanding it would be only paper with black dots and dashes.

Therefore, no matter what comes before us let us try to get all the knowledge possible about it and then apply it. Knowledge, when rightly employed, becomes wisdom. It is the knowledge which we gather by experience, observation and experiment that really makes us wise, provided we apply it in turn and demonstrate the result to our own understanding. We can gather much from reading good books—books that are of a constructive character—that help us to grasp the meaning of things, so that they become our friends. We can attend lectures and in this way hear the thoughts and ideas of others. We can sit in a park and watch the people as they go by, and by observing the look on their faces learn to know the feelings and thoughts which master them. In this way we get an idea of how we look when we indulge in the same kind of feelings and thoughts. It helps us to remember that good thoughts and kindly feelings produce a pleasant, cheering look. Pure and loving thoughts produce a strong and helpful look. Thus our observation becomes knowledge, and our knowledge wisdom. When we have wisdom and employ or practice it, it becomes power. Power is energy and is constructive or destructive according to how it is directed.

The same law obtains in spiritual as in material things. First, we begin to believe that it is possible to do certain things with certain tools, then we learn to use them. We try and try again until we know how; and when we know how we go right on using them and doing all we can with them. Continued practice, finally makes us experts. So in spiritual things—we begin by believing that certain people, who are advanced, can do certain things that we cannot do; then we proceed to find out how they do it, and when we know that, we try to do it. After we have tried long enough we can do it, and go right on until we are so proficient we secure power. Then by applying our power for truth and right, it becomes a part of that great force in the universe which some call God.

Leslie F. Oren.

The above is the name of a boy, fourteen years of age, who is deaf, dumb and blind. But while he can neither see nor hear, his brain is active; and his soul is sensitive to all that goes on around him. He lives at the Institution for Deaf-mutes at Columbus, Ohio, where I first saw him five years ago.

By the sign language, which is made in his hand, he can converse with any one who knows the language. He has also learned to read with the tips of his fingers, like the blind people do.

On the first of June of this year, with a party of friends, I visited this school, and while my friends rested on the veranda I stepped into the parlor, and selecting a comfortable chair in one corner of the large room, began to read. In a few moments I heard footsteps; and looking up saw a bright, pleasant-faced boy coming in my direction, with his hands extended as if reaching for something. In another moment he was grasping my hand and patting my face. Just then a young lady stepped up behind him and began making signs into his hand, to which he seemed to respond animatedly. The young lady smiled and to me "I was just saying to him that he should not bother visitors like that; but he replied that he knows you, that you came here some years ago and he met you then." I said: "Yes, that is true. This boy is Leslie, whom I saw just once five years ago; but how did he know that I was here?"

The young lady asked him, and he replied: "I felt her in the air, and I just followed the feeling; that's how I found her."

Just think how wonderfully sensitive this dear boy is, that an impression made five years ago is retained so that when he comes anywhere near the one who produced it he immediately knows it and starts out to find them. My friends had come in from the veranda, and Leslie began getting acquainted with them by fingering them all over; and should they visit him again in future he would surely know them even as he knew me.

What can we learn from the life of this dear boy? We learn that although the physical body may be diseased and certain organs refuse to do their work, still the soul remains clear; and if the brain is in normal condition the soul will improve every means that presents itself to give expression. We learn, also, that when hearing and seeing is gone, feeling is all the stronger and intuition keener; so that it is possible to feel and sense things that are neither seen nor heard. This is another proof that the soul is the real person; and the body only the house in which it lives on earth.

While we are glad that it is possible to teach and educate children who are thus deprived of hearing and seeing, how very thankful we ought to be that we are blessed with healthy, normal bodies; and how careful we should be never to do anything that would hurt or injure our bodies in any way, but keep them clean, well and strong, and help others to do the same.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

The Clown of the Christian Circus.

When the church ceased to employ theatrical methods a few centuries ago in the propagation of Christianity its attention was directed to what the priesthood declared the evils of the system, and set out as reformers to destroy that which had made the church the power it is. Of late years it has shown a disposition to revive its old practices. The Passion Plays, finally prohibted by law, borrowed from Eschylus, which many believe were the parents of the story of a crucified God, they have revived, and are now exhibiting in the form of moving pictures.

The droll expressions and actions of the circus clown, and the uncouth wit of the baseball player are lately dragged into the pulpit, and made to do service in "saving souls for Jesus." Anything to aid in building up their faith even to the exhibition of the sisters' nude ankles, peeping out from under the edge of a curtain, the owner's company for the evening being sold to the highest bidder. The idea was suggestive of harlotry, but it brought money into the treasury to pay the preacher for "teaching what the church instructs him to say, not what he believes," as per Bishop Grafton, who proves to be an Episcopalian.

Commencing with bribery, promising a reserved seat in paradise for belief that Jesus is the son of God, then threatening with eternal tortures those who cannot be reached by bribery, so the church has gone on from one process to another, even to the dungeon, the rack, the wheel, the stake and fire-brand, with confiscation of estates, all to compel belief in what, in all human probability, was a priestly fiction. Their latest and most successful dodge is borrowing the service of the low and vulgar circus clown, plagiarized by a baseball player with added coarseness, and making it do pulpit service. When these shall grow stale, the sluggers and prize-fighters may next be utilized in some way to aid in building up a faith in a sect whose crowning ambition is to compel belief in Jesus.

The Thinker is Ever Learning.

He who subscribes to a creed and joins the church, promising to abide by that creed, virtually says: "I know all there is to be learned on that subject, and I will cease further investigation." That is what makes so many ignoramuses in the religious world. Catholicism set the example. Paul instructed the women to learn of their husbands at home. Catholicism teaches its votaries to learn of the priests, and have told them what books they shall not read. Personal investigation and individualism is subordinated to priestly dictation.

Though Protestantism has not taken such extreme measures, yet it approximates closely to it, and discourages the reading of such publications as militate against the popular faith. They negative the scientist, who says: "I do not promise to believe to-morrow exactly as I believe to-day, neither do I propose to believe exactly what I believed yesterday." A man of brains ever thinking is ever learning.

A Marvelous Discovery.

(No. 8.)

"Truth is coming up the hills of Time, Wait a little longer."

It was shown in a former article that the so-called Jews of modern times were found most numerous in those localities where were found Phenician colonies and settlements at the close of the Punic wars, the last closing B. C. 146, and instanced the large numbers of the defeated colonists, who located in Spain. Will some good scholar be so kind as to state, quoting authority, for any colonization of Jews in Spain prior to the last century. We have been unable to find any such record. But the reverse is well established. Rev. David Millard, Professor of Biblical Antiquities and Sacred Geography, in the theological school at Meadville, Pa., visited the Holy Land, Egypt, Arabia-Petrea, etc., in 1841-2, and published an octavo volume, descriptive, historical, etc., of the countries he visited. On page 257, telling of the Jews in Jerusalem, he says:

Most of the Jews in Jerusalem and other parts of Palestine, are of Spanish or Polish origin. Most of the former are descendents of such as were driven out of Spain in the sixteenth century, and who fled at that time into Palestine. * * * *At Jerusalem they a degraded and oppressed people, living for the most part in poverty and filth."

Corroborating Rev. Millard's statement Lieutenant Lynch, of the U. S. navy, sent on an Exploring Expedition to the Dead Sea, in 1847-8, made a similar statement. See page 93, "Narrative of the United States Expedition, Condensed Edition, to the Dead Sea."

Wherever the Phenicians located, by intermarriage with their own people, like the pseudo-Jews of to-day, they preserved intact their own nationality. The Jews in Poland and the Crimea, as throughout Russia generally, are believed to be descendents of Phenicia when its commerce dominated the world.

We have shown beyond the possibility of question in former articles of this series, and incontrovertible Christian authority, that the pretended translation of the so-called Jewish Scriptures into Greek is fraudulent; that there is no evidence such a translation was ever made; that scholars find the Septuagint in being, but have no conception from whence it came. We showed that Origen traveled twenty-eight years in diligent search for a copy of the Hebrew, to verify and correct the Septuagint, but found none. Others did somewhat similar service without success, while the Septuagint was everywhere in use, even in Jewish synagogues. Many years later it was pretended a Hebrew copy, differing but slightly from the Septuagint made its appearance. It was doubtless a Hebrew rendering from the Septuagint.

If we have a single clerical reader —we hope we have many—we ask his close attention, and we trust the general reader will be profoundly interested, for, in our estimation, it unravels a tangled thread which for many years has occupied the attention of our best minds.

On opening Prof. Draper's "History of the Conflict Between Religion and Science," to read an account of the salvation of the world's literature by the Moors and so-called Jews, in Spain, the eye accidentally fell upon the statement that the Spanish historian, Llorente, himself by dispensation in 1779 a priest was made vicar-general to the Bishop of Calahorra in 1782, and in 1785 became commissary of the Holy Office—Inquisition—at Logrono, and in 1789 was made secretary, and later, general secretary of the Holy Order, otherwise of the Inquisition at Madrid. We are thus particular in giving Llorente's Catholic standing, to show his credibility with that sect, and his opportunity of correct information.

In 1814 Llorente, at Paris, wrote a "Critical History of the Inquisition." On his authority, the best in the world on such a subject, Prof. Draper says of Torquemada and his collaborators:

"In the course of eighteen years he burnt at the stake 1,220, 6,860 in effigy, and otherwise punished 97,321. THIS FRANTIC PRIEST [Torquemada] DESTROYED HEBREW BIBLES WHEREVER HE COULD FIND THEM, and burnt 6,000 volumes of Oriental literature at Salamanca, under an imputation that they inculcated Judaism."

Reader, please stop and think, long and earnestly. We have no account of Jews colonizing Spain. They who settled in Spain following the destruction of Carthage by Rome, were Phenicians or their descendents. Those Phenicians Catholicism and her historians metamorphosed into Jews for a purpose. They had their sacred books, embracing a sort of history of the parent country east of the Mediterranean, with such crude literature as was common to all ancient nations when first beginning the use of letters. There cannot be a doubt the "Hebrew Bibles" Torquemada was destroying were Phenician, and some were read by Catholics to learn the contents. Were these adapted to the mountain tribes of Palestine? and were they songs sung in the seraglios of Phenicia, labeled "Songs of Solomon," with running head-lines over chapters, of "Church's love unto Christ." "The mutual love of Christ and his church," and thus on to the disgust of every reader who has sense to comprehend what the author was writing about?

It was in 1492, the very year America was discovered by Columbus, Moors and so-called Jews were expelled from Spain and their estates were virtually confiscated; for they were prohibited from carrying away gold or silver. Little else could be removed. To discredit Phenicians they were designated Jews.

This writer has maintained for many years that the Old Testament literature was preserved to modern times in Spain, and that it came into Catholic hands from that quarter. He has frequently stated in editorials that Luther, though qualifying for the Catholic priesthood, never saw a copy of the Bible until 21 years of age. Born in 1483, then he did not see the book until 1504. The book probably first came into Catholic hands about 1480, certainly not much earlier: There is a copy in the Vatican library claimed to have been placed there in the twelfth century; but Catholic dates are like priestly morals, not to be trusted.

Rev. McGovern, a Catholic priest, in a Catholic pulpit, at Fulton, Ill., in 1870, declared, in our hearing, "The church knows how the Holy Scriptures were written, and is reluctant to place the book in the hands of those without that information, in lead them to destruction." Was he lying, or stating a fact? We believe the latter. Several learned scholars have contended for years that the Old Testament first came into Christian hands not far from the close of the fifteenth century. It is claimed a part of the Bible was printed in 1450, but title pages and dates were long unknown, and the latter were usually filled in with a pen, and made to bear an early date to increase their value; 1484 seems the earliest possible date. Torquemada died in 1498. He became president of the Inquisitors in 1483, and the most brutal of his acts, and his destruction of literature began with his first induction into office. Certain it is: The Bible came into the hands of the church in Spain, and and during the period near the expulsion of the Jews and Moors from that country. And from facts afterward developed it is also certain it was a copy of the Septuagint, a probable Greek rendering of the ancient Phenician history. It was doubtless changed in Catholic hands to meet the needs of Mother church.

Many additional and important facts could be given to strengthen points herein taken, but it seems unnecessary, the evidence being overwhelming that it is the lost and adapted Phenician history that is now serving the Christian world as "Word of God."

Positively, the World Moves.

News from the Orient reveals the wonderful fact that the Turkish veil, which, more than a thousand years, has been worn by Turkish women, to conceal their features and their beauty, has been torn away by the reformers who seem at this time to hold sway in the Ottoman empire, and that the people are joyous with delight. The report comes that thousands of unveiled women parade the streets of Constantinople rejoicing in their new-found freedom. Men, too, join in cheering the women on every opportune occasion. Says the news dispatch:

"The whole outward appearance of the Turkish empire is changed. On every hand smiling faces are seen, where late were the sombre veils that hid them."

The Sultan has granted the people a constitutional government and hundreds of thousands of women emerged from the privacy of the harems, tore off their veils, marched bravely through the streets, and participated in the general joy.

The women released from the barbarism which for long ages has held them in thrall, the people of our own Aryan family, with a system of religion that has only one God, and no priest, they will soon come to the front as the most progressive people of the twentieth century. They have been restrained by a despotism projected into modern times which made their mothers slaves from which their sons were but one remove

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Spiritualists who enjoy a surfeit of the double distilled essence of dullness for their mental and spiritual pabulum, should not read The Progressive Thinker. This paper is not afraid to discuss any live topic that pertains to the interest of genuine Spiritualism. Those who do not want a thoroughly live paper, should subscribe for some other journal, for The Progressive Thinker will be sure to jar their sensibilities by its ungloved handling of fraudulent "mediumship," and other matters of import to Spiritualism. If by so doing, The Progressive Thinker treads on the tender corns of somebody—so be it—we shall not swerve from our duty to the Cause as we apprehend it.

Moon Regarded as a Deity.

Among the early peoples of Mesopotamia all of the heavenly bodies were regarded as deities, but the moon, because of the variety of the shapes which it assumes, was the chief of them all. Special reverence was therefore paid it and some of the oldest and most important of the Babylonian temples, as at Ur and Haran, were devoted to its worship. Thus the crescent, the symbol by which the moon god was represented, was supposed to have the power to avert evil, and then together with the star it formed the word for incantation.

AN APOLOGIA

Spiritualism Without the Spirits.

The editor, in a recent number of The Two Worlds, deprecated the fact that several of our younger workers were advocating a Spiritualism without spirits. As one of those younger workers, I deprecate the deprecation. I am stating the case with fairness when I say we do not so much support a Spiritualism without the spirits as oppose a Spiritualism without the men. All Spiritualists object to all dogmatism. We (the accused) object to all dogmatism, whether proceeding from embodied or disembodied spirits. Spirits are, after all, only disembodied human beings, and I have observed many controls who themselves required controlling, heard many inspirers who themselves lacked inspiration, and had Puck been present he would certainly have exclaimed, "What fools these mortals be."

Like attracts like. Like the good and the wise, and the good and the wise will be attracted by you. But to attract these advantageous guides we must first develop ourselves. "The fault is not in our guides, but in ourselves, that we are underlings." For too much sentimental nonsense is talked about guides. Guides are no more all-wise and all-powerful than popes. Says the clairvoyant. "I see Demosthenes or Cicero, Burke or Bradlaugh, behind you; give way, and let them use you, and brilliant addresses will be given through you." In other words, I am to convert myself into a speaking trumpet. But notice the subtle appeal to my vanity. I will get the credit for the brilliant addresses, I will be hailed as the incomparable orator. My vanity may be great, but my reason is not altogether absent. I know I should be accepting praise under false pretenses. I know the credit of the addresses would be entirely due to the disembodied spirit, I being only a mouthpiece. I do not want to be the mouthpiece of Burke or Demosthenes. I want to be my own mouthpiece. "But you can't; you're only Aronovich." I am content. Aronovich shall be the mouthpiece of Aronovich, and emulating the example of Burke and Demosthenes, will endeavour to cultivate his powers of expression to the utmost of his abilities. Myself I have always with me, but Burke may leave, Demosthenes return to Athens, and then I am stranded. Myself will never leave me. If Burke will assist me, well and good; if not, also well and good.

Inspiration is no more dependent on spirit guides than on pens and paper. Some of the most beautiful lyrical poems, in our own and other languages, are love poems, and due, not to any disembodied spirit, but to some lovely lady's eyes. The enchantment of the sea, the scent of the soil, the glory of the stars, the heroism of men, the beauty of women, the light laughter of little children, birds and flowers, insects and sea-shells, have each been productive of innumerable masterpieces. The spirits of our ancestors and friends may be great inspiring forces, but the spirit of the universe is a much greater inspiring force.

We give birth to children, why may we not give birth to songs and pictures, play and poems. Is creation granted us in one direction and denied us in another? The Christians, of course, deny that the greatest born child (in their estimation) was man-born, but we Spiritualists have our own opinion of the immaculate conception. We deny immaculate conception in one direction, and apparently accept it in every other. Does it require a disembodied spirit to urge a mother to jump into the water and save her child from drowning? Is not this heroism due to the maternal instinct? And if a maternal instinct, why not an artistic, instinct, a reforming instinct?

Mediumship is good; mastership is better. To receive is good; to create is better. Spirit-control makes for miracles; self-control makes for divinity. Mediumship is a bridge where we get a glimpse of the Great May-Be, but we must not tarry on the bridge, lest we die gazing. Mediumship has done much, and the spirits, through mediumship, have also done much. They have proved that there is life hereafter; we must prove (or create) life here. They have destroyed hell in the hereafter; we must destroy hell here. They have stated there are suitable and useful occupations for all hereafter; they have shown us what they can do; let us show them what we can do. Let us not lean too much on the spirits lest we become parasites, too despicable even for instruments. We shall be angels, by-and-bye. In the meantime let us be men.—Aronovich in The Two Worlds, Manchester, Eng.

What Is Death.

An Impressive and Beautiful Portrayal Thereof, by Mrs. Mary T. Longley.

A student's room—not very inspiring quarters; no sumptuous appointments; no marks of luxury—only bare, plain and most humble surroundings and articles of necessity. The occupant of the room is a young man, himself plain in appearance and unpretentious; his hands show marks of daily toil; his garb is worn to a threadbare appearance; his face is thin and shows signs of suffering. It is night, and his room is dimly lighted by the oil lamp upon the table at which he sits with his books. He is a son of the people, a worker in the shop for his daily bread, yet he has a thirst for knowledge that cannot be quenched. His people are poor like himself, and his friends are of the humble class of workers who dearly pay for all they earn. Night after night he has sat thus, studying the books he has obtained from the city library, and finding pleasure in the information they impart. But his health is frail, and the lamp of life is steadily burning to the finish, though he knows it not. At length, as the midnight hour comes, he closes his book and wearily prepares for bed; but he does not at once fall asleep; many thoughts agitate his brain; it is a good brain, and it will ponder on what the books have said; it will ask questions and formulate ideas and its desire to expand, to evolve originality and send forth power, is insatiable. And so he ponders and half dreams for an hour or more before sleep comes to the exhausted frame; then in spirit he is away, out among mental workers, thinkers, inventors, intellectual lights, masters of mind, drinking in refreshment of soul from their atmosphere, gaining new impetus for his own mental calculations and training from their influence. His vibrations, now that he is absent from the mortal body, are so accelerated that he can link on to those of these spirit teachers sufficiently to be in harmony with them and their ideals—he is at home among his own kind; they know him and he is familiar with them and their methods of work.

By and by, however, the body makes demands upon him; habit with it has made it master; the needs of the outward life have made it imperative that he be up at an early hour to get ready for the shop work, which he dislikes, but which he has to do, and which he does do with a cheerful heart and willing hand in spite of its meagre recompense. So the body vibrations are astir; they are pulling at the magnetic cord that connects the spirit with the mortal form. He must respond for the students and teachers "Over There" tell him that as yet he is not fitted to remain with them permanently; his own soul tells this also, even elects to return into the narrow conditions and humble environments of the earthly state for further discipline or labor, therefore he returns to the outer consciousness of frugal toil and of unrequited aspiration.

Is is unfortunate that he cannot bear back to the body some impress of what he has done and seen on the other shore. That he cannot register on the mortal brain the memory of spiritual things he has discerned and experienced? That the consciousness of those other scenes is suppressed because the shock of returning to the body has so changed vibrations as to disconnect him entirely for the time with not only the associations of that other life, but also with any remembrance concerning it.

Surely, it would seem as if a memory of the glories he has witnessed, the studies he has participated in, and the knowledge he has gained would be of inestimable blessing to his waking thoughts on the lower plane; but on the other hand they might be of unpleasant effects, rendering him unhappy, impatient and utterly dissatisfied in the outer life with all that "Nature," "Destiny" or "Evolution" had created for him here. However, it may be the law of Vibration is the check that disqualifies him from registering the emotions, memories of associations, scenes and incidents that have been his in his periods of soul absence from the body, and only little flashes of something he has "Dreamed," fragments of thought or of experience now and then recur to his mind and haunt him through the day.

Days, weeks, months pass; the man is developing mental power; his studies are opening up to him a wondrous reservoir of information; life for him vibrates with intelligence; his influence is helpful to those around him; he is doing them good; they appreciate his sympathy and aid. But conditions are not improving with him. He cannot secure any better employment. The daily grind and nightly study are telling upon sensitive brain and nerve. The body grows visibly weak under the strain. Another night comes. Again we see him in his humble room at study with his books. By and by his strength wanes, his head droops upon the open page. All things grow dusky to him. He has no power to rise. He feels himself letting go—not exactly sinking off to sleep, but he is loosening his hold on things around him. Presently he knows he is soaring upward, and he is regaining his sight, for he beholds another self in a chair below him. It is bending over, its head touching the open book. Now he sees that a slender cord has been holding him to this other form, but it is vibrating rapidly towards him, and swinging loose from the prostrate body. He watches it with interest, till the thread seems to grow more luminous and to become absorbed within himself. This other body is not himself; he is aware of that, and he turns from it without question. He feels so light and airy, and so free. How grand it is, so good to breathe. He has not felt as well for many a year. It seems like a holiday to him, and he wonders what he had better do. Now there is coming to him so many memories—thoughts of the past, of his boyhood, memories of long ago, recollections of his parents who died when he was young; of old friends of theirs, and of his later acquaintances and friends; remembrances of many things he has done and said, and of some things that he left undone that he wishes he hadn't; and while all this is going through his mind it is like a glass held up to him that he may see himself; some of it is pleasant—not all—and he would like to turn from a contemplation of his mistakes till it is borne in on him that only by attention to, and study of, our mistakes, can we grow wiser.

Then he settles himself to a self-contemplation and to an analysis of his past deeds and motives; he feels that he does not need to hurry, for he has so much time; never had the like before—so much time in which to study this wonderful, and after all, this curious thing—SELF.

Everything around him is pleasing; the air is so clear, but the sense of life so keen—no effort to breathe at all. He does not feel the want of anything—no hunger, no thirst, no demand of any kind, but to study himself for awhile. As yet he has not come into the high rate of vibration he has been wont to gain when going to sleep at night, and he is retaining a strong and firm hold on the avenues of sensation and of memory, such as have affected the body through all his mortal years. So his self-examination goes on, and as far as he knows, he is alone, and his communings may have lasted for hours, when at length he raises his head with a lofty toss and says: "Whatever I have done that was not right, whatever I have failed to do that should have been done, I have tried not to injure my fellow beings. I have wanted to spread good cheer and sunshine, for if I could not give much financial help to the needy, I have wanted to make them happier. I have not been perfect, far from that, but I have tried to overcome my weaknesses. I have longed for knowledge, and my prayer has been for light. I must take myself now as I am, but strive to grow better every day and to be of more use to the world."

With this conclusion, he turns, and as he does so a flood of light breaks over him. A thrilling strain of music pours into his ears. He is uplifted above the old life and its vibrations. The world for him is illuminated, or rather, he is in another world. Everything seems familiar to him. The surroundings are by no means strange. He beholds men and women and young people who smile and pass around him. They know him, and he recognizes them. Here is a beautiful woman, whom, in spirit he has often seen. She is his mother. There is a man who was a scientist once, and is so now; another who was a college professor on earth and is a teacher now; and so on; innumerable friends flock around and give him welcome, and he realizes that at last he has come into his own heritage and to his own people. After awhile he discovers that his earth body was found in its room, and that it was pronounced "Dead from heart failure, caused by overwork and insufficient nourishment." But it had no sorrow for him. He was not dead, but intensely alive in every part of his being, and ready for work, for experience, for exploration, study, experiment and for sacrifice, if needs be, for the attainment of knowledge.

But his sacrifice had already been made; in its earth life and experience, the soul had endured that which had spiritually opened to him the kingdom of truth and knowledge, that would never be closed to him again. Soon he discovered that his bent of mind, study, training, that had commenced in the humble room of his earth body had prepared him for companionship with learned souls that he might gather power from them to reach other minds on earth endowed with inventive faculties, and stimulate them into action for the benefits of their fellow men.

Time passes. Our friend who was the daily toiler and nightly student of other years, is a student and searcher after truth still; but he has attained far greater knowledge than was his then, more of wisdom, grander mental and spiritual unfoldment. Why should he not, since he has had the advantages of all the expressed and acquired knowledge of the ages for his guidance and training? A worker in the spiritual, yet not neglectful of human needs on earth; an influential being long since, he sought out another student on earth whose proclivities and bent of mind were like his own, but mortal conditions for this later student were more favorable for the outgrowth of powers, mental and physical. This later student is an experimenter; he is a student of electrical force, and its application to human needs. He has invented devices of utility and comfort, and is engaged in greater works. The spirit man is not doing the work for his mortal protege, but he is stimulating the mental force of the mortal, is quickening the vibrations of brain by his subtle influence, and thus helping to illuminate the mind on those subjects and questions of importance to him and to the world. By and by, this mortal will invent wonderful instruments and appliances for human comfort and health that will be accounted the marvels of the age and cause people again to gasp in questioning amazement, "What next?"

What is Death? Did it bring aught but good to the earnest student, the lonely, sickly man in his garret? Was it not for him an emancipator from bondage, a revelator of light and truth? Did it not open to him vast fields of learning, of wisdom and of power, and is he not well repaid for all his past experience by the enrichment of his being, and by his opportunity to aid this modern worker in his researches and discoveries for the blessing of mankind?

In the great schools of spirit instruction and of experimentation, minds are trained—not crowded; they are stimulated to the expansion of their inherent qualities, wisely led to the unfoldment of the intuitive faculties that respond to the forces of the universe and absorb knowledge therefrom; are quickened in vibration to an understanding of law and of life's problems. All the students, all the thinkers, philosophers, scientists and workers of the ages are alive; they have gone forward to wider fields of experience, but they are not so engaged in further exploration of Life's mysteries that they give no attention to the needs and the ignorance of humanity; nay, they are busy for the race; they are inspirers, teachers, guides and helpers to multitudes who seek for understanding, for truth, and they have schools, colleges, temples of art, of literature, of science, of philosophy, of all brands of learning for the service of the eager souls who thirst for the light and knowledge that was denied them here.

Death to the progressive soul, is an arising; it is a glorious promotion; an uplifting to a higher grade of all good; a change of base to a grander and a better world; not one to be voluntarily sought, not one to be gained by suicide, for that step would defeat the desired end by enmeshing the spirit in the web of earthly conditions, but one to be graciously accepted when Nature works her will with the worn out body.

WHEN DEATH MAKES CHANGE

Wheh Death hath kissed my eyelids wan;
When gone are weariness and pain;
When you have come with loving hand,
And round me Rose and Lily lain,

Oh! weep not for the spirit flown;
I may stand near you by the bier;
Although unseen by you or known,
My hand may brush away your tear.

And when my dust's consigned to dust,
Rejoice that I from it am free,
For, 'tis God's will, and He is just,
He knows the body cumbered me.

Oh! do not let unkindness cling
To heart of yours, for deeds of mine,
But if I've done one worthy thing,
Near my cold brow one rose consign.

And I will see and understand,
And hover close each kindred heart.
Till God has wound a healing band
With time's own balm, aroud each smart.

And oft when you are bowed with care
I'll softly come and sit with you;
From aching brow I'll smoothe your hair
You'll know I'm there, though vailed from view.

And when my body's strangely still
Let these few words consolement give,
'Tis Nature's Law that I fulfill,
And unseen, near you, still I live.

There is in spring a sort of mental unrest, parallel with the impulse at work in nature. I always think there is something in me which I have not yet discovered. It leaves me to rest. There is not the least necessity in trying to prevent people from thinking. They are quite ready enough to be stupid or indifferent without any external inducements. Buried To-Day.

Buried to-day, the true and loving mother,
The heart that beat responsive to our own.
We start, we pause, we gaze at one another,
Then wondering, ask, Can she indeed be gone?
Vanished the gentle smile by which she won us
Ever to duty's path; and must we say,
Of all the love and truth she lavished on us,
We buried it to-day?

Buried to-day, the kind and generous neighbor,
Never forgetful of those counsels sweet
That comfort stricken ones, and with her labor
Smoothed the path for other tired feet;
Aiding through every dark and painful hour,
Soothing with soft and unobtrusive way,
And must we say of all this gentle power,
We buried it to-day?

Buried to-day, the noble-hearted woman,
Living by that high faith to angels given;
Blending in all her life the truly human
With something less of earth—far more of heaven,
Faithful and steadfast in her consecration
To duty, striving meekly to obey,
And can we say of this grand combination,
We buried it to-day?

Not so, not so. Though sorrowing and lonely,
We comprehend her pure and perfect peace;
We understand the life that served God only,
Looking to him alone for its release;
And when death's gentle summons to appear
Was as sweetly answered, let none say
Of such example, lofty, simple, tender,
We buried it to-day?

Not so, not so. When such a lovely story
As that of her sweet life appears,
It crowns all womanhood with gentle glory,
And when it fades there is no room for tears;
The good her life has wrought will perish never,
And though the worker may be laid away
To her last rest, the work remains forever,
Nor crumbles with the day.

Invocation.

Oh, thou Infinite Spirit, thou who dost inspire the grandest love, the most tender affection, the purest sympathy and noblest aspiration; thou who dost come close unto the hearts of humanity; thou who dost give them messages unto nature and it responds unto thee; thou hast spoken to the tired spirit and it responded and entered the rest sweeter than all the earthly understanding could imagine; indeed, the question is solved, the problem is demonstrated,—immortality is true; and those who have known and been known were never so well known or known so truly as to-day; for this knowledge we thank thee.

We thank thee that the hands so dear, clasped long years ago, reclasped; and the voice welcomed and the "come home" so sweet was understood; for this we are thankful, for the knowledge that the children were welcoming the parent so dear; for that knowledge comes to us as a benediction. But sweeter than all this, oh, thou Spirit of Truth, are we thankful to-day that the voice is not stilled in the spirit, that the form has not vanished in the spirit; but never so sweet and true as to-day when from that land from whence all travelers may and will return, cometh the loved one who has gone before us.

We hear the voices sweet in this hour
That come to us wilth tender power,
Speaking words of comfort and of tenderness
These loved ones here would truly bless;
Lead us and guide us this hour we pray,
Give us wisdom in the words we say;
Lift the curtain that hangs between
That which is of mortal and that unseen;
Lead us and guide us in all earth's weary way,
Teach us, oh, Thou Infinite Spirit, how to pray;
Bless those children she loved so well,
The dear ones who have been called to dwell
In the home not made with hands, not ending there;
Thou wilt keep and guard them with thy loving care;
Wilt thou bless the tears and bring smiles again,
Wilt thou comfort in this life of pain?
Wilt thou speak words so tender, so loving and sweet,
Bring peace and joy in their lives complete?
We ask thee, oh, Thou Infinite Life,
Keep open for these dear ones the portal white,
That they, too, may see and know
Where the gifts come from which they so beautifully bestow.
Death loses its sting and the grave its victory,
And the weary soul from mortal is free,
When we know this truth, and understand
Somewhat of that eternal summerland.
Give comfort and strength and joy and peace,
Thou Infinite Life wilt never cease;
Bring us nearer, nearer unto thee
In that realm of love and immortality;
Be our strength and our guide,
Our helper and our friend,
Now and forever. Amen!

Address.

So soon, so soon the call has come; and as we look upon the sweet and peaceful face we ask, O, Death, where is thy sting; O, Grave, thy victory, where life is full and complete. But it is not the outward expression, it is not the outward form, but that which animates, that which loves and inspires love.

We are not gathered here to-day to mourn the transition of a loved one, rather to bring back from that place of life a deeper benediction of love, a sweeter expression of the triumph of living, and to make it possible for the hearts of those who loved our friend to be comforted by the messages which the loved ones are giving.

Many years ago when the hand of the youth and maiden were clasped, and the words were spoken which made them one before the world, they were truly united, and to-day in death are not divided.

The hearts are strong in their love and in their clinging, and when one is taken and another left, there is a tugging at the heart-strings, an earnest watching, a tender waiting; and the home that is being prepared is not complete until shared by the ones that made home bright and beautiful. We sense this expression, and we hear its sweetness. Together with our loved ones we are waiting, watching and striving to make life more beautiful, richer and sweeter, because we are born into the kingdom of life which knows no death.

There are silent calls from the Infinite which nature responds to, but which our ears may not catch; and beyond the expression, the manifest evidence of nature to that call gives unto us knowledge of beauty of life and sweetness. We love our dear ones when in the body, and minister unto them according to our highest ideal, to our truest expression of love; but never are they so sweet unto us as when we list for their footsteps, or strive to catch the sound of their voices, and feel they have eluded our grasp and entered into the home of many mansions to dwell. While our tears are falling, while we miss the material presence, we would follow those loved ones and watch the sweet expression of joy and gladness upon their faces, and methinks we could almost catch the "peace, be still" that emanates from their lives.

While in these bodies we ofttimes yearn for loving expressions; but those dear ones who have gone from this home have never sought in vain, have never yearned longingly for those loving expressions and not found their souls gladdened because of them. Flowers were not withheld while the eyes could see and the hands clasp; loving words were not unspoken that brought records for kindness unsurpassed. But there should be peace in your souls; there should be joy in your hearts to-day, that you have strewn flowers along these pathways, and made heaven on earth where joy dwelled and love reigned supreme.

This knowledge of immortality to our loved sister was not faith and belief. She knew immortality was true; she knew her loved ones returned to her; she had heard from the companion, from the daughter, from the son, from the other loved ones, and it was like rain upon the parched earth. It gave comfort and joy and gladness.

So to-day we miss the form, but we love the dear one whom we shall meet again, and know as we have been known in the days that are past. There will come to every one in this home, to every one of kindred, such a sweet peace and comfort, such tender ministrations as shall cause the mists to clear away and bring forth such beautiful joy and gladness that the hearts will rejoice.

There comes to us a sweet thought for the aged mother who stands near that eternal home, that kingdom of life; there comes the sweet thought, and it is as blossoms of peace and love that reaches out and will bring comfort and strength. Oh! could we put in words to-day that which comes to us as an inspiration from the parents who are re-united, it would comfort your souls; it would bring joy and gladness in your lives, for there is no suffering, no unrest, no pain, but bright and beautiful are the faces that beam upon us in this hour.

This Spiritualism which means so much to humanity, demonstrates the truth of immortality; there is no doubt or question. We are not justified to live in a realm of faith and belief when we are commanded to know, when we are commanded to seek and find, to ask and receive, to knock that the door may be opened unto us; and when those divine revelations come, they come as a great sunburst of divine love, bringing the truth which gives serenity unto the souls of mortal.

We stand beside the casket which enshrouds that covering in which our dear one dwelt; we watch the face, but it does not brighten at our approach; we speak and the dear voice does not respond unto to our words, and the question comes, Where has our loved one gone? And as sweet as the sound of music from distant waters comes the words, "We live, we live; there is no death."

The curtains will be lifted and all will be revealed unto us at sometime. Our sister has answered the question, has gained wisdom, which you and I to-day have not knowledge of; but some sweet day in the by-and-bye, we, too, shall meet and greet and know that loved one, the dear ones who are in spirit and are re-united; our sympathies are centered upon the loved ones of earth. We would place our arms tenderly about them. We would comfort them with the counsels which are expressed by the voices of the parents, and though we are mourning for the sound of voices stilled, and the touch of vanished hands, yet it is simply the heart-cry of the human for the human, for we know it is well, it is well.

Blessed are they whose lives are sweet and beautiful, that the memories clustering about them and expressed in all ways to humanity are sweet; that the seeds which have been sown will be fruitful in their harvest, when the truths are manifested from the lives which are lived.

None knew her save to love her; none named her save in praise; beautiful heritage, beautiful record, and by her life her works are known. So to-day we are thankful that the life has been lived on earth, that the many years have been spared for the good that has been done.

This beautiful religion meant so much in her life. It touched the souls of her children and the dear one, as near as one born in her home and her heart; and some day the voice will speak with more than the olden sweetness,—the voice will speak with more than the olden wisdom, and it will answer many a question, and solve many a problem.

Could you follow us you would have seen the companion restless, unsettled, unsatisfied, his heart longing and yearning for her companionship, drawing her as the magnet draws the needle, until she felt, "My work is finished. I am ready to go. It will be well if we all can say, it is finished; not my will, but thine be done.

Oh! so sweet comes to us from that great beyond, life's sweetest lessons of immortality. We have sought to understand its meaning, its truth, its significance, its importance upon human lives. It will be most beautiful in the time to come when the child that is to-day unconscious of the presence of the angels, when it is conscious of being watched over, guarded and guided; it will then be sweet and beautiful to that child. Those who are waiting and watching for manifest evidence of it will truly be comforted.

Somehow there seems to be an added solemnity and sacredness in this hour. We are the richer to-day for the treasures that have been gathered into that home, that home not made with hands. Lives which were ripened, lives which were rich in their thought and in their deeds, lives which had radiated from their own personality until those with whom they were brought in contact felt the significance and the worth of the counsel or the thought.

Our modern Spiritualism to-day is the Religion of Life—not of death. We are not commanded to prepare to die, but to learn how to live and be strong, be true. Obey the new command and love one another, living the Golden Rule as well as it is possible for humanity to do, doing unto the other as we would the other was doing unto us, the Christ principle that brings humanity at onement one with another.

This eternal brotherhood, this spirituality which makes all the world our kindred, brings us nearer, O, God, to-day, nearer each instant of time. The veil has indeed been lifted, the curtain has been drawn, and we can see far off into that beautiful realm. There are flowers there that never drop their petals, show no sign of decay, for all is life, beautiful life. We list, and the music sounds on the vibrant air, dear as a message for the listening ear, a message of comfort, of encouragement, of truthfulness, of peace; and the body spiritual is made stronger as it comprehends its import. So we would understand spiritual things; the gifts of which we may be possessed of seeing or hearing or speaking is from that Infinite, and a sacred gift to be used for the benefit of humanity and the helpfulness of the spirit. We are spirit to-day as much as we will be when the mortal puts on immortality; and the spiritual body which has been formed by the lives we have lived, the deeds we have done, the garments we have spun and fashioned by our thoughts, brings us closer in touch to-day with this spiritual realm.

We feel like giving thanks to-day for this occasion and for the deep sympathy which is manifested to the sorrowing ones from friends and kindred; but we would bring ourselves in closer touch with those loved ones who have come from that land from which all travelers return; we could almost feel to-day to be thankful for that which is called death, for it brings life so plain to us; it brings life so near to us; it brings us a consciousness that what we loved was never so near, never so dear as when its mortal has become wholly immortal.

Sweet and clear as the sound of ringing bells
The voices of our loved ones the story tells
Of peace on earth, good will to all men.
It will ring in sweetest chimes again, and yet again,
We are not dead, but gone before,
Holding ajar the heavenly door;
Where we are, our loved ones will be—
In eternity an unbroken family,
The mother and the father in voice
Would bid these dear ones on earth rejoice;
Looking from mortal to spirit's sphere,
Casting from your heart every doubt and fear,
Bringing these so near, so near to each,
The sweetness of this immortal truth would teach
The dear ones, each and every one,
Whether in this or in other homes,
Will feel the baptism of the spirit then,
Never sighing for what might have been,
But understanding the richness of the treasures other there.
The bounteousness of their life each one will share,
I would that we might make it plain to all,
That you, too, might hear the dear ones call;
Come up higher to the spirit's sphere
And meet with us each one so dear;
We would touch your lips and clasp your hand
And point you indeed to the summer land,
Where there is no death, but life eternal,
Where all is beauty and life supernal;
When all that meets and greets each other there
The chaplet of love each brow will wear.

I hear the sound of the mother's voice; it is sweet, it is clear, it is tender, it is true. She touches each one with a hand that is not weak. She presses your lips. She speaks these words: "I am so satisfied, so satisfied. I have not one wish ungratified. The half had never been told. The beauty of this life so far transcends all anticipation, methinks I would have been restless and have wanted to come sooner had I understood. I want to tell my boys I appreciate their loving tenderness, their unselfishness, their love for us. I never have understood it so truly as now. I want to tell my daughters, and my grandchild. I want to tell my sisters and brothers. I want to tell my loved ones. Oh! If I could make this life so plain to you; if I could tell you all, you would not shed one tear or feel a regret. My life work has just begun. I have not gone from you. I am not dead, but I am out of the body of pain. I am where sorrows do not come. I have a mission, and it will be to bless my own. We are united in this home. My boy has grown to manhood, my daughter is fair, my husband's face is not seamed with care and age, and I, too, am taking on the form which in spirit was mine. I longed for a sight of the babe. It is dear to me. My eyes see it. I love it. It will be a comfort in the years to come. This message is to you. Study and find this truth, seek and find this knowledge; it means more to you than all faiths and beliefs."

There is a lesson in that which is called death. It brings us more closely in touch, one with the other. It makes life more sweet beyond, responsibilities so great. I would that all the world could understand. We had faiths and beliefs in the days that are gone. They are mists and shadows. They veil the brightness of all nature. We wear masks, unconsciously, while in the bodies, but this which is called death drops all, and we stand known and knowing as we are known, and when the mists have cleared away it is most beautiful to feel that we know and are known.

So we are gathered here, again we repeat, not to mourn, but to bid Godspeed to the newly-born spirit; to bring comfort and loving expressions unto those on earth, and to make the pathway of all sweeter, brighter and better with the knowledge that comes to us from the immortal side of life.

Scatter seeds of kindness each day and hour you live.
Make this earth beautiful, and all that in this world you give.
Give it willingly, tenderly, making each heart brighter here,
Drawing us nearer unto the land that will grow so very dear.

May the peace which passeth human understanding rest upon each one of you. May you understand that there is standing by your side some loved one. There is no one that has no vacant chair in their home. There is none to whom this Angel of Light has not come at some time. Your life is sweeter, richer, is better because of it.

Now from other sources we receive this thought. Immortality is true. This religion of life inspires one to do his best, live each day as though when the night shadows fall and the morning came, your eyes would be open in the kingdom of life, and you should meet the record you are making while here on earth; if that were done, life would not be full of regrets, but rather rejoice that we have done the best we could.

To our newly-born spirit, if there should be an epitaph carved upon the monument it will be "She did the best she could; she left humanity and made the world better because she lived in it." So may the angel world guard and guide you, each and every one, and lead you out of darkness spiritually into the light of immortality and truth; and whatever there is in the life we are living, may it inspire you unto grander and nobler actions, that you may meet your loved ones when you cross over the river and stand face to face with the record of the life you have lived.

Again the message comes to these dear ones: "I am not dead. All is well, all is well rings out in such gladsome tones, and I shall come to you, and you will know that I am with you. We are united, and sometime we will not be divided, each one of our loved ones in that home so beautiful."

Benediction.

Oh! thou who art Infinite, thou who dost understand human nature, wilt thou meet us with thy loving helpfulness. Bring us close together in lovingness, and lead us ever in happiness, in brightness and in spirit with our loved ones re-united, who have preceded us to the land of Life and Light, but not of Death or Shadow, be our inspiration, now and ever. Amen.

I Should Hate To.

I should hate to be so narrow and so little upward grown
As to think there is in heaven just a man upon the throne;
Though a tall one and a broad one, and a perfect man he be,
If he is no more than human he's not large enough for me.

I should hate to think beside him, with a patient, smiling face,
There could be no true companion to lend sweetness to the place,
To give dignity and comfort and smooth down the tyrant will
That is said to thirst for vengeance, and for human gore to spill.

I should hate to be so pigmied in my soul—and mind so small,
That I could not find a heaven that was large enough for all;
That I would not think my brother who was ever kind and true,
Would not fare as well as I would in a land beyond the blue.

I should hate to be so selfish as to think myself above
The great throng of struggling people, and beyond a common love.
I should hate to think my thinking was the only kind of thought,
And all other ways of thinking were a little less than naught.

I should hate to think that heaven was a place just for a few,
Who had picked out all the mansions and remodeled them all new;
For if need there be in future for a sweet and peaceful sphere,
It should be a home of pleasure for the poor one leaving here.

I should hate to meet a Jesus who but recognizes those Who are covered o'er with jewels that are gained by human woes;
I should hate to meet a father who was wrathful night and day,
And to whom for tender mercy I should always have to pray.

I should hate to be a puppet in this universe of DO,
And have nothing in the future but to rest and pray, in view;
For I want to keep on moving toward the higher heights above,
Where I know there must be something like Infinitude of Love.

There must be a sphere of knowledge, and a fountain filled for all,
Where this yearning, yearning ever is responding to a call;
There must always be spheres higher than this mortal life can reach,
And I'd hate to cease receiving what the higher minds may teach.

I must find the broadest heaven that this universe contains;
I must have the greatest freedom for expansion of these brains;
I must be without a limit for the soaring of my soul;
I must know no bounds to spirit in the Great Eternal Whole.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also relieves sore and granulated lids, iritis, etc., and removes cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over 75,000 "Actinas" have been sold, therefore the "Actina" treatment is not an experiment, but is reliable. The following letters are but samples of hundreds we receive:

J. J. Pepe, P. O. Box, No. 43, Mineral Wells, Texas, writes—"I have spent thousands of dollars on my eyes, consulted the best doctors in the United States, dropped medicine in my eyes for years and "Actina" is the only thing that has ever done me any good. Before using "Actina" I gave up all hope of ever being able to read again. Had not read a newspaper for seven years. Now I can read all day with little or no inconvenience."

Rev. Charles Carter, East Springfield, N. Y., writes:—I have made a severe test of "Actina" by casting aside my glasses and have not had them on since except to see what change had been wrought since the treatment began. My eyes gradually gained strength and power, and now my glasses are no longer necessary, for I see as well, if not better, without them. I recommend "Actina" to all my friends.

E. R. Holbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes:—"Actina has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial, postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342N, 811 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

A spirit through the mediumship of Mrs. Harriet A. Stockey, writes: "Brother W. F. Peck, in his communication, which appeared in a recent number of The Progressive Thinker, relative to the question of commercial mediumship, touched the key to the situation and awoke vibrations to which my heart gave quick response. When he asked, 'Shall these peculiar sensitives continue to be subjected to the vicious dog-eat-dog competitive system, which prevails in the commercial and industrial world, and which is the parent of the dishonesty, hypocrisy and sham which dominates and honeycombs business of every kind,' he demonstrated that he had penetrated to the underlying cause of the trouble, and when he farther stated that 'we must either reconcile ourselves to the continuation of fraud or change the system, which produces it,' he stated what seems to me a fact, which should be self-evident to every sane mind, and as to be reconciled to fraud is a feat impossible to human nature, the only alternative is change the system. A herculean task truly, but an unavoidable one, and looming large on to-day's horizon, compelling attention by the logic of events."

The picnic of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists, which was postpoued on account of the rain, will be at the same place, Neher's Summer Garden, on Saturday, August 29. This Church is an esteemed auxiliary of the Illinois State Association, and every other auxiliary should be represented, and will be welcomed by hearts full of harmony for all Spiritualists. If you wish a good time, take this basket meeting in. Remember the date—Saturday, August 30, from 12 o'clock, noon, to 11 in the evening."

The Golden Rule Society has secured the services of that venerable traveler and Spiritualist lecturer, Dr. J. M. Peebles, and will open at their former place—O'Donnell's Hall, 43 So. Paulina street, on Sunday, September 6, with a full and interesting program: The Doctor has made his 5th trip around the world, and visited all the most educative places along the spiritualistic lines, including Medium Bailey of Australia, and will recite in his splendid manner, all that is of importance regarding many wonderful manifestations to which he has been an eye-witness. Don't forget the date, and don't forget that the Doctor has been on the rostrum longer than any other speaker living, and if each hair of his head could speak, each would tell a different tale, for the experiences of our Grand Old Man have been so varied and so many. Be prepared to hear something good, for he carries "the goods" to show of these phenomena. This society, on its opening, will begin its services with something for the children, under the care of Dr. Burgess and others, at 1:30 p. m., following which will be a confcence, opened by Dr. Peebles, followed by all who wish to talk, and in the evening a rousing lecture, of course, may be expected.

Sons and Daughters will please attend and bring friends. An excellent supper is promised from 6:30 to 8 p. m."

R. W. Tennant, Secretary, writes: "The return of Mr. Mansell for two more weeks greatly pleased many of our patrons last Sunday evening. Josephine A. Bruer writes from Sterling, Kansas: "Your paper continues to grow in rich spiritual food that is feeding the hungry souls of the multitude."

Dr. Wm. Critchley writes from Lake Pleasant, Mass. "I don't see how you can continue to give us such a paper as The Progressive Thinker for $1.00 per year, but you do, and it grows better each number. I consider it the best and cheapest paper on Spiritualism in the field. You must love the cause to work as you do for the success which has attended The Progressive Thinker from its inception. Prof. W. F. Peck, one of the ablest lecturers on the Spiritualist rostrum to-day is now in California, attending the congress of Spiritualists. He will lecture throughout the state.

Mrs. Ruth McMenamin writes: "I intend to attend the National Convention of thistion of the N. S. A., to be tion of the G. A. R., held in Toledo, Ohio, the first week in September. I would like very much to come in touch with some true Spiritualists while there. I expect also to be in Chicago during the Months of September and October, and would be pleased to hear from some society that wishes a test medium. I would visit societies in close vicinity of Chicago. Reference given. Address until August 29, Mrs. Ruth McMenamin, 304 Bryant st., Buffalo, N. Y."

Alonzo Thompson writes from Denver, Col.: "I have been thinking sometime that I should write you what is transpiring in the spiritual field at Denver. Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes, formerly of Boston, has been with the Denver people for three years. She has been speaker for the Spiritualists' Church of Truth all this period. This lady combines good speaking talent, with fine psychic ability. Her discourses interest and instruct the people, and her clairvoyant delineations make converts to our Spiritual philosophy. She has been ably seconded and aided in this matter by the president, Wm. D. Block, who is true to his convictions. This church intends affiliating with the N. S. A. in the immediate future, as it fully appreciates now the importance of this step. This short notice is due to Mrs. Noyes, for her faithful, sisterly work here in our city."

Rev. G. C. Love of Lents, Oregon, writes: "For the fourth time your correspondent has been chosen as a delegate to the annual convention of the N. S. A., and I shall begin my journey eastward early in September, stopping on my way in Cove, Union, and Baker City in the eastern part of Oregon. I would be glad to hear from societies or individuals where no societies exist, if my services would be desirable, for lectures and messages. Early correspondence is desirable to the end that my route of travel can be arranged. Address me at Lents, Oregon, R. F. D. 1."

John W. Ring passed through the city last week on his way to his home in Shelbyville, Ind. He had been filling an engagement at Clinton camp. He brings an excellent report therefrom.

Ferd C. Suhrer writes: "According to the calendar, Saturday, Aug. 29, will be an ideal day for a picnic, and Nehr's grove at Lyons is certainly an ideal place for a picnic. Now for this day, make preparations to enjoy this combination of circumstances offered by the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists. We will have our record picnic on Saturday, the 29th, and it is not necessary that you be a member to be with us. Everyone is going and you will see someone there to welcome you. The roomy grounds are enclosed and covered with grass, while the large, shady trees afford ample protection from the sun while you eat lunch spread on one of the many convenient tables. The young-old folk can romp to their heart's delight with bare heads and minds free from care; while the old-young ones can go a-fishing or a-spooning down to the near by Desplaines river. Pack your basket with lunch for two, as there will be, as at every well conducted picnic, that peculiar specimen of humanity—the bachelor and bachelor maid(?)—thank you, who have no family affiliation (not affliction)—but sometimes enormous appetites, and without whose presence any picnic would be nil. They enjoy a dainty lunch, too, but are shy—shy on asking for something they might want, however badly, but whose sense of appreciation is very marked. Now, he sure you're right. Saturday, August 29, you transfer from Ogden Ave., car at end of line, take Lyons car and stay on until the car crosses the bridge over the Desplaines river—tell conductor you want Nehr's Grove and the car stops at entrance. 5 cents will take you each way. Hot coffee, sandwiches, ice cream., etc., etc., are served on the grounds. Don't forget the time and place, your basket, your friends—join the merry race. Put away your trouble—away back out of sight. Games and races for old and young will make you feel just right.

Dr. Burgess, President of the Chicago Spiritualist League, has returned from Lily Dale, where he was filling an engagement. He is loud in his praise of that favorite place of resort. His work made a favorable impression there, both as a test medium and healer.

The Rev. N. F. Ravlin, prominent as a lecturer in the ranks of Spiritualism, passed to spirit life a few days ago. He was a noble man, and will be greatly missed in California.

Mrs. M. J. McCoy writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "I am now making up my fall and winter engagements. Anyone wishing my services as lecturer and psychometric readings, individual readings from the sound of the voice, all from the platform, please write me as soon as possible. Address 2250 East 46th st., Cleveland, O."

Correspondent writes: "The Church of Progressive Spiritualists (colored), held the usual enthusiastic services, Sunday, Augut 23, but were put into a wave of sadness over the announcement by their Pastor, Rev. J. H. Demby at an early period in the services of his intention to depart from their midst soon, to take up the same work in Topeka, Kan. He will deliver his farewell sermon Sunday, September 6. This church with all the members and friends, will attend the picnic next Sunday, August 30, and all are anticipatin a good time. A farewell reception will be tendered Rev. Demby and his good wife, at the home of a member of the church, 2225 26th street, Wednesday evening, September 2, to which all are invited. Brother Demby takes with him the united love of his entire congregation, and their best wishes for his success in the new field of labor."

Reporter writes: "The services at 'Old Seventy-seven' 31st street, under the supervision of Mrs. Maggie Henry, is growing in number and interest. She devotes most of the time to message-giving by the mediums present, as well as herself, and virtually makes it a medium's meeting, which, of course attracts a goodly audience of fact-seekers. Much good is being done by this method, and good lecture talent is used when it is to be secured. 'Old Seventy-seven' seems to wear its old reputation, obtained through the services of the now world-renowned Georgia Gladys Cooley, who held forth there so long, and to the enlightenment of so many skeptics."

Mr. Letford, well known as the Drummer Medium, has made a favorable impression at all the camp meetings he has attended. As a commercial traveler he does an excellent work for Spiritualism.

Mrs. Hattie F. R. Peet, corresponding secretary, writes: "Members and fiends of the Band of Harmony do not forget the Summer Social, to be held at the home of Mrs. J. H. Hohrback, No 723 Chase avenue, Rogers Park, on Thursday afternoon and evening, August, 27. Ladies, please bring lunch, for themselves and friends; coffee served at 6 o'clock. Take Clark street car to car-barns; transfer to Evanston car; get off at Chase avenue; second door east. All cordially invited.

Sylvester Brown writes from Eustis, Florida: "We are situated seven mile east of the town of Eustis, in the heart of the Orange Belt, and thirty miles from Lake Helen, the Spiritualist camp. I would like to correspond with Spiritualists desiring homes in the sunny South."

Mrs. Ella Dare writes: "I am in earnest sympathy with your splendid effort in the work of mental liberation. The fair, just, and rational treatment of subjects, vital in their natnre and in their relations to human uplift, command admiration, and respect from all who work toward that end."

Mrs. Amy E. Cottam writes from New Castle, Pa.: "Sunday, Aug 9, members of the Progressive Truth Seekers' Spiritual church of this town enjoyed 'a day in the woods' in a grove about seven miles from the city known as Robinson's grove. There, with the rustling leaves for our music, the beautiful, blazing sun shining through the tree tops, and finally setting over the western hills furnishing our paintings, we were placed en rapport with our spirit friends, and the beautiful messages we received were as pure and true as the shade-kissed air we were breathing. Mrs. Marquette and Mr. Clifford Cottam were the message bearers. Our Ladies' Aid watched over our physical wants, and it goes without telling that we enjoyed two very excellent meals which they had prepared for all, and we thank them for their kind endeavors."

Mary L. Thomas, secretary, writes: "The Nebraska State Spiritualist Association opened this season's meetings Sunday, August 16 at Red Ribbon Hall. The lecturer and message bearer was the well known Alla A. McHenry. We are pleased with her work. Rev. D. D. Thomas, a local medium, gave good psychic demonstrations. Secretary James Campbell, opened the meeting by reading extracts from The Progressive Thinker. The meetings will continue Sunday evening at Red Ribbon Hall, 1034 O street. We hope the work of our society during the coming year may prove favorable for the cause of Spiritualism."

Mr. and Mrs. Bloom and Mrs. Hilbert, are still, at present writing, at Camp Chesterfield, Ind., having a good time of course. The rest and recuperation will do them a world of good, and fit them for a greater work in the coming fall and winter. They are all busybodies in the spiritualistic field and need the recuperation and rejuvination to be had by an outing at this pleasant camp.

THE TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY.

Important Communication From Secretary Kates.

Some requests having of late been received as to whether the Temple Fund Society is yet in existence, necessitates a brief notice from me as its president.

My duties as Secretary of the N. S. A. requires that all public soliciting done by me should be for the National Association.

But the Temple Fund is a national enterprise, and it is entirely in my duty to occasionally urge its claims. The intent is to accumulate a fund to encourage the erection of edifices by the societies of Spiritualists in the United States. The assistance is provided by a loan or donations. One thousand dollars must, however, be retained in the treasury unappropriated.

That first one thousand dollars is not yet secured. There should be at least one thousand Spiritualists who will pay one dollar annually for such purpose. With the annual accumulation by members, and some donations, and in good time some bequests, such fund should grow. At least a necessary Temple in the capital city of the nation, Washington, D. C., could in good time be secured.

The N. S. A. would secure the perpetuity of such an edifice, and would enjoy its benefits for offices, library, perhaps for publications and many practical purposes that the future indicates will be required. Edifices elsewhere could be assisted, and societies secure edifices without many dangers that now menace them.

Temple or meeting-place extension should be encouraged. A good fund will encourage better than waiting for some person of wealth to assist. That is the duty of all.

I will not now argue this important issue. My colleagues on the Temple Fund Board have not been very active this year, with the exception of Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, Secretary, whose address is Muncie, Ind. She has secured some progress for the fund, and will attend to any requests or give an official receipt for a donation or membership fee.

Our annual Convehtion of the N. S. A. is near at hand. I earnestly solicit Spiritualists at large to send in one dollar each for a membership and aid us to make a good report at the coming convention.

Fraternally,

SPIRITUALIST CREED GAINS FOLLOWERS.

Benjamin F. Austin Points Out the Strong Reasons for the Belief,—Bible Compared With It.—Illustrated Lecture on Mars to be Given Tomorrow.

Anderson, Ind., Aug. 16.—The largest audiences that have assembled at the auditorium this season greeted Benjamin F. Austin at the Spiritualist camp meeting at Chesterfield to-day. Many people who arrived at the camp grounds last night experienced difficulty in finding accommodations for the night and quite a number remained over night in this city. Mr. Austin is one of the most prominent lecturers on the Spiritualists' platform and is the author of a large number of books that have run through several editions. He was born in Canada, graduated from Albert college and entered the Methodist ministry in 1871. Ten years later he was granted the degree of Doctor of Divinity by Victoria college and was elected president of Alma college, St. Thomas, Ontario. In 1898 he preached a sermon in Toronto, Canada, which led to his trial for heresy, that attracted attention all over the country. Since that time he has devoted his time and talent to the exposition of Spiritualism.

Spiritualism Compared to Bible.

In his address this morning the speaker compared the tenets of modern Spiritualism with the orthodox teachings of the Bible followers. He asserted that the great central fact of all and every so-called Christian faith and religion was the "resurrection"—that intuition in every human soul that there is no real death, but only a transition. Spiritualism presents the most radical philosophy concerning life, death and the future life to be found in all the annals of time. It is the key to the interpretaetion of nature and the philosophy of all ages concerning religious faiths and creeds. The speaker said he was perhaps as closely related with the ministers of modern time as any man in public life, and he found a surprisingly large number dissatisfied with the old theological dogmas and creeds, and if positions were open to them there would be a great exodus from the ministerial ranks to the truths of Spiritualism.

The largest number of converts to-day, he said, are from the eminent scientists and intellectual thinkers of all nations. In Italy the scientific men have come over to Spiritualism, almost in a body. The truths of modern Spiritualism reveal a new world in which death has no place. There is no such thing as death, either in the material, intellectual or spiritual world; it is a hobgoblin of orthodoxy to frighten unthinking people into obedience to the teachings of dogmas and creeds. Life is the great principle revealed in nature which permeates and animates all existing material things. It presents the only rational interpretation of a supreme creator and brings all life into harmony and companionship. This great living force surrounds the atmosphere and makes possible the existence of the smallest unit of matter, as well as the existence of man, which is the highest development of creation on this earth.

Strong Points of Spiritualism.

Spiritualism recognizes the power and agency of thought and proclaims that all that exists of good or evil in the world is the product of thought. Spiritualism seeks to develop and control this powerful agency and develop a sympathy with the laws of nature whereby the whole world may be brought into harmony with the creative force. When this has indeed been accomplished the world will have been redeemed and peace and love will universally prevail. Every being through this revolutionary process will sometime, somehow and somewhere come into the full recognition of the pure estate and become freed from the thraldom of ignorance, which to-day causes so great misery on this plane of life.

The afternoon lecture was followed by seances in the auditorium, conducted by Mrs. Laura Jones of St. Louis, Mrs. Francis Ruddick of Indianapolis, and George Letford of Florida. The music was furnished by the Meadows Jubilee Singers of Indianapolis.

The evening entertainment consisted of colored stereopticon views, delineating the psychological forces of the human mind. The views indicating various passions were illustrated by showing the combinations of colors and vibrations producing various conditions of mind as effected by thought.

Lecture on Mars.

Tuesday night Mr. Austin will give a stereopticon lecture on the conditions of the planet Mars, showing the topography of the planet, the canals, cultivated fields, cities, modes of transportation and the plant life on the planet, as revealed by the telescope. The description of the inhabitants as given by Mrs. Weiss, who visited the planet while in a trance, will also be presented with the views.

The Helping Hand cottage is fulfilling its mission to the full extent. This is a new departure started this year, whereby invalids and sick children in the cities may enjoy an outing free of expense. Several are now enjoying this privilege. The camp was never in a more prosperous condition and will be able to discharge its indebtedness. Plans are being considered for a large summer hotel and a water system for the grounds.—Muncie (Ind.) Star.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Oregon Spiritualists Are Requested to Take Notice.

The regular annual convention of the Oregon State Spiritualists' Association will be held in Portland, Oregon, Sept. 5 and 6, probably in Women of Woodcrafts hall, corner Tenth and Taylor streets. It will be arranged for, and conducted by John E. Trigg and Harry Yanckwich as attorneys-in-fact for the N. S. A., appointed by President Warne, and confirmed by the Executive Committee, to do this special work. Eight of the nine members of the Board of Trustees of the State Association were found to have no legal title to their respective offices, and he rules accordingly. His ruling was defied by one of the eight, who is seeking personal preferment, rather than the good of Spiritualism.

All Spiritualists in Oregon are hereby notified that no call for a convention, other than the one issued by Messrs. Trigg and Yanckwich is legal, and it is the only one that has the sanction of the N. S. A. All credentials, per capita dues, reports, etc., should be sent to Harry Yanckwich or John E. Trigg, room 425, Worcester building, Portland, Oregon. Reports must be in their hands by Aug. 27. Oregon brethren, take due notice! Recognize only the Triggs-Yankwich convention, and be on hand to help make it a success. This is the time to show your colors! Come out and sustain true Spiritualism.

SPIRITUAL SONG BOOK.

Important Notice to All Friends and Lovers of Music.

To the Editor:—As chairman of the committee appointed by the N. S. A. to prepare a Spiritual Song Book, I desire to have friends and lovers of music send to me any hymns and songs suitable for use in Spiritual Services, with music; and all music with copyright should be accompanied by permit of the author. Send in music and poems so that we may have as large a collection as possible to select from. We are especially anxious to have good, lively songs for the Lyceum and minor classes.

All lovers of the Lyceum and children, now is your time to work; take a deep interest to look up music for the little ones; all children are lovers of music, for it surely is a great help to build up the Lyceum and a great help to ingraft good spiritual fruit in their little minds. Lively music will help them to receive instruction more firmly, and if you have poems written for lively music, they must be written so that the dash and swing can be set in with harmony, this is what is wanted in poems.

All take notice, the children must take our places when we are gone beyond; do what you can in this line, the good work cannot be lost.

All musical composers that wish to contribute good Spiritual songs, send in at once, and all that can, compose the soprano, the other part can be adjusted here.

I am happy that I can report substantial progress in this work, some of the finest music and poems that I ever saw came in from the Seance Rooms, some through mediums, given by angels, from different states in our Union, from the Pacific Ocean to the Atlantic Ocean and from North and South.

Now is the time to do good work for humanity, for this and the Angel world. They tell us those songs will be sung by the millions. Let us all work together for the good.

SOLOMON DILL.
Centerville, Mich.

Vicksburg, Mich., Camp.

Camp closed on Sunday, Aug. 16.

On the third Sunday Dr. Austin, pastor of the Spiritual Church of Rochester, N. Y., and editor of Reason, gave a grand discourse upon the theme, "Our Soul Powers and How to Unfold Them.

All were disappointed at not hearing Mr. Barrett, who was unavoidably detained in the West. His time was filled by Mrs. M. C. Lincoln, of Buffalo, N. Y., and Dr. Austin.

On Sunday morning Mrs. Lincoln chose as the subject of her eloquent and instructive discourse, "The Religion of the All-Inclusive."

The discourse appealed strongly to those who are reaching out for the highest and best within their grasp. Many expressed themselves as having received great help from it.

Mrs. Susie R. Thompson, of Chicago, was the message bearer for the last week. Her messages were accurate and clear, and gave general satisfaction.

The camp was favored with numerous solos by Miss Maude Lincoln, of Buffalo. She has a peculiarly sweet voice of great volume.

The last few days we were both entertained and instructed by the inspiration of Miss Elizabeth Harlow, the gifted speaker, who is loved by all who are fortunate enough to hear her.

On Thursday she gave a masterful discourse upon "The Religion of Infidelity, the Savior of Man." One whose life is attuned to a higher keynote than the masses lights the firelamps of life and becomes the forerunner of a new religious concept. He is branded as an infidel until the people grow to a recognition of the truths he teaches. Confucius was an infidel; Jesus was an infidel.

On Sunday Miss Harlow closed the camp with two forceful addresses, trying to arouse the people to thought and action upon the needs of the hour.

The campers have gone away, entertaining bright anticipations for next year. LOELLA BROOKS.

OBITUARIES.

Obituary notices will be published free to the extent of forty words. Any further addition at the rate of ten cents per line, seven words to the line.

James G. Williams passed to spirit life at Harvey, Ill., at the age of 77. He was well prepared for the change, for he knew of the grand truths of Spiritualism, and was well versed in the same. The body was taken to his old home, Saugatuck, Mich. The Brother had been a very prominent member in the F. & A. M. for many years. The Saugatuck lodge took charge of the funeral..

Passed to spirit life at Wadsworth, Ohio, August 9, 1908, Samuel Webster Hard, aged 77. He was ready and willing to go, telling his loved ones not to mourn, that it would only be a little while when they would all meet in the other side. He died without an enemy, and at peace with the world. ARTHUR HARD.

Passed to Higher Life.

On Aug. 11, at his home in Winfield, Kansas, L. D. Eastman, better known as "Grandpa Eastman," laid aside the burden of earth life, vacated his house of clay, and returned to his home in the eternal world, where a son and daughter with other loved immortals awaited him. He had journeyed on this earth plane for eighty-four years and lived nobly each day.

For sixty-two years his faithful and loving wife, walked with him through the sunshine and shadow of earthly experience. He was a life-long Spiritualist, and an enthusiastic toiler in the field of spiritual truth.

They mourn his absence in the physical, but rejoice in the knowledge that death is but the open doorway to a grander, sweeter life.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

R. Halferty:—Q.—If Joseph Smith was not honest, and did not have a revelation, how explain his writing a history of the ancient peoples of America, which has since been verified by discoveries of scientists?

A.—So far from the "revelations" of Smith, made in the Book of Mormon, being confirmed by scientists, there is nothing in the book that can be proved or disproved, in this respect being just like any work of fiction. Its origin has been so perfectly explained, and even the "witnesses" testified to its false pretensions, that it is an idle waste of time to argue the matter.

It is a mistake that any scientist, or any man of understanding has confirmed the statements made in the Book of Mormon. There never was any "ten lost tribes," their existence is a myth, and the Indian races are about as direct descendents from the Israelites as they are of the Hottentots.

Joseph Smith was not a "medium," as some Spiritualists claim, but an ignorant, uncouth man, of low cunning, in the hands of a rascal. The history of the inception and promulgation of the Book is clear and certain as of any event in the past hundred years and does not admit of successful opposing argument.

Old Soldier:—Q.—Can anything like an accurate estimate be given of the number of UNKNOWN soldiers who died in the interstate war? I have seen a statement that it was 50,000.

A.—General Delevan Bates, of Aurora, Neb., with a generosity and tenderness of feeling for his old comrades in arms worthy of all praise, has erected in his own beautiful city, a monument "to the unknown soldier dead in our civil war." With careful exactness he came to the conclusion that the number was 146,000. The monument is most beautiful and artistic, the base being surmounted by an angel of exquisite design. On the base is written: "For what he was and all he dared, remember him today."

"No dear one was nigh him
To close his mild blue eyes,
And no gentle one was with him
To give him sweet replies.
No stone marks the lowly sod
O'er the lad so brave and true,
In his lowly grave he sleeps
In his faded coat of blue."

The record of General Bates as a soldier in those days which tried the courage of bravest men, is one of unshrinking bravery and noble patriotism, but this kindly service to the unknown, and unrecorded dead calls for most generous and deserved praise. It is the response of a fraternal spirit, in a measure so unalloyed and magnanimous, that our praise is mingled with tears of joy, that there is at least one man in the world with such high purpose.

All the veterans are aged—aged beyond their years—for in war life runs fast, and the strain and hardship tells on the vital power, but General Estes retains his vigorous mind, and his fraternal feeling, and has spiritualized his life, preparatory to entering the new. We doubt if any one not imbued with the nobility of purpose taught by a belief in the continuity of life into the spirit world, would have thought of, and erected this beautiful monument to those who were deprived of even the poor record for their lives' sacrifice of having their names enrolled with the dead.

Harvey Brown:—Q.—A few weeks ago the pastor of the M. E. church in Delray, O., was charged with undue familiarity with two female members of his flock, but nothing criminal Then up sprang another sister and added her testimony. The flock was thrown into holy horror. The pastor admitted smoothing the raven locks of one sister and threatening to kiss another which failed to materialize. He was promptly forbidden to preach, and he donned overalls and went to the harvest field. Why are there so many similar cases of pastors "going wrong?"

M. L. Shelden:—Q.—Why should a religion of love yield cases like the one described in the enclosed clipping?

A.—The clipping is of an awful result of a religious revival. Mr. H. J. Dufty, 60 years old, of Los Angeles, Cal., attended a revival, became excited by the awful doctrines of the evangelist. He was suddenly seized with a desire to make a sacrifice of his family—those he loved best.

Securing a sharp bladed axe he stealthily entered the bedroom of his son while the latter lay asleep. He crept close to the side of the bed and raising the weapon aloft brought it down with terrific force across the neck of his son. The blow was delivered with such tremendous force that the head of the victim was severed completely from the body.

With a maniacal shout Dufty rushed from the house and down the street, waving his bloody weapon. Reaching the house at 461 Northwest Lake avenue, where his wife and daughter resided, he opened the front door and entered. Mrs. Ada Lacomb, the daughter, with her mother, was in a rear room. He waited here for some time while the women were preparing breakfast. Suddenly, when Mrs. Lacomb's back was turned, he made the attack. Without a word of warning he swung the axe high in the air and cleft his daughter's skull. Her whole head was crushed in from the blow.

Mrs. Dufty fled through a rear door, closely pursued by the maniac striking at her with the axe. The woman succeeded in eluding him, but not before she had received a severe gash on the elbow from the axe swung by Dufty as he chased her. Mrs. Dufty's cries finally attracted the attention of neighbors, who came to her aid.

Dufty then walked to the street, where he drew a razor from his pocket and slashed his own throat, inflicting frightful injuries, but he will recover.

I place these questions together, for they present two of the most common phases of religious excitement—one of erotic excitement, the other with a craze for sacrifice of those nearest, or of self. After listening to the lurid discourses of revivalists, full of hell-fire and reeking with "the blood of Christ," and his sacrifice; after illustrations of the patriarch binding his own son on the altar, and making ready to slay him for his God, after the horrible salvation scheme and finale of the sinned, and all are sinners, depressed beyond hope except by miracle, is it strange the tortured mind breaks in despair, and the husband and father rushes home to save himself by sacrificing his daughter, as did Jepthah his wife, and then himself as atonement? The God whose garments are gory with the blood of nations; who stopped the sun and moon in their courses, that the savage Israelites might carry on the carnival of butchery, and desecration; the God who found the only way to save the world was the atoning blood of his son, must be pleased with such an outburst of passion so parallel with his own character.

The explanation of this effect of religious excitement, is not far to seek. The faculties through which so-called religions is manifested are in the base of the brain, in close proximity with the whole group of appetites, desires and passions. When inflamed, that is, excited until there is congestion, the whole base brain is involved. Religion as understood is purely passional. The language of the pulpit is erotic. Christ is a lover; his breast is to be sought; his enfolding arms; his blood, and pain is coveted as a neutralizer of desire. The church is master and spouse. When this region is excited, all the surrounding passions are involved. The higher brain region is depleted of blood drawn in another direction. The mind is unbalanced, and reason dethroned. The victim is impelled in his passional or bloody course by the activity of his lower brain.

NUGGETS.

Speak the Truth.

There is a saying grim and old,
That truth, at times, should not be told;
The funny question now will rise
In the meantime, shall we tell lies?

Trusts.

"Without a body to kick, or a soul to damn,"
But a pouch immense for stocks to cram,
They drive small dealers, East and West,
They swallow some, and starve the rest.

The Parson.

The parson, thinks, beyond a doubt,
That he's a Christian, in and out,
To follow Jesus is his mind,
But oft he's tired and lags behind.

The Doctor.

The doctor uses all his skill,
To cure his patients when they're ill,
And if he fails he isn't worried,
Because the proof will soon be buried.

DEAN CLARKE.

HUMANITY'S NEEDS.

We want no fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Immanuel veins;
We want pure, honest, upright men,
Men free from guilty stains.

We want no dying thief to see
A fountain filled with gore;
We want men that do right because
It's right, and nothing more.

We want no "Precious Lamb of God"
For us to e'er be slain;
We want no heaven, if we must wade
To it through bloody stain.

E'er since the gospel was first preached,
Of the atoning blood,
To some it's been a stumbling-block
That's done more harm than good.

Then lay the ensign of the past
Forever in the grave;
And let some other banner float
That has the power to save.

'Twill be the emblem of true love;
May it forever be
A beacon light to guide mankind
Through all eternity.

"The Arcana of Spiritualism." By Hudson Tuttle. Price $1.25.

Lily Dale N. Y. Camp.

Scientific Spiritualism has been the key-note of Lily Dale Assembly so far and is likely to continue to the end. The management being represented by practical business men and intellectual women realize that the cult can stand on no other foundation. Sensational and questionable manifestations are discouraged. Quality rather than quantity is the order of the phenomena encouraged among the mediums on the ground. The bitter lessons of the past of having tricksters who posed as mediums exposed by outsiders, has brought good results, and as one of the leaders declared, "We have learned to do our own house-cleaning."

Following is the newly elected board of managers for the season of 1909:

Mrs. Geo. L. Humphrey, president; Mrs. Jean L. Reed, secretary; H. W. Richardson, vice-president; Dr. Geo. B. Warne, treasurer; Trustees: J. W. Stearns, Benjamin Luce, Lee Morse, Jean L. Reed, inclusive with the executive.

Receipts this year so far have equaled expenditures, notwithstanding the stringency of the times, from which all summer resorts are suffering.

The spirit of old Lily Dale, stimulated as mediums declared by Indians that had once roamed over these premises, broke loose in a corn roast the other night, which brought about two hundred of the hilariously inclined.

Surrounding an immense bonfire, armed with long wooden spears, the crowd looked dangerous until each one had stabbed an ear of corn. Mediums pointed out invisible Indians threading their way among the palefaces, who occasionally gave vent to well-constructed war-whoops, as the blaze turned brown the succulent ears. It was a lively scene, but at last the cheerful corn-fed crowd dispersed.

The Passion-Play was given Sunday night to a large audience. A new Sacred solo, written by Mrs. Mattie M'Caslin, entitled "Song of the Passion," was sung for the first time as an introduction to it. The singer was Mrs. Caroline Foote Marsh of Brooklyn, N. Y. She has a magnificent voice ts well as an exalted pedigree. She is a third-degree granddaughter of Jonathan Edwards, and Benjamin Franklin was her ancestral uncle.

THE PRINCE IMMORTAL.

SONG OF THE PASSION.

(Words written by Mattie McCaslin. Music by Frederick R. Moseley.)

First—Nativity.

I saw as in a dream,
Beneath the moonlight's gleam,
Judean shepherds with their peaceful flocks by night;
And there appears to them
The Star of Bethlehem,
While angel hosts descend from Heaven in glowing light;
And singing "Peace on Earth,"
Anounce the glorious birth,
"Good news to men proclaim,
Forever in His name;
Let Heaven and Earth with loud hosannahs ring!"

Chorus:—
"Hail Him at Heaven's portal,"
I hear the angel's sing!
"Hail to the Prince Immortal,
Let the earth with its echoes ring!
Hosannah, Savior, glorious,
Hosannah be to Thee!
O'er sin and death victorious
Through all eternity."

Second—The Crucifixion.

The babe to manhood grown,
Takes on himself alone
The burdens of its needs, that he a world might win.
And deems it not a loss
To suffer on the cross,
That all mankind through LOVE, might be redeemed from sin.
Hark! hark! the thunders blent!
The Temple's veil is rent;
The lightning flashes and the dead arise!
The mighty deed is done,
The victory is won,
And silence reigns throughout the earth and skies.

Third—Resurrection.

Once more I see him now,
With glory round his brow;
He blesses all the faithful who surround him still.
Arisen from the tomb,
Triumphant o'er death's gloom,
All Nature meekly bows to LOVE'S majestic will.

Behold! behold Him rise,
With angels through the skies,
The Prince Immortal, Love, the Savior blest!
From out the Mercy seat
Now comes in accents sweet:
"Come unto me and I will give you rest."

This sacred solo and chorus, set to beautiful music, artistically arranged, for sale by the author, MRS. M. Mc CASLIN, Ph.D., 3411 Missouri Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

It seemed strange that the death of Ira Sankey should occur while Taber Thompson, the singing evangelist, once so prominently identified with Mr. Sankey, should be filling the rostrum here at a Spiritualist Camp. "The world do move." The writer was for years a neighbor, Sunday-school and singing-school associate of the famous Sankey, who now, from years of blindness at last sees the light—a higher light, may we hope.

We spoke of Mr. Thompson's conversion to Spiritualism in a former article, but would add that in coming to our ranks he first held independent meetings in Casino Hall, Philadelphia. The first Association of Spiritualists soon sought him and induced him to become their leader and speaker. During the year and a half he has served them, a large and intelligent congregation has waited on his ministry, $1,000 has been raised to beautify the Temple, money which had been owing the N. S. A. for more than ten years has been paid back, and he is engaged for another year. His lectures given in Lily Dale were from the subjects "A Man and His Vision," and "The Old Fisherman of Galilee."

Pennsylvania Day.

At 3:30 p. m., on August 17th, the Pensylvania Spiritualists held their State Rally. A large number of Keystone folks were in attendance, the programme was well received. Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader of Philadelphia was in the chair. The addresses were listened to most attentively, and a large proportion of the Pennsylvanians who were not affiliated applied for membership in the State Spiritualist Association.

A very pleasant feature was the rendering of a song, "Pennsylvania," by Chairman John A. Lillie, which was written for the occasion by Owen A. Ward, who has been affectionately spoken of as the father of the P. S. A., and as secretary, still continues to father it.

President's Report for 1908.

Once more you are assembled in annual meeting as provided by the By-Laws of the Assembly. Here must be formulated in some degree the policies of this Association for the ensuing year, and a Board of Trustees chosen to whom you will entrust their execution. While strangers have been unanimous in their praise of the beauty and future possibilities of Lily Dale, former visitors have complimented without stint the attractive appearance of our grounds this year.

In view of the enforced economy made necessary for many people by the lessened tide of business prosperity, you should rejoice that the financial struggle which involved the perpetuity of the Assembly's existence, was fought and won in 1906 and 1907, before the uncertainties of a Presidential year were upon us; or the tide of financial prosperity was at a temporary ebb.

Lessened attendance is the common report from all Spiritualist Camps for this season, while it is also the experience of our neighbor Chautauqua Assembly, and your officers have been informed that business is unusually poor at Coney Island, New York City's amusement resort. Our 1908 camp has enjoyed an unusual degree of harmony and we have good reason for believing that its actual current expenses will be covered by the receipts.

It is important that our laws should explicitly cover the power of the Board of Trustees to bar from the camp all who practice trickery in the name of mediumship. I therefore submit for your consideration the following amendment to our By-laws, suggesting that it be enacted as an addition to paragraph 3, article 13, thereof:

No person or persons shall exercise or pretend to exercise for profit on the grounds of the Assembly, any phase of mediumship unless such person or persons shall have submitted to an examination, when required to do so, and shall have satisfied the Board of Trustees as to his, her or their competency and proficiency therein.

Any person acting contrary to this inhibition shall be deemed a disorderly person and may be excluded or ejected from the grounds.

The Board of Trustees may formulate general or special rules to govern such examinations. Such rules shall be fair and reasonable, while precluding as far as possible, all mistake or deception. Every person submitting to examinations shall have at least three distinct opportunities to prove the genuineness of each phase of mediumship.

I submit for your consideration the annual report of the Treasurer.

I feel our warmest thanks are due to the permanent residents upon our Camp ground for the practical activity which enabled them to turn into our general fund from dances given between the seasons of 1907 and 1908, the sum of $116 as net proceeds from the same.

Since her retirement from our In lowly manger of the Prince, the King!

Official Board, Mrs. Lana G. Fixen has voluntarily enriched our treasury by donations amounting to 114, being the proceeds of a plan originated and executed by her fertile brain for our benefit.

Our Ladies' Auxiliary Society has proven its unswerving loyalty by presenting us already as partial proceeds of their present endeavors $226. The Board of Directors has leased to the devoted band of workers, the rooms upon the first and second floors of the west side of the old Sunflower building at the nominal sum of One Dollar annually for the term of ten years, with the privilege, if mutually agreeable, of extending its life to twenty-five years. They ask that their contributions this year be applied to meeting the purchase-price of said building, together with the repairs thereon. All honor and credit to their untiring efforts.

In closing, I wish to voice my sense of personal obligation to my fellow-trustees for every word of counsel and act of co-operation upon their part. I have been strong many times in their strength. I have given uncounted hours by day and night to the business of the Assembly, and plans for its success. Social and even family duties have sometimes had to be neglected, while personal pleasures have been wholly ignored. I have endeavored to do my best. I am not surprised to receive criticisms, at times, for I have not been able to wholly satisfy myself. Thanking each and all of you for every word of kindly appreciation and every sustaining act, I am fraternally yeors,

ESTHER C. HUMPHREY, Pres.

The report of George B. Warne, Treasurer, was announced one of the most complete in the history of the Assembly. It gladdened the hearts of all stockholders by reporting a handsome cash balance on hand, and gave assurance that all expenses for the 1908 camp would be fully covered by the current receipts. The Treasurer's recommendation that no attempt be made for the present to reduce the Corporation's present Capital Stock was overwhelmingly concurred in after one or two animated tilts.

Another act in the weekly drama at Lily Dale has brought a new set of actors before the footlights while at the same time several of the old reliable "first nighters" remain with us till the ringing down of the curtain Aug. 30, which is rapidly approaching. Like Parsifal the play goes on with no sign of weariness on the actors' parts even though the audience have to stop for meals.

We hated to give up the Spragues, but they were needed elsewhere. Mrs. Sprague, like good wine, improves with age, and E. W. is as full of life and vim as ever. We are sorry space will not permit an extended report of their work here.

Mrs. Ursula Gestefeld was the guest of Lily Dale for two lectures, during which she flirted outrageously with Spiritualism, while still clinging to the hand of her old lover, New Thought. A little longer she may be satisfied with mere optimism, being a leader of her cult, but investigation now begun will bring evidence that she is too honest to repudiate.

Mrs. Caroline Foote Marsh is another gifted New Thought leader, who followed by Mrs. Gestefeld as speaker. A beautiful finale to her spiritual address on New Thought was Mrs. Lillie leading her to the front and declaring her conversion to Spiritualism. Mrs. Foote is quite an acquisition, having a magnificent soprano voice as a singer and a pleasing personality as a speaker.

The Passion Play in moving pictures given Sunday night drew a large audience, notwithstanding the fact that the Smith family reunion given Friday night seemed to have captured Lily Dale and a good part of Dunkirk on the stage and in the audience. Between six and seven hundred tickets are reported sold and the returns are not all in yet. A bright little curly-haired boy of the Lyceum sold fifty.

The "Smiths" all distinguished themselves, besides which there were fairies, elfins, brownies, The Strollers, a double quartette, a beautiful scarf drill by young ladies of Dunkirk, A gay German dance and song chorus, led by little Loraine Fisher of Buffalo; a reading by Miss Oats, and song by Miss Delong completed an elaborate program.

A permanent Esperanto club has been organized at Lily Dale. President, W. F. Keeler; vice-president, Lee Morse; secretary, Mrs. Dr. Hyde. There is a charter membership of about twenty, but the charter will remain open until the end of the year, and the class will continue to meet at the hospitable home known as the Hyde cottage, which has opened its doors to all the overflow meetings of the season.

Dear old Brother Lyman C. Howe has visited the camp with his good wife several times and given addresses. Laura G. Fixen, once so prominently connected with Lily Dale, was the speaker Sunday, and acquitted herself with her usual brilliancy. Rev. Thomas Grimshaw has given two of his remarkable trance lectures, and is still with us. Dr. Lockwood and Mrs. Lillie continue their scientific class lectures.

To-day R. A. Macurda was test medium as well as message medium. The names, dates, descriptions and incidents identified came rapidly and accurately from his lips.

P. L. O. A. Keeler gave a physical manifestation seance benefit to the Association which was largely attended and most convincing of active invisible intelligences.

MATTIE McCASLIN.

Mount Pleasant Park Camp, Iowa.

Saturday, August 15, wes "Clinton Day" at Mount Pleasant Camp. The program for the day was planned and carried out under the auspices of the Clinton Society of Spiritualists. The auditorium and pavilion, decorated with flowers and vines, were bowers of beauty. The weather conditions however, were unfavorable, but the audience was pronounced among the largest of the season, up to date.

The exercises of the day began at the auditorium at 2 p. m., with excellent vocal and violin solos, after which President Kilby introduced our own President and Speaker, Mrs. Alice C. Barry.

Mrs. Barry gave a hearty invitation to everybody within sight and hearing to become guests for the day, and then introduced Dr. Ireland of Tampa, Florida, who gave a short but stirring address, expressing thoughts of sympathy, good cheer and helpfulness to our society, and to Mrs. Barry, especially, in her efforts to bring the great truths of Spiritualism to the knowledge of the people.

Mrs. Barry followed with a short address in her own inimitable way, saying in part, "Spiritualism is the perfect circle, the chain without a broken link. It holds all things within its grasp, from the tiny atom to the highest archangel. It has given an answer to the most stupendous question of the ages, 'What of the Dead?' It has given us glimpses into our immortal abodes, peopled with the loved ones gone before, and the practical application of its principles to the lives of men and women will some day make of this old earth a paradise.

"Spiritualism is the most practical system of ethics that has ever been given to the world. Other systems have taught men how to die rather than how to live; how to look for glory hereafter instead of looking for and enjoying the glory of life here and now.

"Spiritualism has discovered and proclaimed to the world that the theological teachings of the past have been mostly a patchwork of guessing and fabrication.

"The world is asking of Spiritualism, 'What it has done for humanity? Where are its almshouses, its jails, its insane asylums? Where are its temples and its shrines?'

"We would answer, Spiritualism did not come to the world to build almshouses, jails or asylums, but to teach the world how to get along without them. Its temples and its shrines are set up in the warm corridors of the pulsing hearts of humanity.

"It comes as a message to the little child, a problem to the learned philosopher, a solace to the bereaved of every clime.

"It goes into the coal mines and kindles a spark of light in the souls of those grimy workers in the dark chambers of the earth. It whispers its message of hope to slaves of the sweatshops, to the fallen men and women of the streets. It sounds a note of warning to those in high places who would crush their weaker brothers in the dust, and its white banner shall float in the breeze until every soul is illuminated and the toiling millions are forever free."

At 4 o'clock a message service was given in the pavilion by Max Hoffman and Mrs. Barry.

8 p. m. saw a large gathering to enjoy an entertainment by the Pumpkinville Club, which was pronounced by many visitors the most enjoyable of the season.

The Clinton Society extends to the Mississippi Valley Association the right hand of fellowship and a desire to work in harmony with all the forces that are for the building up of this grand work.

This sacred spot, dedicated to Spiritualism, is still flourishing. Great interest is being manifested daily, and many hearts are made happy by the loved ones from the other side, who come with words of love and cheer.

We have had with us Mrs. D. A. Morrill. She is an excellent speaker, and charms her hearers. Her lecture on Mediums was fine, and shows her to be a true friend to them. What would we do without them—the way that leads us over the darkness of this life and makes our homes a heaven, and life worth living, cheering the sorrowing ones of earth with messages from those we felt were gone, never to return. The philosophy is beautiful, but the phenomena are the ideal, the real. Without it we have nothing whatever to base our religion on.

We have with us this week Oscar A. Edgerly, and his first sermon, "A Spirit's Experience on Entering Spirit Life," was fine and should be an incentive to all to live right. We are loath to part with him and his coworker, George A. Letford, who follows Mr. Edgerly with most beautiful messages from the spirit side of life.

The interest he took in the Lyceum, the donation he made them to provide for their amusement, showed him to be a friend of children, and both men have left a warm spot in each heart at Camp.

Everything goes on smoothly, and last week we had an added attraction to the camp, the Bangs Sisters of Chicago.

There are many mediums here; two I believe, materializing. Our trumpet mediums are: Mrs. Thronsden, Mrs. Mann, Mrs. Pucket, Mrs. Vestal, Mrs Ruddick, Mr. Jessup, Mr. Pierce and Mr. French. Clairvoyents are Mrs. Thronsden, Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. Woolsey, and a few others I do not know. Mrs. Carpenter and Alexander are among our best trumpet and materializing mediums; also Mr. Hinderer.

This coming Saturday evening the Lyceum gives a colored wedding and Christmas festivities in the auditorium, your humble servant acting as "de preacheh." We hope to realize well for our Lyceum.

Next week we have with us Mr. Austin. He needs no words of praise. He is known from shore to shore, and is loved for his kindly ways.

Mr. Camel has charge of our ice cream parlors, and gives us the best of service. The camp life is slowly creeping to its close, and may each one go home feeling they have done some human soul, seeking comfort, good, that they have strewn the path of many with beautiful flowers of love and kindness. In spiritual work we should be honest, leave the thought of self out of our lives; live to do some good deed daily, and above all be able to control our temper so we may deal justly with all.

A HOPEFUL VIEW.

There is Good in Every Person, and That Should Be Cultivated.

I believe there is good in every person, and if that good be developed, they will become worthy of esteem, and useful instruments in the uplifting and moralizing of humanity.

If we could only learn to speak of and laud, the good things in people, instead of parading their faults continually, it would undoubtedly be as a helping hand extended, which would assist them somewhat to extricate themselves from their environment.

Build houses of the same kind of materials, on the same kind of surrounding, and when the flood dashes against them, their destruction will be identical.

It is the same with individuals of a sameness in chacteristics; surround them with the same environment and their fate will be the same.

Let us learn a lesson each day in comparisons between ourselves and others of a higher or lower plane of progression in life. If we look above us and see those whose fortune it has been to reach a higher plane of life, love and usefulness, and while we so stand with outstretched hand for a lift to a higher life, may we not forget to look beneath us and stretch the other hand downward to assist some brother less fortunate than ourselves.

We should consider the surroundings—not the buildings; protect the one from danger of the tempest and it will be saved, while the other left unprotected will be carried to destruction.

We should consider the individual's environment—not the individual. Take away the environment and the individual will be worthy the respect of the community and a pillar of strength and usefulness.

Watch out! When you see one going wrong, look not at the person, but get deeper into life. The person is the expression of life, and it is what they express that you want to go after. They are all right, but there is an undercurrent of environment sweeping them off their foundations, and carrying them down the current of life to destruction.

Take drink from the reach of a drunkard and he will ere long become a sober, industrious, good and loving husband, father and friend.

We as a nation, and under the guise of justice, law and order, are robbing, killing and wronging innocent children of environment every day, and as individuals we are more ready to lend assent to these things, than to extend our sympathies and help to those so wronged.

Love, charity—we do hope that they in the fullest sense of their meaning will ere long become the uppermost aim in the life of progress, rather than that of dollars and cents.

Germs of Mind in Plants

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Vitality, Fasting and Nutrition, a Physiological Study of the Curative Power of Fasting, Together with a New Theory of the Relation of Food to Human Vitality, by Hereward Carrington, Member of the Council of the American Institue for Scientific Research; Member of the Society for Psychical Research, London; Author of "The Physical Phenomena of Spiritualism," etc., With an Introductory by A. Rabagliati, M.A., M.D., F.R.C.S., Hon. Gynecologist, and Late Senior Hon. Surgeon, Bradford Royal Infirmary, Consulting Surgeon to Bingley Hospital, to Bradford Children's Hospital, and to the Bradford Home for Cancer and Incurables, etc., etc.—New York: Rebman Company, 1123 Broadway, New York City.—Price, $5.00.

In a large work that has just appeared, Mr. Carrington—a scientist interested in physiologicti and hygienic, equally with psychical problems—contends that the life force, or the vitality that animates the body, is not derived from our food at all, but from sleep and rest; the body, it is claimed, more nearly resembling an electric motor than a steam engine. If this proves to be true, it runs counter to much that has been taught in physiology for nearly a century, and will make the orthodox scientists reconsider many of their views, since it apparently shows that materialistic physiology does not cover all the ground; but that there are certain facts yet to be accounted for, which cannot be explained on the present day theories. We shall return to this immediately. Let us first of all glance at the book as a whole.

The author contends that every one of us eats far too much, and the body, in consequence, gets clogged and blocked with an excess of badly assimilated food. This is the chief cause of disease. In order to eliminate this material, therefore,the author recommends going without food for a number of days—as many as may be necessary in order to bring about a return to health and insure natural hunger. Very helpful advice is given to those about to fast, on the amount of exercise, water drinking, etc., during a fast—and they are told exactly what to do throughout. Eight chapters are devoted to a study of patients who are fasting, their temperature, pulse, etc, those chapters being studies of the patient every day throughout the fast. In the chapter on the Physiology of Fasting, it is shown just how it is that fasting is not harmful, but on the contrary beneficial in all diseased conditions. Anyone will find that his health will be improved a hundred fold by a careful study of the pages of this book.

Apart from the practical side of the question, there is a scientific side that cannot fail to be of interest to all thoughtful minds. This may best be understood by epitomizing some of the author's views, and quoting one of two passages from the book. This I do accordingly:

"The generally accepted view of the causation of vital energy is somewhat as follows: Food, taken into the body, is burned up or oxidized in it; and during this process or oxidation, energy is liberated and given to the system, in very much the same way as the fuel of the engine supplies it with energy. In fact, the two (the engine and the human body) have been frequently compared by physiologists and their similarities insisted upon. Mr. Carrington contends that this similarity is apparent only, and endeavors to show us—through eighty pages of argument—that the body does not derive its energy from the food eaten at all, but from another source altogether, and that the present system of regarding the vital energy of the body as due to food combustion (chemical combustion) is totally false. He thinks that the present theory is disproved by a number of arguments,—chief among them being the phenomena of fasting, which show that patients frequently, if not invariably, get stronger as the fast progresses, whereas they should get weaker. Certainly this was so in my own case,—a fast of forty-five days,—which Mr. Carrington quotes at some length. If the daily food supplied the strength of the body and its vital energy, it should weaken when this food is withdrawn, but the author shows that,—in all diseased conditions, at any rate,—that irs not the case, and that patients who enter upon a fast so weak and debilitated that they cannot walk down stairs, are strong enough to be walking four and five miles a day, at its conclusion, and after having fasted forty or fifty days! Again, the author points to the facts of every day experience. If we derived our energies from the food eaten, he points out, it would only be necessary to go first to the the dining-room and then to the gymnasium, in order to recuperate our strength and energies. But we all know from actual, practical experience that such is not the case; we must seek sleep and rest at the end of a trying day's work, and nothing will take the place of this rest and sleep, and no amount of food will replace the energy thus lost. There is therefore some source of energy other than the food, distinguishing the body from the engine on that account—whose energies are derived exclusively from the fuel consumed. In the self-recuperative powers of the organism, and in its necessity for sleep, the author sees distinctions which differentiate from the engine or any other mechanically operating machine. "The engine does not recuperate and restore itself, during its periods of rest, and the body does; the engine continues to wear out, and can never replace its own parts by new ones, and the body can. * * * The great difference between them is that one is self-recuperative and human and needs sleep in order to effect this; and the other is not self-recuperative, and needs no rest, so long as it works at all; and, in spite of this most obvious and all-important difference (since sleep is the greatest restorer of vital energy, as daily observation shows), and merely to bolster up the absurd attempt to include vital force in the law of conservation; and in spite of the most every day and obvious proofs to the contrary, the scientific world has continued to ignore this question of sleep altogether, and to treat this matter of the renewal of the vital force by food as a proved fact, instead of a mere theory,—open to these very objections, and a monstrous absurdity because of them. In short, the plain difference between the human body and the steam engine have been completely ignored, and treated as if they were non-existent—merely because they were impossible to dovetail into the present materialistic theory. * * *" (pp. 244-5).

There are pages upon pages of argument and facts such as the above, attacking the present theory from almost every conceivable standpoint, and to my mind annihilating it completely. The author contends that the life or vital force is wrongly placed in the circle of forces, each of which is convertible into the other—i. e., it is wrongly placed in the law of conservation of energy. Mr. Carrington holds that "life is absolutely alone,-separate, distinct, per se," and that "it is in no wise related to, or derivable from, any of the other forces." I cannot even summarize the author's arguments here, but will merely state that he considers that we replenish our energies by rest and sleep alone (this giving us a new theory of sleep)—it being defined as "that physiological condition of the organism in which the nervous system of the individual (in precisely the same manner as the electric storage battery) is being recharged from without, by the eternal, all-pervading, cosmic energy, in which we are bathed, and in which we live and move and have our being." (p. 309.) Mr. Carrington thus conceives the organism as a vehicle for transmitting vital energy merely—"we have the will to expend, but never to make or manufacture' this energy by any means in our power. I contend, further, that the body is not an exact parallel, in its action, to the steam engine * * * but is rather that of the electric motor which has the power of recharging itself with life or vital energy, just as the motor of the electrician receives its energy from some external source—the brain and nervous system being that part of us which is thus recharged, and constituting the motor of the human body; that this recharging process takes place during the hours of rest, and particularly of sleep, at such times only—all activity denoting merely an expenditure or waste of this vital force; that we can thus only allow or permit vitality to flow into us, as it were, in this recharging process—such coming from the universal, all-pervading, cosmic energy, with which we are surrounded, and which our nervous systems (and bodies) merely transmit or transform into the external work of the world, —acting merely as channels through which the all-pervading energy may find personal expression; channels through which it may individually manifest." (pp. 249-50.) Death is defined by the author as "that condition of the organism which renders no longer possible, the transmission or manifestation of vital force through it—which condition is probably a poisoned state of the nervous system,—due, in turn, to the whole system becoming poisoned by toxic material absorbed from the blood." (pp. 330-1.)

In fact the book throughout contains invaluable instruction in various matters concerning individual health, and we regret we have not space to give it further notice.

Jottings of Camp Life at Niantic, Ct.

We are having with us from the 9th to the 16th, Wellman C. Whitney of Springfield, Mass., lecturer and psychic, a pleasant and agreeable man, who will leave many friends when he goes. The subects taken by the guides the first Sunday, were very instructive and interesting, and though not a pleasant day for travel, yet the trolley from New London and surrounding towns brought in several interested listeners.

Yesterday evening, 11th, was a message seance at the Ladies' Aid building, where gathered swarms who were visitors to our home and camp. Wednesday afternoon a large audience greeted Mr. Whitney in the grove and to ourself came a message from one who went out in an auto crash, and wishing to find someone to recognize him, saying, he wanted to get at the root of the matter. We said: "Charlie Root—yes—yes; he went so quick with the rest he was so dazed he wished to reach out for those left and again said he wished to get at the Root of it all. I replied, "Willie is not here, he has just gone, it being my son with whom he was well acquainted in a business way. It was a convincing test of the continuity of life, and the need of being ready for that change.

Saturday, the 15th was devoted to the annual election of officers, which from what I have thus far learned, was satisfactory to our camp, and shows for its future good. Of course there must be more or less friction in all such matters where there is a body of thinkers like progressive Spiritualists, and they are here as well as west. We have many campers who like to take a ride Sunday morning, either by boat or bus, and if our food from the rostrum is too strong for them, let them go to their church, but the Spirit of Liberty is in the air, and as sure as they are here, just so sure their conservative armor will be hit by some shaft of light.

Sunday, the 16th. After the usual exercises and reading a poem of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, titled, "The Key," the guide took for his subject, "Divinity in its Central Light is Love." In this truth lies man's salvation. A true-hearted Spiritualist who lives in that thought loves his brother man. It has been said that the Spiritualists as a people have no God. Now we say Divinity in its central Life means Love, and Love is God; but in his travels he found some so-called Spiritualists as narrow-minded as ever was encased in church and creed.

In the messages given there were some of our old campers, E. R. Whiting, Jonathan Hatch and many others recognized by the audience.

The afternoon discourse was founded on these words: "Deeds and not Creeds make the man immortal." again the necessity of living each day our divine thought.

Whilst some talked the near consummation of the brotherhood of man, he could not see how it could be very soon brought about by the present environments of many ignorant souls who have had this life filled with the need of providing for the animal man, leaving the soul or spiritual man undeveloped in this earth expression.

Mr. Whitney will leave us with pleasant memories of a pleasant week passed.

Conferences are very pleasant in Ladies' Aid building.

B. F. Austin is our next Sunday speaker, Mrs. Cunningham being here in the week days.

Greetings came from Clara Banks from the Spirit Life.

MRS. N. H. FOGG.

Parkland Heights Camp, Pa.

The Parkland Heights Spiritualist Home and Camp-meeting Association, opened their meetings July 5, in their large auditorium, with Mr. and Mrs. George W. Kates as speakers. We had a good audience and good work was done. They were with us for three Sundays, and Sunday, July 26, our good sister Katie Hamm was with us. She had a large audience and gave grand messages from the soul world. She is to be with us for three more Sundays, and then our good brother, Prof. Macurda will be here for the last three Sundays of camp.

Our president Mr. Luce of Philadelphia, is doing all in his power to make the camp a success. Meetings are held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. On Wednesday evening a hop given for the young people, and on Saturday evenings a progressive euchre party is given for the benefit of the camp. Our good Sister and public medium, Mrs. Augusta Volk, gave a lawn party on the lower grounds for the benefit of the Parkland Lyceum, and on August 10 another lawn party is to be given by Mrs. Volk for the benefit of camp. Mrs. Volk is an earnest and sincere worker, and always reaps a large sum for the treasury. The Ladies' Aid is to give their annual bazaar on the 19th of August, which is always a success, and helps to bear the expenses of the camp.

Parkland is a beautiful place. The Spiritualists have some pretty and comfortable homes on the heights, and the camp ground is an ideal place. At night it is lighted by electricity, which makes it attractive.

Our camp is young, but in the near future we intend to build hotels and cottages for campers during the season of camp.

Our good brother and sister Locke live on the heights and do all in their power to help to make camp a success. They entertain all the speakers and their hospitality towards the lecturers, is all that is needed to bring good results.

We are doing good work at Parkland, and our camp association is soon to be connected with the State association of Penn., which will help to strengthen the good work and bring comfort to many hungry souls.

MISS M. CARROLL.

Grand Lodge Camp, Michigan.

Will J. Erwood concluded his work with the camp on Thursday last; his work with us was highly appreciated.

Mrs. Amanda Coffman began her engagement on Saturday, August 15. The intense storm prevented as large an attendance as usual on Sunday, but the appreciative audience listened to two practical lectures from Mrs. Coffman, followed with messages which were well received.

Oscar Edgerly has returned after filling his engagement at Chesterfield, Ind. Mr. Edgerly is now acting as our chairman, and will give the concluding address of the camp session on Sunday, August 23rd. All mediums in attendance are doing an excellent work for the cause.

"AFTER YOU GIVE UP EVERYTHING ELSE, THEN TRY MRS. MATTESON."

Chappaqua Mountain Institute,
Chappaqua, N. Y., May 19, 1908.
Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, 248 N. Division St., Buffalo, N. Y.

My dear Mrs. Matteson:—It is a great pleasure for me to write and thank you for all you have done for me for many years past. About twenty years ago, when I was nineteen years of age. I was taken seriously ill with diphtheria, which left me a bed-ridden invalid. For seven years I was helpless, and only moved from bed to bed by nurses; and during that time the skill of fifteen doctors was tried, several of the most prominent in the profession, and to whom we paid as high as fifty dollars per visit. Finally all gave me up, and said it was impossible for me to live over a few weeks.

My uncle, Alexander Hale, living near Buffalo, then wrote and said: "After you give up everything else, then try Mrs. Matteson," and though I had no faith in you I did it to please my relatives. You examined and treated me over three hundred miles away, and said in your examination that mine was a very serious case, and it would take a long time to recover, but you believed you could cure me.

Your first bottle of medicine helped me so much that I continued your treatment, and in two years was restored to good health, and by an occasional bottle of medicine, and some good advice, I have had a reputation for years of doing more than my share of the world's work. Your wonderful gift has revolutionized my religious belief; for though I have studed medicine, I had never believed that such skill as you possess could be given to any human being; and the saddest thing to me is that the scientific world can not or will not know and accept it.

In gratitude, I am sincerely thine.

A Story of the Great Atlantis.

One of the Most Remarkable Books of the Age.

Physical Science was much farther advanced in Atlantis, 12000 years ago than it is to-day. As understood by the Poseidii (Atlanteans) the prime principle upon which it was based—"Incal Malixetho," i. e., God is Imminent in Nature—was FIRST; to this they appended "Axte Incal, Axtuec Mun", translated: "To know God is to know all worlds whatever." They held that but One Substance existed, and but One Energy, the one being Incal (God) externalized and the other His Life in action in His Body. Applying this principle to their scientific work they accomplished through it aerial navigation without gas or sails, circumnavigating the globe in a day; conveyance of sound with reflection of the sender; heat and power conduction to whatever distance without material connection; transmuted metals; obtained, by electrical action, water from the atmosphere. These and many others were in common use. (Some of the things approach re-discovery, but the reader must remember that this book was finished in 1886, when the modern world knew them not. It knew not the cathode ray till 1896).

The book is endorsed by Prof. E. L. Larkin, the great astronomer and scientist; he regards it as one of the greatest books of the present age. Address

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., SEPTEMBER 5, 1908 NO. 980

PECULIAR PHENOMENA.

Not Often Witnessed or Understood—A Prominent Medium and Distinguished Author, Thomas C. Buddington, Criticises the Methods of Mr. Norman at Lake Helen Camp.

To the Editor:—It is not often I trouble you with accounts of the mysterious phenomena that sometimes come within my own observation, but on reading some articles in your paper in that line, I think it may be of interest to hear or read of a very peculiar case that once came within my notice at one of the chief spiritual camps of this movement.

I happened to be on the grounds on strictly business relations unconnected with Spiritualism, but by a singular fortuitous chain of circumstances, the following description of a peculiar order of phenomena was presented to me for inspection.

Upon this camp-ground there was located a medium whose sign informed the public that "Independent Slate Writing," "Clairvoyance," "Spirit Photography" and some other lines of spiritual mediumship were at the service of the public.

There came to this ground an old German who was seeking for the consolation that is supposed to come by messages from the dead, and who told me that his chief motive in coming there was to hear from his deceased wife. I will give his own language as near as I can remember it, describing his experience with this medium for so many phases of occult work.

"Ven I comes into his room, he axed me to sit down until he could have chance to see the spirits. Vell, I sit still for a vew minutes, und he say: 'Have I any relatifs by der name of Julia?' I dells him 'No. I haf no relatifs or vrients by that name'. Ven he axes me if I haf any vrient by the name of Marla, I says, 'No, no one of my spirit vrients by that name.' Then he says, 'Do you know anyone by the name of Harriet?' und I says 'No, but I tinks of mine vife's name vich is close to it,' und he vatches mine face very sharp. Then he says, 'Haf I anyone by the name of Henrietta,' und I says, 'Yes; that is mine vife's name, I wish to hear from."

"Then he dells me to come to-morrow at three o'clock, and he will see what the spirits vill write on der slates, and to-morrow I goes to see vat dey vill write on der slates. Vell, ven I coomes into der room he dells me it vill be two dollars in advance before the spirits vill try. So I bays him the two dollar. Then he hands me von slate, and dells me to vash it clean und I vashes it clean. Then he hands me anodder slate und dells me to vash that clean, und I vashes it clean. He has another slate in his hand, vich he places on the floor near the table vich he does not ask me to vash, and then he dakes the last slate I vashes, and puts it und another slate on the floor under the leg of the table. Vell, we sits down und vaits avile, und he says he vill see if the spirits haf written on the slates under the table leg, und he dakes them up and on the slate close to the floor, there is a message in German. I reads the message, but there vas noddings written in it like Henrietta und then I see that the slate had not been washed. Und I told him it vas not vashed und showed him it had not been vashed, by vashing the other side. Und I told him I vas not satisfied that that message vas from Henrietta, for the slate vas not vashed. He said I vas putting stumbling blocks in his vay, und spoiling the conditions.

"I ask him how could I spoil the conditions ven I vashed the slates as he told me,' und he said, 'slatewriting vas a very mysterious venomena, und no one knew vat spirits vould do till they did it. He said he did not like to haf sitters go away dissatisfied, but if I vould try for spirit pictures und come again Wednesday we would try again on a pair of magnetized slates vich the price vas von dollar. So I paid him the von dollar, and I sit for spirit picture vich vas two dollar.

"Ven I vent to try Wednesday for slate wrking, he say he vas tired, und I haf to come again. I dell him I vas told to come then, und ask him vat be the matter with the spirits, vy they not write von day as vell as anodder, und he say, 'Spirits vas very mysterious. I then told him I gif him five dollars more if he get writing on magnetized slates vat he sold me,' und he say he vill not try again for five hundred dollars, for me at all, und then I told him he vas von big fake'. He get no spirit writing at all, und get German medium to write message on slate that vas not vashed.

When the old German had told me his story, and showed me the slate, it was plainly evident that the slate with Henrietta's message had never been "vashed" at all, and the great mystery is how Henrietta was able to write on the unwashed slate. But mysterious as this phenomena was, it was nothing to the result of the sitting for spirit photographs. Imagine my astonishment to instantly recognize the face of a lady who was stopping at the house where I was boarding, who asserted that she had never died, and had no connection by blood or marriage with the old German. She, however, came from the same section at the North, and was well acquainted with the medium, but she distinctly refused to acknowledge she was a spirit out of the flesh or ever had been as far as she knew.

Another "spirit" very strongly resembled W. H. Bach, former editor of the Sunflower, and another was pronounced to be the famous Lizzie Bangs of the Bangs Sisters.

The most mysterious of all spiritual mysteries was the coming of the "spirit" pictures of those people who were all alive, and greater than that, that they came to an old German who lived fifteen hundred miles from them, and had never heard of them.

Am I not right, Mr. Editor, in pronouncing this phenomena more astounding than the mere coming of ordinary spirits? Where in all the history of the movement has it been equaled?

No wonder that the Southern camps will soon be able to outshine the North in the varieties of astounding phenomena through such mediumship. I have waited long in vain for an account by others who heard the old German's tale of the unwashed slate, and saw the "living" spirit "pictures," for it was no secret on that ground at the time.

On departing from the ground the old German left the slates and pictures with me, so when I wished to be able to astonish the world with such evidence I could have the proof at hand.

I would also add that Henrietta became quite a household word at the camp, for her name was mentioned many times as being present by the platform test mediums, and at other seances, as well as by camp generally.

No wonder that the management of camps are proud of the commanding influence of Spiritualism in the world, when such manifestations of spirit power are given as evidence. The only trouble is that the old German was not wise enough to see the occult side of the phenomena, but the medium who told him that "Spirits" were beyond explanation in their mysterious manifestations, probably knew better than the old German the occult signification of writing on unwashed slates, and the coming of pictures of living persons as ghosts.

It would be unjust to this medium to question his ability for marvelous phenomena, and as he is already widely known as a medium for such phenomena, it is not necessary to mention him further than to say, he is able to cause the living as well as the dead to thus appear, and write even on unwashed slates, as well to come on "spirit" photographs.

But, Mr. Editor, there is a serious as well as humorous side to these manifestations. The old German came to hear from his deceased wife, whom he said he dearly loved as a companion for 25 years. He met—what? Disappointment and disgust with the whole business. Not a shred of evidence that his wife ever came within the atmosphere spiritual of such a place. What are the management of Spiritualist camps thinking of to permit the presence of such "performers" as mediums? In slate-writing the conditions are simple for genuine work. In photography no medium should ever handle the plates at all, or be allowed to take money from anybody on a camp ground, unless under the control of a photographer employed by the management to finish and develop the plates. Then there will be no likelihood of "living spirit pictures" coming on the plates, unless it be done to show the power of the invisibles to duplicate earthly photography. This once was done at my request (made mentally) when conducting experiments on that line. I got the picture of a person, living 1600 miles away, and on a plate taken in total darkness at 9 p. m. I knew the person well, and thought she might have passed away, but afterward I saw her alive and well then I knew that my mental request was answered in this manner. The medium never knew or saw this person, and as it was a scientific test of spirit power, I now for the first time mention it to the public.

The former humorous letter is bringing me many answers from all over the North as to the necessity of straight spiritual evidence. At the grounds about to be opened near Hawk's Park, the spirit scientists have already given absolute proof of their power in the lines of healing, and other ways of their presence.

Prof. Faraday asserts that psychological conditions are more important factors in physical phenomenal evidence than in purely mental manifestations. As it is impossible to obtain these conditions in most, if not all, of the camps as now conducted, the spirit scientists who have to conduct circles and use mediums for scientific evidence, have practically withdrawn from those camps and are not trying to work through the elements congregated there. Hence the the substitution of "Fake" phenomena as evidence, and the disgust of the spectators at its appearance and toleration by the management. This is the reason in a nutshell of the lack of phenomenal evidence of a reliable order in the camps. The remedy is to restore conditions so the spirit scientists can work out their problems without interference, and under such conditions as will preclude fraud.

The "New Thought" movement in the South will make phenomenal evidence a specialty, but the circles will be under the control of scientises in the spirit, and the material side will be under the control of the management direct. There will be no medium of the "fake" order permitted to take a position as a medium on the ground at all.

All mediums who may be directed by their controls to come here will be given a chance to do honest work, but the conditions for doing dishonest work will be promptly "sat down on" by the management at the beginning.

People coming to study the phenomena will be protected by the management from any imposition by any medium or spirit, to the best of the ability of the spirit scientists, backed by the mortal representatives of the Scientific Band. To facilitate this work, the spirit scientists have requested that profanity, vulgarity, drunkenness, scandal monging, and idle gossip should not only be abstained from, but that those who introduce such mental conditions shall be promptly warned and, if necessary excluded from the grounds by the assistance of the civil authorities. And I can assure the public that this request will be vigorously complied with, should there be any occasion for its enforcement. We intend to have one spiritual center where spiritual conditions are recognized and respected and all mediums who may read these lines can ask their controls if they are not essential to the production of true phenomena, and in full accord with the true philosophy as given at the beginning of this movement to enlighten mankind.

Letters from all over the North reach me by every mail, and many are offering to come and become a part of this new movement. It has struck a chord in the hearts of many veteran workers, and the material as well as spiritual side is a part of the program here, where you can come and have a place in your old age, if you prefer to come in line with the spirit of this movement.

As the Faraday Medium who first gave to the world the "law of control," on the theory of vibratory action in the ethers, I would say, that Prof. Faraday is now conducting the greater course of lectures, (illustrated with stereopticon) on the principles of "Creation of Form" from the ethereal relations of the elements, and these lectures will be a part of the intellectual and spiritual instruction given here the coming winter session. What other arrangements may be made will be given to your columns in due time.

THOS. C. BUDDINGTON.

The civilized stage turns every vice, which barbarism practices in a simple way, into a complex, ambiguous, equivocal and hypocritical form. It moves in a vicious circle, in the contradictions which it eternally reproduces without being able to remove them, so that it ever accomplishes the very reverse of that which it really does or pretends to aim at; for instance, that in civilization poverty is born of plenty.—Fourier.

RELIGION AND HEALTH.

The Success of Practically Every Known Religious System Based on Its Close Relation to Practical Health Problems.

Man wants, and therefore appreciates practical things. Obsolete, unreliable and impractical things are gradually but surely relegated to the rear, while the things that directly concern and benefit mankind are appreciated and hailed as the gift of the gods.

It requires neither a close acquaintance with theology, nor a deep knowledge of medicine to perceive analogies between the two; both are placed in man's hands to be made a practical success, trifled with, cast away, or scientifically studied, cultivated, treasured and preserved with ever increasing joy and satisfaction. They are, perhaps the two most important things in the world.

The religious instinct in man is inherent, and can not be downed. It must find expression in some form or another.

The desire for health is in fact nearer and more important than that of religion. Mens sana in corpore sano is a maxim that is old and true, and should be applied to our daily life now as much as it ever was. Everywhere is there a tendency towards health and repair, the vis medicatrix nature, without which the physician can do nothing, is inherent in everyone, but is by far the strongest in those who have a strong, vigorous constitution. The poor rhachitic child is the one which has the least chance in life, and usually dies early, while the strong one survives. The great law of the survival of the fittest is ever in operation. Man instinctly knows this, and therefore his desire to live becomes a secondary one—a religious one. The better a man's health is the greater is his physical capacity, and the more vigorous and prompt is his healing power which lies within himself.

It becomes then, a second duty to study the laws of health no less than the precepts of religion. The two are bound together inseparably. The human soul appreciates the advantages of modern scientific training in medicine, but naturally objects to being heavily taxed at a time when it should receive aid and help.

Medicine has been intimately related with the religious teachers in modern as well as all pre-civilized times, and when we get down to the real history of all religions we find their strength due to their practical health teachings. The Brahmans taught medicine, and their books on medicine, the Shastras, were held sacred. The Mosaic writings and recent archaeological findings reveal a system of medicine in Egypt from the earliest times, and we have the record of Ilmetop, an Egyptian priest-physician of nearly six thousand years ago, that has good service in it for to-day.

The old age of the Egyptians was directly attributed to the teachings of their priest-physicians in Egypt. The Greeks believed the divine art of healing was the gift of the gods. Hospitals were connected with the Greek temple of Aesculapius, and Hippocrates was the son of a Greek priest who ministered in this temple of health. Hippocrates was in fact the father of modern medicine, and lectured to students in the temple.

It is not necessary, I hope, to call your attention to the close relationship and influence of the priest, and the hygienic laws among the Jews. The very superiority of the Jewish race to-day, and perhaps its strength through many years of persecution, is directly attributable to the early Spiritualistic-Hygienic Religion. It is a fact that they are the only religious people to-day that carry out health laws with religious zeal. Perhaps the very fact that they possessed these psychic gifts to such a remarkable degree can be referred to their hygienic system, for surely all that they did possess was this great gift of psychic manifestation.

Christianity's early progress was no doubt to a great extent due to the sympathy shown to the sick by the Master in the command to "heal the sick." About the year 285 A. D., Laurentius, chief of the deacons, assembled a great multitude of the sick and poor, and they were supported by the alms of the church. In the year 380 A. D., a regular hospital was founded by a Christian woman named Fabiola as a religious offering. The crusades left a record in combining the practical help with religious. In A.D. 550, Emperor Justinian built the hospital of St. John at Jerusalem for the cure of the sick pilgrims and wounded crusaders. After the crusade the influence of the monasteries again shows the practical with the religious, and the task of nursing the sick becomes the special providence of the members of the religious bodies.

Among the American Indians the Medicine Man was the great priest, and the Shakers, Mormons, Dowieites and many other sects can trace a goodly share of the success to the close relationship and practical teachings in health matters.

It is needless to call attention to the influence of the church in hospital matters, as the church is gradually usurping the work that the physician was wont to do, and it is a fact that a wide breach is now opening between the medical profession and the religious hospitals, and unless the religious teachers will change their tactics and apply the same rules in studying religion as the doctors are doing to studying medicine, there will be a conflict in a near future. The doctor is now compelled to study psychotherapy, and ere long will be compelled to apply scientific methods to the deep problems of "ministering to a mind diseased."

True the cult that is now growing is supplying an ideal in a half way, but this cult will be compelled to travel the path that all religions have traveled, and will travel, unless they apply scientific methods to the real ideals that their followers are sincerely seeking after.

All the religions and cults now in existence will be compelled to give way to science, and the great scientific practical religion that will come to stay is not born yet.

Medicine itself was mere superstition until some thirty-five years ago, but now it is rapidly forging to the front, and the practical benefits it has given to humanity has made it so valuable indeed that the whole world respects it, and everywhere the laws of bacteriology and preventive medicine are making humanity one great system of brotherhood along these lines.

The care of the body should be made a religious duty, an element of religion as essential as religion itself. Carlyle said: "We touch heaven when we lay our hands on a human body."

The religion of the body is a complement of the religion of soul, and the welfare of the body is only second in importance, and perhaps as much, or even more so, than that of the soul. The ideals in religion to-day demand the same practical benefits as those in olden times, and which helped to bring followers to the religious systems of long ago; not only that inasmuch as we are living in an age of education, an age of science, the same laws of hard-hearted, merciless science must be applied to the fundamental principles of religion as are applied to the health problems. The field is now opening. Already the Christian church is surveying it, and trying to discover if it is possible to discard its old worn out dogmatic theories for scientific truths. Sooner or later the present doctors must assume the office of the priest-physician and by preventive measures teach the people how to live.

The political parties in America have both inserted a plank for a health bureau or cabinet position. The enormous death rate that could be avoided and the enormous increase in interest by the intelligent mothers in America in Eugenics shows that the harvest is ripe for a scientific Spiritualistic-Hygienic Religion.

Will the Spiritualists enter this great field, and by educational and modern scientific methods, boldly declare that they will take their stand among the greatest benefactors of this age, or will they go on with their unreliable mental phenomena, or encourage the system of artficial toggery, and thereby drive all the better element out of their ranks? The parting of the ways will come ere long, and those who will be weighed (by scientific methods) and found wanting will be compelled to go the way of their predecessors

Thousands of men and women in all walks of life are disgusted with dogmatic religion, and ere long many who are tired of sophies and pseudo-science of the enterprising cults of to-day, will welcome a scientific practical religious system.

A Great Favorite in California, Where He Soon Goes to Fill Another Engagement.

To the Editor: This summer has been a most delightful one to me. I have been for four months on Shoup and Heck's Springflake Fisheries, Shelbyville, Ind., R. R. 12. This is the largest fancy fishery in the world, and the work with and study of, the beautiful little things has been a source of genuine pleasure. Then, too, Mr. Heck and family (wife and son) are truly devoted Spiritualists, which means much, and a certainty of pleasure to abide with them.

It was my privilege to attend Mt. Pleasant Park camp meeting at Clinton, Iowa, and to meet my co-workers was truly a pleasure—Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Max Hoffman, Frank Ripley, Edgar W. Emerson and many others, doing such a splendid work for our cause. Several new workers, to me, whose names I do not recall, caused me to rejoice that in fields where I am not acquainted the good work moves forward; the faithful ladies, as usual, doing a good work to uphold the camp.

Early in September I start West to take up a six months' work in San Diego, at the Temple; so after Oct. 1 my address will be Spiritualist Temple, San Diego, California.

My good will to the workers and friends in every portion of the field, and a mighty hip, hip, hurrah, for The Progressive Thinker.

Grand Ledge, Mich., Camp.

To the Editor: The Grand Ledge camp closed on Aug. 23, after a most successful four weeks' session: On the morning of the closing day we had a symposium, the best that the camp could afford. Mrs. May F. Ayers opened the meeting with an original inspirational poem entitled, 'Spiritualism," a most soul-inspiring production. All the mediums on the grounds took part in this meeting, consisting of Mesdames Oswald, N. W. Russell, Star, Shipman, and Mr. Charles Barnes, all of whom did splendid work. In the afternoon Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly gave one of his eloquent and instructive lectures. Mr. Edgerly, after serving our association as chairman and speaker for five years, is as popular with our people as ever, and has been re-engaged to serve as chairman next year.

Mr. John A. Ellis was elected chairman of the board for the coming year. Mr. J. W. Ewing continues on the board, and will attend to correspondence appertaining to business of the camp. Mr. A. F. Clark continues as manager. Upon Mr. Ewing and Mr. Clark depended largely the continued success of the camp. Things are shaping up in such a manner that we feel sure of a grand succes at this place next year.

Chicago friends ought to get the habit of coming to beautiful Grand Ledge.

FINE SENTIMENTS.

Touching the "Teaching" of Religion in the Schools.—An Erudite Columbia Professor Raises Valid Objections to the Scheme.

In his paper in the July Hibbert Journal, Prof. John Dewey of Columbia University makes a philosophical examination of the question whether religion can be taught in our public schools, and reaches a negative conclusion. Both the nature of religion and institutions forbid. Incidentally he condemns the Roman Catholic plan of grouping pupils according to the religious persuasion of the parents. Professor Dewey argues:

"We have got to teach "something" as religion, and that means practically "some" religion. Which? In America, at least, the answer cannot be summarily given even as Christianity in general. Our Jewish fellow citizens not not only have the same "hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions" as the Christians, but, like them, they pay taxes, vote, and serve on school boards. But we should not be very much better off even if it were a question of Christianity alone. Which Christianity? Oriental in its origin, it has been Latinized and Germanized, and there are even those who have dreamed of humanizing it."

The problem is complex, he asserts, "as respects the process of learning, of coming to know." He asks:

"What shall knowledge of religion as an outcome of instruction mean to-day? Shall it mean the conversion of character into spirituality? Shall it mean the accumulation of information "about" religion? Or are there those who still believe in some magic power resident in memorized words, phrases and facts of transmitting themseves into personal insight, the development of fundamental mood, and the formation of permanent attitudes toward experiences?"

The problem still increases in difficulty when, we are told, knowledge is considered from the side of its method and from the standpoint of what it takes to get something worthy to be called knowledge. The writer asks:

"Can those who take the philosophic and historic view of religion as a flower and fruition of the human spirit in a congenial atmosphere tolerate the incongruity involved in "teaching" such an intimate and originally vital matter by external and formal methods? And can those who hold that true religion is something externally imported tolerate any other methods? Is it not confusion to seek a reconciliation of two such disparate ideas?

"Already the spirit of our schooling is permeated with the feeling that every subject, every topic, every fact, every professed truth must submit to a certain publicity and impartiality. All proffered samples of learning must go to the same assay-room and be subjected to common tests. It is the essence to all dogmatic faiths to hold that any such "show-down" is sacrilegious and perverse. The characteristic of religion, from their point of view, is that it is—intellectually secret, not public; peculiarly revealed, not generally known; authoritatively declared, not communicated and tested in ordinary ways. What is to be done about this increasing antinomy (self-contradiction) between the standard for coming to know in other subjects of the school, and coming to know in religious matters? I am far from saying that the antinomy is an inherent one, or that the day may not come when religion will be so thoroughly naturalized in the hearts and minds of men that it can be considered publicly, openly, and by common tests, even among religious people. But it is pertinent to point out that, as long as religion is conceived as it now is conceived by the great majority of professed religionists, there is something self-contradictory in speaking of education in religion in the same sense in which we speak of education in topics where the method of free inquiry has made its way. The "religious" would be the last to be willing that either the history or the content of religion should be taught in this spirit: while those to whom the scientific standpoint is not merely a technical device, but is the embodiment of integrity of mind, must protest against its being taught in any other spirit."

As to the "teachers" these further questions are asked:

"Where are the experts in religion? and where are the authoritative teachers? There are theologians; do we want theology taught? There are historians, but I fear the day has not come when the history of religion can be taught as history. Here precisely is one of those fields of clarification and criticism where much labor needs to be done, and where the professional religionist is one of the most serious obstacles to reckon with, since a wider and deeper historic knowledge would overthrow his traditional basis.

"There are preachers and catechists, but unless we are committed to some peculiar faith or institution, it is not exhortation or discipline of this sort that constitutes religious instruction. There are psychologists; but is introspection our aim? There remains, indeed, the crops of faithful, more or less well prepared, hard-working, and hard-worked teache s. This brings us to the crux of the whole matter. Is religion a thing so specialized, so technical, so "informational" that, like geography or history or grammar, it may be taught at special hours, times, and places by those who have properly "got it up," and been approved as persons of fit character and adequate professional training?

"We do not find it feasible of desirable to put upon the regular teachers the burden of teaching a subject which has the nature of religion The alternative plan of parceling out pupils among religious teachers drawn from their respective churches and denominations brings us up against exactly the matter which has done most to discredit the churches, and to discredit the cause, not perhaps of religion, but organized and institutional religion: the multiplication of rival and competing religious bodies, each with its private inspiration and outlook. Our schools, in bringing together those of different nationalities, languages, traditions, and creeds, in assimilating them together upon the basis of what is common and public in endeavor and achievement, are performing an infinitely significant religious work. They are promoting the social unity out of which in the end genuine religious unity must grow. Shall we interfere with this work? Shall we run the risk of undoing it by introducing into education a subject which can be taught only by segregating pupils and turning them over at special hours to separate representatives of rival faiths? This would be deliberately to adopt a scheme which is predicated (based) upon the the maintenance of social divisions in just the matter religion, which is empty and futile save as it expresses the basic unities of life."

Than to be simple, modest, manly, true,
Safe from the many, honored by the few;
Nothing to court in church, or world, or state,
But inwardly in secret to be great.

AN ANSWER TO MRS. PETERSILEA.

The Nut is Cracked According to the Church of Universal Science.

In The Progressive Thinker of Aug. 22 was a beautiful narration of a dream or trance experience by Mrs. Petersilea, of the truthfulness of which no one could be skeptical. We think there are very few Spiritualists who have not had similar experiences, and it is just such that affirms so strongly in the belief of immortality of the soul, and the existence of a universal spirit, who is the Creator of all forms of life.

So far as this fundamental principle is concerned, all Spiritualists are unanimously united, but in ideas and understanding of the relation between man and the soul, between soul and spirit, and how manifestations in matter are brought about, there are hardly two persons who can see in the same light. Such understanding must come through growth during years of studies in physical, psychical and spiritual science.

Before making our explanation of how Mrs. Petersilea's vision was brought about, we will cite the following paragraph from Foundation Principles of the Church of Universal Science:

"104. It is the universal Spirit (God) with whom man essentially is one in the subjective mind, who manifests that which shall come to the objective mind of man. It is generally manifested in symbols, and only those who are spiritualized enough to understand the meaning of that language, can have the benefit thereof.

"105. In the inner world of Spirit all things are known, and when the external personality is asleep the soul is still awake and reflects from that fountain of knowledge, things that shall come.

"106. All that which shall happen to man in the external life is known to the Spirit within, so when we are in the spiritual state we see and know all things that are coming to us in daily life, but most of the time the external mind can not remember it when we wake up. It was with this knowledge Solomon said: 'Who can remember that which shall come?' (Preacher 1:11.)"

In the first place Mrs. Petersilea says: "One night after retiring to rest and becoming calm and passive, as one usually does before falling asleep, there appeared standing at the foot of my bed, the spirit form of my husband. * * * But it must be added just here, that I did not see him with the natural eye, but with the spiritual eye."

Consequently, when she did not see with the natural eye, her spirit-husband was "no matter." But being unconscious to the external, she was in the very same state as her spirit-husband, namely, in the spiritual state where all things are known and can be made manifest to the soul.

Now this lady in Massachusetts had already written the letter to Mrs. Petersilea, and not only that, but her soul's emotion during grief had gone out to her also. According to psychic law it is only the soul's emotions that are effective in the world of spirit.

So when Mrs. Petersilea was in that semi-sleep state, she could see all these things that the Massachusetts lady had in her spiritual sphere, as well as her own. Because she is strongly connected with her spirit-husband, it is natural that he will figure much in her dreams and visions.

It must be remembered that all beings and things that we have loved in earth-life always will be with us in spirit, and whenever we are in the proper state to get dreams or visions, these will appear as representatives of the real meaning in the revelation.

Now, in conclusion I will say, that although our departed friends continue to exist and are connected with us, they can not bestow any spiritual gift upon us, for such must come from the Spirit within. The law is universal for all souls, whether in physical or ethereal life.

Persons with gifts of music, art, healing, poetry or anything else, may be around us, but they could not give any of those gifts, for they must be given by the Spirit within—by the inner divine Being. Neither can any one see visions because the spirit friends are around us, but because our soul has eyes whereby to see and the same law holds good in the psychical kingdom.

A HAUNTING SPIRIT AT WORK.

An Impressive Visitation of the Satanic Kind.—Luminous Phenomena in Italy.

"A correspondent" furnished the "Daily Chronicle on the 15th inst. with a detailed account of the "weird experience of a London family," and enclosed for the Editor's information, "and as materials for verification of the accuracy of the story, the true names and dates of places and persons and happenings," The story, briefly told, is as follows:—

Two years ago a lady took an old-fashioned eight-roomed cottage in a village, but she now wishes to leave it because of the strange disturbances which have taken place within it. Since the beginning of the present year the lady's daughter, a girl about fourteen years of age, occupied a spare bedroom near the roof, and one night—

She was suddenly aroused from sleep and was conscious of the presence of someone standing by her bedside in the dark. Startled, she was about to cry out, when a flabby, large, clammy hand was pressed firmly over her mouth.

She was a strong-minded girl. With an effort she sat bolt upright in bed, trying to tear the hand from her mouth. To her horror she found the hand of the invisible intruder strongly forcing her back on her pillow, and at the same time she was conscious of an intolerable odor. Hastily pulling the bedclothes over her head, she went fervently over her prayers—I may say it is a Catholic family—and, to her great relief and delight, the grasp of the hideous Invisible relaxed, and she went to sleep.

In the morning she thought it might have been a nightmare, and said nothing about it. The next time, however, when she had to sleep in that room the same horrible haunting occurred. Again there was a presence in the room, again the horrible odor as of decaying flesh, again the gruesome, flabby, clammy hand pressed on her mouth. She screamed, jumped out of bed, and went down to her mother, declaring that nothing could induce her to sleep in that room.

Some time later a relative spent three weeks in the house. On the twentieth night she had experience similar to that which had befallen the daughter of the house:—

She was awakened by the pressure of a hand upon her mouth. She shook herself clear and angrily addressed her visitor, but received no response. On the twenty-first night the same visitation occurred. This time the odor was so intolerable that she had to fly from the room, dreading suffocation. The next day she left the house.

Another lady, not a relation, for three nights in succession endured the haunting horror of the darkness, the phenomena in every case being the same; first the presence, then the hand, followed by the insufferable smell. My friend invited me to spend a night in the haunted chamber. It is an experience which I do not covet.

If this evil entity from the beyond would confine himself to this spare bedroom the room might be set apart for his accommodation, but unfortunately this is not the case. Last Thursday, for instance, while the family were sitting at lunch, they were subjected to what has now become quite a familiar visitation. Steps were heard descending the stairs from the haunted bedroom, apparently those of a heavy man wearing loose slippers. When he reached the foot of the stairs he entered the dining room, and with him came as a moving column, the pestilential odor!

They could see nothing, but heard the footsteps cross the floor, and presently there was a sound as if someone had sat down heavily in one of the chairs at the table. They heard the chair creak, but to finish the meal was out of the question. The room smelt like a pest-house. All the windows, were opened, but the odor filled the house.

As may be imagined from the fact that my friend has stood this for months, and is still standing it, she is very strong-minded. Believing that she is in the presence of a discarnate personality, who for some strange and mysterious reason is earth-bound, she has sometimes followed him to the bedroom, and attempted in vain to get into communication with him. Adressing him, whoever it may be, she has pointed out the extreme inconvenience which his inconsiderate visits were occasioning to the family. She has begged him to inform her what he wanted, undertaking to do anything in reason to ease his perturbed spirit, if thereby she could but secure release from his detestable presence. To all her adjurations and appeals there was only one reply—the continuous terrible odor.

The story may seem grotesque and ludicrous to your readers, but it is a very grim business for my friend. This is no imaginative story of ancient days which cannot be verified. The haunting has taken place this month, and is probably continuing at this moment.

It only remains to add that on making inquiries in the village, my friend was told that the last occupant of that house who an old imbecile, who died in what is now known as the haunted chamber. He was an enormously corpulent man, and it was some time before they could effect the structural alterations in the house necessary to remove his corpse, upon which decay had made great ravages before it was finally transferred to the grave. That is the story in the village, but why the smell and the presence should persist years after that malodorous funeral, I leave to wiser heads than mine to decide.

Luminous Phenomena in Italy.

Professor Dr. M. T. Falcomer, in the "Veltro," gives the weight of his authority to the following account of luminous phenomena observed in the neighbourhood of Vo Euganeo (Province of Vicenza), and sends it to me thinking it will be of interest to investigators of spiritualistic kindred facts in England. Having satisfied himself of the objectivity of the light, he did not hesitate to publish the written accounts of it which he received at first-hand from trustworthy witnesses, viz. : the Countess I. Correr, her two sons, and the Cavaliere C. Pollini, strengthened by the notoriety of the appearance in the neighbourhood of its occurrence.

The first witness, the Countess, is a lady well versed in the literature of mediumship, having experience of seances and "capable of every good work." Cavaliere Pollini is a man of superior education and so distinguished a musician that the Queen sends for him to the concerts of Stupinigi.

In a letter from Padua, dated May 25, 1906, the Countess wrote to Professor Falcomer, among other things:

I wanted to tell you also about the apparition of a luminous globe at my country estate; more than forty people have seen it floating about every evening for an hour or more; it rises, sinks and dissolves if anyone goes close up to it, and it reappears further away—and this for more than a month.

At the Professor's request for particulars the lady wrote to her country home to get exact data and, if possible, further details of the apparition of the luminous globe, after which she sent Professor Falcomer a letter, of which a large part is here inscribed:—

Villa Bucchia, Sept. 8, 1906.

For some time now the description of the phenomenon of which I told you—the luminous globe that floats every evening in a place near my house—has been lying on my table, but the description was given by a rutic of this place and needed explanations which, perhaps, I alone, who know his style, could give. I hoped to have met you here, and so I did not write; but now I have seen the globe of light myself, and can assure you that it is an indisputable reality. It rises from the earth among the fields, then sails gently through the air at a height of from six to eight yards. Now and then it sinks lower and often recedes and approaches with inconceivable swiftness. In size it is like a large electric street lamp.

In the winter (for it has been appearing for ten months with intervals) some stupid jokers fired a gun at it, whereupon the globe instantly disappeared and the next evening reappeared divided in two, and showed itself like this for a few evenings, after which it became one again. But since that time the peasants tell me it is no longer so large as at first, nor is the light as brilliant. However, yesterday evening I admired it for its magificent splendour, which had something of the brilliance of the stars. How I wish you could see it!

This phenomenon has manifested since last St. Martin's Day (November 11), when a family of cow-keepers came to live in a cottage which stands in the field where the globe appears. In my opinion, there must be a medium in this family, and I shall inquire into it. But how many precautions one has to take with these peasants! If they were to discover that a given individual were the subject of certain studies and research, it would be enough to make them burn the house down. * * *

"For two evenings," adds the Countess, writing on September 10, 1906, "the globe has not been seen."

Professor Falcomer says in his article:—

The globe of Vo may recall to mind an analogous phenomenon, the little flame that appeared at Quargnento, in the province of Alessandria; it was observed out in the country near a chapel, also in rainy weather; it seemed to move with a certain intelligence, and the people called it "a soul."

At my request, Captain Sirombo, of the 36th Infantry Regiment, collected information regarding it on the spot, and it was published in the "Rivista di Studi Psichici." There is also a little flame described in the S. P. R. "Proceedings" for 1905 Vol. XIX., and again, the little flame of Berbenno discussed in the "Uebersinnliche Welt" and other periodicals.

Considering the phenomenon at Vo in connection with this collection of facts it seemed desirable to make it more widely known, and the Professor accordingly asked the Countess's permission to publish her letter.

In her letter giving consent, the Countess said:—

You might add that all the village saw the phenomena during long months and more than forty people used to stand admiring the splendid apparition every evening. It appears that it is as I foresaw, in the cow-keeper's family there is a girl who has continual visions, but woe betide you if you speak to her of them? I could not even so much as see her. Oh, if you were but here!

In another letter the Countess adds that, besides herself her sons and Professor Pollini had witnessed the phenomenon.

Professor Falcomer is also of opinion that the manifestation is produced through the mediumship of this girl, although at some distance from her. Allan Kardec has observed that spirits can carry the fluid from the medium to produce their phenomena at a distance.

The Professor concludes with a quotation from Stainton Moses' "Spirit Identity," as to the probability of a concerted plan among the spirits to convince us of their action and influence, and so this appearance at Vo may well have produced an effect on some who saw it, turning their thoughts to the other world.

I remember some twenty years ago a long narrative in "Psychische Studien" of the appearance of similar globes of light. I think they showed intelligence and were held to be actual spirit personalities. I think I remember that there was a connection between some of these and a battlefield.

In many places in the Alps globular lights and flames have been seen by Swiss peasants, and are always believed to be souls in purgatory. In the case of flames, they may possibly have a purely natural origin.—Light, London, England.

Mysteries of the Soul.

As Set Forth by That Eminent Scientist, Camille Flammarion, in the Chicago Sunday Examiner.

Our brains are composed of molecules which do not touch and which are in constant vibration. But why should I speak of brains? Cannot thought, will, psychic force, whatever its nature may be, act on a being to whom it is attached by the sympathetic and indissoluble ties of intellectual relationship? Do not the palpitations of the heart suddenly transmit themselves to the heart which beats in unison with ours? Are we to admit in the case of apparitions that the mind of the dead has really assumed bodily form when near the observer? To me this doesn't seem necessary. In our dreams we see persons who are not before our closed eyes at all. We see them perfectly, as well as in broad daylight. We speak to them, converse with them. Surely it is neither our retina nor our optic nerve which sees them, any more than our ears hear them. Our brain cells alone are concerned in it.

Certain apparitions may be objective, exterior and substantial, others may be subjective—in that case the being who manifests himself would act from a distance on the being who sees, and this influence on the brain would determine the interior vision which appears exterior, as in dreams, but may be purely subjective and interior.

Just as the thought, a memory, may arouse an image in our minds which will for a moment give him an illusion of reality. It is not the retina which is affected by a positive reality; it is the optic thalmi of the brain which are excited. In what way? The present state of our physiological and psychological knowledge does not teach us that.

Such are the most rational inductions which it seems possible to derive from many unexplained though very old phenomena, for the history of all people from the remotest antiquity has preserved examples of it which it would be very difficult to deny or efface.

But, it will be asked, will we admit in our age of experimental methods and positive science that a dying or even a dead man can communicate with any one? What is a dead man?

A human being dies every second on the globe—that is 86,400 a day, about 31,000,000 a year, or more than 3,000,000,000 in a century. In ten centuries more than thirty thousand millions of corpses have been committed to the earth and given back to general circulation under the form of various products—water, air, gas, etc. If we keep an account of the diminution of human population as we count up the historic ages, we find for ten thousand years at least two hundred thousand millions of human bodies have been formed from the earth and from the atmosphere by respiration and nourishment and have returned to it. Molecules of oxygen, hydrogen, carbonic acid and nitrogen, which have constituted these bodies, have enriched the earth and been given back to atmospheric circulation.

Yes, the earth we inhabit is now formed partly of the thousands of millions of brains which have thought, the thousands of millions of organisms who have lived. We walk over the remains of our ancestors as our descendants will walk over ours. The brows of thinkers, eyes which have looked, smiled and wept, mouths which have sung of love, rosy lips and marble bosoms, mothers' flesh and blood—all who have lived, all who have thought, lie in the same earth. It would be difficult now to take a single step on the planet without walking on the remains of the dead; it would be difficult to breathe without inhaling the breath of the dead.

Should we think that this be all of humanity, or shouldn't we rather think that it may have left something nobler, grander and more spiritual? Does each of us give the universe when we breathe our last nothing but sixty or eighty kilograms of flesh and bone which will disintegrate and return to the elements? Does not the soul which animates us endure by the same right as every molecule of oxygen or nitrogen or iron?

We have no right to affirm that man is composed solely of material elements and that the thinking faculty is only one property of the organization. On the contrary, we have the strongest reasons for admitting that the soul is an individual whole, that it is that which governs the molecule to organize the living form of the human body.

What becomes of the invisible and intangible molecules which have composed our body during life? What becomes of the equally invisible and intangible souls? It may be thought that they also reincarnate themselves in new organisms, each in accordance with its nature, its faculties and its destiny.

The soul belongs to the psychic world. Doubtless there is on earth an innumerable quantity of souls still heavy and coarse, barely free from matter and incapable of conceiving intellectual realities. But there are others who live and study in contemplation, in the culture of the psychic or spiritual world, and these cannot remain imprisoned in the earth, but must continue to live.

What is the inner nature of the soul? What are its ways of manifestation? When does its memory become permanent, and maintain with certainty a conscious identity? Under what variety of forms and substance can it live? What extent of space can it overcome? What is the order of intellectual relationship which exists among the different planets of the same system? What is the germinating force which sows the world with seed? When can we put ourselves in communication with the neighboring planets? When shall we penetrate the profound secret of destiny?

All these things are mysteries to-day, but they will surely not always remain so, and the time will come when we shall be able to answer each and every one of these questions which are now puzzling our minds.

UNDER SPIRIT CONTROL.

This Man Never Touched Brush or Pallette Until He Was 60 Years Old and His Work Shows Ability.

Believing that the spirit hand of Raphael, the prince of painters, guides his own, Abel Taylor has painted more than a thousand pictures. He refuses to sell any of them for profit, and declares that he never touched pallette or brush until he was past sixty years of age, and he has been painting excellent pictures for the last fifteen years.

He says that the spirit of his sister told him that it was the spirit of Raphael who guided his hand in painting the pictures, and he is now firmly convinced that this is true, although he was skeptical at first. Mr. Taylor lives in the so-called President's cottage, now one of the dormitories of the Soldiers' Home. The walls and corridors of the cottage are lined with the productions of the artist.

A quiet, earnest man in manner is Mr. Taylor, who never smiles, and who speaks of his spiritual experiences reverently.

"I never sell my paintings," he says, "for more than the paint and the canvas cost me."

A suggestion that he part with some "spirit" photogarphs, in which he recognizes departed kindred, brings forth a pained and shocked expression.

The Beginning.

The beginning of Mr. Taylor's intercourse with the inhabitants of the spirit world, as narrated by himself was dramatic.

"At that time," he says "I was unfortunately addicted to taking liquor, sometimes in injudicious quantities. On one occasion, when I had fallen off in this wise, I was resting upon one of the benches in the home grounds.

"My only companion was a bottle, containing the liquid demon that makes such havoc in this world. As I took this bottle forth, for the purpose of adding to my spiritual and mortal misery, it suddenly shivered into 1,000 pieces, though without injuring me. My first emotion was one of chagrin, but this soon passed away, and I fell into a deep slumber.

"The incident made no remarkable impression upon my mind, though the manner in which the flask had been smashed was truly amazing. Then a friend of mine induced me to attend a Spiritualistic seance. While here the spirit of my sister came forth, and told me that it was she who had broken the bottle of liquor that day in the grounds. She reasoned with me against my habits of intemperance, and then told me that I should become a painter. 'But,' says I, 'I never handled a paint brush in my life!'

Raphael Will Guide You.

"'No matter,' she says, 'the spirit of Raphael is here, and says he will guide you.' Then she gave me directions to go home and secure the necessary materials, and await the coming of my spirit guide. Sure enough, one day as I sat helplessly before the untouched canvas, with my brushes and paint, the inspiration came. It was like an electric shock passing over me, at first, and then clearly in my mind's eye, I saw the scene I was going to paint. It was a bit of woodland through which a stream ran, and I recognized it at once as being near my birthplace in England. Often as a boy I had spent happy hours in this spot, fishing and romping with companions.

"These I began to paint, and somehow it didn't seem so difficult. The picture in my mind began rapidly to take form and color on the canvas. I worked faster and faster, and, in a couple of hours, there was the picture. Here it is, and you can see for yourself that, although somewhat cruder than my later work, it is not so bad for an utter novice.

A Thousand Pictures.

"Since then, I have painted more than a thousand pictures, and have sent them all over the country. Some points in my work have attracted the notice of artists, who can hardly believe that I have never taken lessons. But to those who do not know the influence of the spirits it is useless to endeavor to explain. Latterly, I have actually seen the hand of my spirit guide, who I have been told, is none other than Raphael, upon my wrist as I paint. At night the spirits come around me, and I see them plainly. I have frequent conversations with my sister, who has wrought this great good in my life, and other relatives. When I first began to see the spirits, and talk with them, my room-mates thought I was losing my mind, and some of them were disposed to put a wrong construction upon the matter in the light of my former drinking habits. Some got to display a measure of superstitious fear.

"Now, however, I believe my comrades realize the situation as a serious one, and as I carry on my conversations with my spirit friends in a low tone, they do not mind. Then, too, I usually meet my companions in the other life at a very good friend's house. This gentleman is a medium, and he has set aside a room in his house for my special use. Here I sit alone and a music box is set going. Then I have the most beautiful manifestations, the spirits coming around me, and calling me back to my past life. My sister and I talk over old times, and you cannot think how soothing to my mind these occasions are.

"Sometimes my spirit guide comes to me in the night, and once actually induced me to commence and finish a painting in the dark. There was absolutely no light in the room, yet the ghostly hand guided mine with the utmost facility and, in the course of a couple of hours, I had dashed off one of my very best efforts. It is a scene in a Californian forest, which I recall very well, for it was here that upon a merry march one day we halted to rest. The trees are so lofty as to cause the lower portion of their trunks to be enveloped in semi-darkness though, as you perceive, a single brilliant shaft of sunlight shoots through the gloom, to fall upon the somber bark of the giant of the forest. Many persons think this picture is my masterpiece.

"I assuredly believe in the genuineness of spirit photography, for I clearly recognize relatives and friends who have 'passed over.' Here, for instance, is an unmistakable likeness of my sister, who is always near me. In this photograph my guide stands near me. In the upper portion of this picture, you will see some spirits as they are just after leaving the body. They are small, and not developed, but they float lightly and happily through the ether, from which they will eventually gain the power to materialize more completely and perfectly. These spirits are often, as they are just released from the body, tenuous in the extreme, but they gather the power to materialize very rapidly.

"I shall go on painting after I have passed over, I believe, either through the instrumentality of a mortal, or in the spirit world. I have gained through this means, peace of mind, and release from the thralldom of the grosser bodily senses. And I am always looking forward to better things in the future."—The Washington, D. C., Times Magazine.

The Michigan State Spiritualists' Association.

While you have not heard from us lately, let me say we have been busy. We have held two mass meetings so far since the new officers were installed; one in Grand Rapids, from June 7 to 14. This was in the form of a camp meeting, as a large auditorium tent was used at Briggs Park. Grand Rapids has always responded nobly, and this time was no exception, and this was a large undertaking, the expenses alone being $150.81, and we balanced even.

All workers donated their services, we only paying railroad expenses. The workers were: Dr. Geo. B. Warne, N. S. A. president; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, of Detroit; Will J. Erwood, of Elkhart, Ind.; Mrs. Morrell, Mrs. Belle Fuller, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Miss Emma Gibbs, and James E. Walker, president M. S. S. A., all of Grand Rapids, and many others who assisted with the music and in various ways. We wish to thank all who assisted us; while we may not mention all names, they are not forgotten, and their good work will live forever.

The next meeting was held at Haslett Park, Aug. 15. Haslett Park camp being the only camp that would consider giving the M. S. S. A. a day They not only donated their speaker, Dr. Angus, of Port Huron, but they donated the gate receipts for the day.

Dr. Angus and James E. Walker, of Grand Rapids, with Mrs. Flora Fulghum, of Battle Creek, as message bearer. She is one of the young workers, and her work was fine and greatly appreciated, every message being recognized. The Wattles family arrived on the grounds that day, as they were to fill an engagement the following week, and favored the friends with several of their songs, which were greatly enjoyed. The friends responded nobly to the call for money, about $25 being raised.

I wish to extend to the Haslett Park Association the sincere thanks of the M. S. S. A. for its courtesy and assistance, and to all the friends who assisted with money or in any way; their efforts will reap a harvest in the great by and by.

MRS. EMMA SNOW HOYT,
Secretary M. S. S. A.
Battle Creek, Mich.

The Clinton, Iowa, Camp.

Every room and tent on the grounds was ocupied and crowded to their uttermost with cots, and many came in the morning of the 23d, thinking to have one more week on dear, beautiful Mt. Pleasant Park.

Our worthy president, who so nobly served us last year, was re-elected for the ensuing year. Brother Ireland, of Tampa, Florida, who came to camp with his dear, good wife and darling mother, won the hearts of all, and was elected vice-president of our association.

All who attended our camp put their hands down in their pockets, and most generously contributed to the association, as did the Woman's Union.

The speakers were excellent, having great talent and wonderful inspiration; such as Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Dr. Peebles and J. W. Ring. Our message bearers, Mrs. Laura Jones, Edgar Emerson and Mrs. Eva McCoy, did excellent work.

Our dear Mollie B. Anderson was re-elected secretary, and with a great majority.

Our grounds were more beautiful than ever.

Every medium, I am sure, did well, financially, and looked happy and contented.

Dr. T. Wilkins was welcomed by all and all regretted his short stay.

Miss Harlow was the joy of the camp, and all expressed their love and greetings to her on the evening of our closing exercises. I do not think we ever had a more happy closing meeting, and all predicted a much more prosperous year in 1909.

The board of trustees is a strong one, and will be very careful in its selection of talent for next year's camp, and see that all workers are worthy and up-to-date in giving the truth of our philosophy. All mediums are invited to our camp.

Long live the M. V. S. A.

ELIZABETH J. JAQUET.

Lake Brady, O., Spiritualist Camp.

This camp closes Sunday, Aug. 30. Since our former report, Aug. 8, we have enjoyed intellectual feasts each Sunday from the following named speakers and platform mediums;

Aug. 9 came Miss Elizabeth Harlow, and gave us two fine addresses. Much has already been published of this worthy advocate's electrifying inspirational powers, to convince aspiring mortals of our beautiful philosophy, and its relation to evolution and religious progress.

Sunday, Aug. 16, Mrs. Francis Spaulding occupied our rostrum twice, and Monday evening again. Her addresses bring our spirit-loved ones very near, and she will long hold a warm place in many a kindred heart, both upon mundane and spiritual planes of soul life, for the communion made possible by her beautiful inspirational mediumship, both in her addresses and loving spirit messages.

Aug. 23, Mr. W. V. Nicum gave two impressive eloquent lectures. Your correspondent was message bearer at the close of Mr. Nicum's address, also concluding the service in the afternoon of Miss Harlow's lectures.

There is closer tie which is growing stronger at every gathering upon these sacred grounds, and without any doubt next season a greater work will be accomplished. Our management and members feel that successful currents are tending toward this chosen center of advanced spirit intelligences.

Believing in all good and acting in accord therewith, we have knowledge supporting and sustaining our efforts for the future of our cause in all our camps, local societies, State and National organizations. Some of our societies and camps may have failed in one sense; in another they have but only disorganized to rebuild better the next time.

The names of the newly elected board of trustees of Lake Brady Camp Association: Mr. Hunger, Mr. Eckert and Mrs. Lena Deibolt, of Cleveland; Mr. Ford C. Myers, of Myersville; Mr. Randall, of Cuyahoga Falls; Dr. Cox, of Canton; Mrs. Mary E. Gaskill, of Lake Brady; Robert Miller, of Akron; Mr. Sexhaur, of Canton; Mr. A. Hasbrook, of Ravenna; Mrs. Mary E. Fisher and Mrs. Elizabeth Mee, of Lake Brady.

MARY C. WARD.

Mt. Pleasant Park Camp, Clinton, Ia.

The M. V. S. A. held its closing feast at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Ia., Aug. 23. The camp, taken throughout the entire four weeks, was a decided success. Greater harmony reigned than had been at Mt. Pleasant Park for a long time. All seemed to enjoy themselves and feel they were greatly benefited for having visited the camp, as indeed they should, under the management of such a good, grand soul as their president, Mr. E. L. Kilby. All of the lectures were fine and highly instructive.

The camp was opened by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond giving the first lecture. Her ability is known throughout our country, Benj. F. Wilson closing the week.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, who is loved by all that hear him, possesses a wonderful knowledge of ancient and modern Spiritualism. I hope he will live many years and be given strength to voice the great truth of Life Eternal to humanity. After Dr. Peebles came our beloved brother, John W. Ring, whose wonderful inspiration is a revelation to all who have the pleasure of hearing his clear, well poised voice. All who have heard him, must surely realize such grand, beautiful, inspiration can come only through a pure, highly developed soul. Mr. Ring's presence is a suggestion of sunshine to all.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow closed the season of lectures to good attendance. Miss Harlow is another that scatters sunshine wherever she goes, with her grand, beautiful lectures. The message bearers were good, Mrs. Jones and Mr. Emerson being exceptionally good. In addition to the regular program were two lectures by Mr. Ireland, of Tampa, Florida, one by our good brother, Mr. Emerson. The independent mediums on the grounds seemed to give good satisfaction. All felt pleased with the attendance, having people from many states.

We all hope the coming season of 1909 will have a large attendance, as surely the beautiful camp deserves.

Suited With Grand Ledge Camp.

I have just returned from Grand Ledge camp, where I spent about ten days, and would like to add just a word in praise of the many I met there.

Grand Ledge, to my idea, is the ideal camp of Michigan in regard to scenery and natural surroundings; this coupled with the workers connected with the camp, makes it an ideal place for a rest, and this is what I went for, and was not disappointed. It is here that harmony prevails. The officers were fitted for their respective places, at the same time looking out for the comfort of their guests.

I wish to state that this camp was the only one out of four in Michigan that extended a hand to a new worker, who asked their confidence. This to me is one of the ways to progress, to encourage the young worker, for to them we will have to look ere long, and the helping hand of older workers is the greatest incentive to those trying to gain confidence.

Long live Grand Ledge, and every one of its noble band of workers, for they are sowing the seeds of right and harmony, love and justice.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
OR
Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

The Cause in San Jose, Cal.

Perhaps a brief outline of our work in San Jose might be of interest. Since the report of our President some time ago, we have had well attended meetings, and good lectures every Sunday evening. This is not the result of chance, but by the untiring efforts and zealous work of Brother and Sister Howe, who use every means in their power to make the meetings so interesting that we generally have a large attendance, excellent instrumental and vocal music, a poem by some member of the society, a good lecture by Brother or Sister Howe, followed by readings from flowers or other articles or spirit messages by mediums who are present.

When I look over the people assembled I see but few of the old familiar faces that were constant attendants fifteen years ago; almost all have passed to the higher life, and I believe that they are still interested and striving to assist those who are doing their level best to carry on the work—the promulgation of the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism.

At a business meeting of members on August 2, delegates were elected to attend the California State Convention of Spiritualists, to be held in San Francisco, September 4, 5 and 6, this being the first time since the earthquake that the convention has been brought from the south. Five delegates and five alternates were elected. We also have nine delegates at large, 6 ordained and three endorsed workers, so we hope to have a good representation, and it is expected much good will be accomplished at the convention.

As we do not use our hall on Sunday afternoons, we have rented to "The People's Progressive League," a free platform for the discussion of all subjects of live interest, non-sectarian and non-partisan. A large attendance greeted the Prohibition speaker, C. J. Hall, Esq., from Los Angeles, who, being in this place to attend a convention, very kindly and willingly accepted an invitation to speak for the League. I think everyone was glad to hear him. Next Sunday, A. S. Howe will speak on evolution.

Under the auspices of our society Mrs. Lucille Kenworthy, formerly of Seattle, gave an entertainment last month, assisted by local talent, consisting of instrumental and vocal music, recitations, both comic and serious, and did ample justice to each in turn. The audience was delighted and wish to see her again. She is just beginning as a spiritual speaker, and we are glad to give the hand of welcome and encouragement to those who are striving for the right and the upbuilding of Truth's Temple.

I hope Dr. Wilkins will be able to count many dollars for receipts for his beautiful poems. I intend to have a copy myself. They are adapted to almost every occasion. I take great pleasure in reading all the poems published in The Progressive Thinker and have memorized quite a number of them, as I am acquainted with some of their authors. They almost seem like a personal interview, and I think they give pleasure to others as well when I sometimes speak one at our meetings.

MORE THAN A BELIEF OR HOPE.

Immortal Life a Matter of Absolute Knowledge.

To the Editor:—I wish to tell you of an experience that came under my observation, proving the truth of the statement that the silent but subtle power of the spiritual world is not confined to any sect or party, but its influence is felt by all of earth's inhabitants.

August 14, I attended the funeral of Mr. Michael Claus of Niskayuna, N. Y. He was an old friend whom I had known for the last forty years. The family were members of the Reform Church. The pastor Rev. Ditmire stated that when he was informed that the father and brother had passed over the words of Paul came to him: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, eternal in the heavens." He emphasized very strongly the fact that it was more than a mere belief and a hope of its possibility, but it was absolute knowledge, a consciousness of the truth of immortal life that could not be questioned.

The feelings of sympathy and consolation that were extended to the family were beautifully expressed by citing them to the fact that as each week, month and year passed by they would be nearing the time when they could meet those who had passed over and hold communion face to face, and where the grief of parting would be unknown. That it was only a vail that intervened between them and that beautiful city where the arisen one had found a dwelling place, and that in the silent watches of the night they could hold sweet communion with the one who had gone on before.

The only thing that symbolized mourning was the small crape placed on the altar by the undertaker. The mother and daughters and other relatives were robed in white, beautifully illustrating the spiritual resurrection. The I. O. O. F., of which the arisen brother was a member, were represented, and their ceremony at the grave touched the tender feelings of those present. I thought how near related we all are when we near the borderland of that country which is to be our eternal home; and how foolish it is to contend over mere differences of opinion regarding the externalities of life, when all of the riches, honors, rank and titles will there be as useless rubbish; but if we seek to do good to our fellow beings we will be laying up a treasure that will be our blessed inheritance when the mortal is laid away and we enter into the fullness of the immortal life.

Proofs of the World Invisible.

As Set Forth by That Eminent Scientsit, Sir Alfred Russel Wallace in the Chicago Tribune.—"The Man of the Future Portrayed by Another Eminent Writer."

That intelligent beings may exist around and among us unperceived during our whole lives, and yet capable, under certain circumstances, of making their presence known by acting on matter will be inconceivable to some, and will be doubted by many more, but we venture to say that no man acquainted with the latest discoveries and the highest speculations of modern science will deny its possibility. The existence of such superhuman intelligences, if proved, would only add another and more striking illustration than any we have yet received of how small a portion of the great cosmos our senses give us cognizance of.

Even such skeptics on the subject of the supernatural as Hume or Strauss probably would not deny the validity of the conception of such intelligences, or the abstract possibility of their existence. They would, perhaps, say: "We have no sufficient proof of the fact; the difficulty of conceiving their mode of existence is great; most intelligent men pass their whole lives in total ignorance of any such intelligences; it is amongst the ignorant and superstitious alone that the belief in them prevails. We cannot deny the possibility you postulate, but we must have the most clear and satisfactory proof before we can receive it as a fact."

All the most powerful and universal forces of nature now are referred to minute vibrations of an almost infinitely attenuated form of matter; and by the grandest generalizations of modern science the most varied natural phenomena have been traced back to those recondite forces. Light, heat, electricity, magnetism, and probably vitality and gravitation are believed to be but modes of motion of a space filling ether; and there is not a single manifestation of force or development of beauty but is derived from one or other of these.

The whole surface of the globe has been modeled and remodeled, mountains have been cut down to plains and plains have been grooved and furrowed into mountains and valleys, all by the power of ethereal heat vibrations set in motion by the sun. Metallic veins and glittering crystals buried deep down under miles of rock and mountain have been formed by a distinct set of forces developed by vibrations of the same ether.

Every green blade and bright blossom that gladdens the surface of the earth owes its power of growth and life to those vibrations we call heat and light, while in animals and man the powers of that wondrous telegraph whose battery is the brain, and whose wires are nerves, probably are due to the manifestations of a yet totally distinct mode of motion in the same all pervading ether. In some cases we are able to perceive the effects of these recondite forces yet more clearly.

We see a magnet without contact or impact of any ponderable matter capable of our imagination of exciting force, yet overcoming gravity and inaction, raising and moving solid bodies. We behold electricity in the form of lightning riving the solid oak, throwing down lofty towers and steeples, or destroying man and beast, sometimes without a wound.

And these manifestations of force are produced by a form of matter so impalpable that only by its effects does it become known to us. With such phenomena everywhere around us we must admit that if intelligences of what we may call an ethereal nature do exist we have no reason to deny them the use of these ethereal forces which are the overflowing fountain from which all forms, all motion, all life upon the earth originate.

Our limited senses and intellects enable us to receive impressions from and to trace some of the varied manifestations of ethereal motion under phases so distinct as light, heat, electricity, and gravity; but no thinker for a moment will assert that there can be no other possible modes of action of this primal element.

To a race of blind men how utterly inconceivable would be the faculty of vision, how absolutely unknowable the existence of light and its myriad manifestations of form, color, and beauty. Without this one sense our knowledge of nature and of the universe would not be a thousandth part of what it is. By its absence our intellect would have been dwarfed, we cannot say to what extent, and we must almost believe that our mind nature never could have been fully developed without it and that we hardly would have attained to the dignity and supremacy of man. Yet it is possible and even probable that there may be modes of sensation as superior to all ours as is sight to that of talk and hearing.

The Man of the Future.

As man evolves in spirituality and transcends any heights he ever has attained in the past cycles of his existence the third eye, the eye of the soul and spiritual understanding will again come into requisition and the old mythological stories will again be realized in actual living. The body is simply the irresponsible organ, the tool of the psychic if not of the spiritual man. And it is only in accordance with the evolution of the man himself that the body can develop.

The superior vision of the coming race will bring within the ken of the living man of the world the sights of the other world which now is unseen, although enveloping as throughout our lives.

Heaven, life after death, purgatory, the survival of souls, their return to the earth after a period of blissful repose in the heavenly state, all will be matters that can no more be subjects of doubt than can the present observations of science.

Doctor Will Be Clairvoyant.

Mrs. Besant calls attention to the fact that the doctor no longer will be obliged to guess at a disease from outside symptoms, but will diagnose by vision and not by reasoning. Some men already are beginning to diagnose by the use of what are called clairvoyant faculties. Instead of the doctor being shut out by the density of the physical body he uses the clairvoyant, whose marvelous sight pierces through the physical matter, who can see the disease and can see exactly what is wrong with any one of the organs of the body; he, by this vision, giving the needed information to the doctor, enables him to act definitely and to trace the effects of his remedies. The future physicians will be the clairvoyants.

So with chemistry. How much more might the chemist do than he can do to-day if his eyes were opened, how much more if he could trace all the stages of the combination of materials, if he could make his compounds by vision instead of by guess work, awaiting the result of an experiment ere he can be certain of the effect.

So with psychology. Men will communicate with each other through the swift exchange and intercommunication of thought with thought instead of by the slow methods of pen and print. Thought will speed from brain to brain. Separation will be a thing of the past. No continent or ocean will be able to divide man from man, friend from friend, or relative from relative.

When men will have attained this plane of consciousness they will be able to communicate with each other directly, and that whether the people with whom they speak are at their side or across the ocean or "dead." When man will have perfected his astral vehicle he will be within constant reach of those he loves, separation having lost its pain and death its power to divide. The two greatest sorrows that oppress humanity, separation and death, will be sorrows of the past. There will be perpetual communion and presence.

New Colors Will Be Visible.

Art will be marvelously enriched. There will be new forms which are indescribable to the present day humanity. For the astral plane opens up a new dimension, a new plane of expression, the fourth dimension, superadded to the third. There will also be colors dazzling beyond imagination, colors unknown in the physical world, that take existence in the stubtler matter of the astral plane, "colors that none can describe because a color that in not known cannot be understood by verbal descriptions."

Later will come the development of consciousness on the mental plane. This will mean that spoken words will no longer be necessary. Were there an orator and audience, instead of hearing the orator's eloquence, articulate sounds that reach the ear and convey only imperfectly and inadequately but a small portion of the thought, they would see thought as it really is; "thought springing out before the eyes in radiant color, beautiful in sound, exquisite in shape," and they would be spoken in the harmonies of music, in color and form, until the whole hall would be full of music and color and shapes.

The man on the physical plane has his windows of the soul, his eyes, his ears, his nose. But the man who is conscious on the mental plane receives knowledge flowing in upon him on every side. "Not through senses as we know them, but through a single sense that answers to every vibration that comes from without. And as man goes down into the tower; he can only see as much as the eyes and the ears and the nose, the little windows in the wall, enable him to know of the outside world; for the senses are only windows, and the wall of the body shuts us in, and only as we rise above the body are we able really to see the world around us in its glory, in its beauty, and in its wonders."

Read History From Nature's Records.

Pen and print will no longer be needed for men of the advanced humanity, nor for intercommunication, nor for the preservation of records. In studying the past the coming race will turn to the pages of nature herself and call upon the imperishable records kept forever in the everlasting memory of nature, which holds the literal "natural history" of the world, the Akashic records. These are the imprints on the subtle matter of the finer worlds of every act of humanity of the past and of every fact of human history, whether individual or collective, the story of an insignificant man or of a powerful nation, of a society or of any one member of that society.

"The time will come when all history will be written from that instead of in the ignorant way that it is written now, and men when they want to know the past will look back into the imperishable records and use them for swifter development, utilizing past experience to promote the swifter growth of humanity."

Mme. Blavatsky teaches that even now under our eyes the new race and races are preparing to be formed, and that it is in America that the transformation will take place, and has already silently commenced. Pure Anglo-Saxons hardly 300 years ago, the Americans of the United States have already become a nation apart, and, owing to a strong admixture of various nationalities and intermarriage, almost a race sui generis, not only mentally but physically.

Americans are, in short, the germs of the sixth sub-race, and in some few hundred years more will become most decidedly the pioneers of that race which must succeed to the present European or fifth sub-race, in all its new characteristics. After this, in about 25,000 years, they will launch into preparations for the seventh sub-race, until, in consequence of cataclysms, the first series of those which must one day destroy Europe and still later the whole Aryan race, the sixth root race, will have appeared on the stage.

Abnormalities Will Become Usual.

When shall this be? queries Blavatsky. All we know is that it will silently come into existence so silently, indeed, that for long milleniums will its pioneers, the peculiar children who will grow into peculiar men and women, be regarded as anomalous, abnormal oddities physically and mentally. Then, as they increase and their numbers become with every age greater, one day they will awake and find themselves in a majority.

Then the present men will begin to be regarded as exceptional mongrels, until they die out in civilized lands, surviving only in small groups on islands, the mountain peaks of to-day, where they will vegetate, degenerate, and finally die out, perhaps millions of years hence, as the Aztecs have, as Nyam-Nyam and the dwarfish Moola Koorumba of the Nilghiri hills are dying. All these peoples are the remnants of once mighty races, the recollection of whose existence has entirely died out of the remembrance of modern generations, just as we shall vanish from the memory of the sixth race humanity.

Some time after the birth of the new race, it is said, a new continent, the sixth, will have appeared above the new waters on the face of the globe so as to receive the new stranger. To it also will emigrate and there will settle all those who will be fortunate enough to escape the general disaster which will repeat the deluge chronicled in the Bible and all other world Scriptures.

STATE OF WASHINGTON.

President R. F. Little Writes of the Work Done, and the Plans for the Future.

Just before entering upon the work of our annual encampment I penned a few lines to The Progressive Thinker with refernce to general conditions in the state of Washington, and at the same time threatened to repeat the infliction at close of camp work. As I like to keep my promises, when not too inconvenient, I would like to continue my review of the work in this state.

I am anxious to do this at this time, because the attention of the United States and Canada, and possibly other important points, is centered upon us.

I know this is so, for the entire press of the state is solemnly affirming it. It cannot be that we are egotistical.

Is not the greatest exposition of modern times to be held in Seattle in the rapidly approaching year of 1909. And is not Washington presenting the last opening for the migratory tendencies of the American people? Why should we not reach out for every good thing in sight, and invite it to "walk into our parlor"—with its magnificent surroundings of mountain and valley, of lake and ocean; its brainy cosmopolitan inhabitants, and its boundless resources of mill and mine.

Whether we will or no, the tide of life is setting strongly in this direction. And the fact is forced upon our attention that thousands of our "own way" of thinking are joining in the rush.

We are desirous, therefore, of capturing as many of this class as possible, and of shaping our mutual interests into tangible form.

Apropos our late encampment, I wish to state that it was one of the most harmonious and effective gathering I ever attended. The unity of purpose and willingness to respond to all proper demands, manifested by those present, was truly encouraging. I think I have never witnessed a more unselfish concentration upon the important work in hand than was manifested this year. Only one result could follow this earnest devotion to the cause of Spiritualism. It follows that we are drawn together in firmer friendship and enduring loyalty.

Of course we should have realized a sense of incompleteness, had there not been an occasional ripple of annoyance. A cross vibration is sometimes conducive to good health, in that it calls into action functions that otherwise might lay dormant.

The "Kitchen Vaudeville" was called a little earlier in the routine than usual; but a change of "chef" brought a placidity in the kitchen which easily and naturally affected the entire camp.

For the promotion of harmony, there are few things so potent in camp life as a well ordered "base of supplies." Every well trained corps of managers will keep an "eagle eye" on the curriculum of the cook-room. Any weakness in this direction spreads with a velocity that electricity cannot rival. But with a strong and well balance culinary department, a guarantee of "peace with honor" may safely be given.

I may say also with equal delight and pleasure, that the little axes that are sometimes presented at these annual gatherings in this and other states were not in evidence. They had all been put in good form, evidently, and we were spared the doubtful necesity of devoting any time or attention to that class of work. And all united in securing the greatest possible good to the encampment—and the cause represented by it. So may it ever be.

The attendance during the week was not so large as I have known it to be, and my anticipations as to attendance from abroad were not fully realized. This was owing, no doubt, in a large measure to the fact that we had not thus assembled for two years; and the further fact that we made but little effort to attract attention from abroad in any public manner. This we are preparing to remedy the coming year, and this notice through The Progressive Thinker is a feature of the work.

The class and quality of the work done, however, amply atoned for any deficiency in the direction named. As time passes, we have a right to expect a gradual improvement in our work. It was plainly evident that our psychics had gained a clearer knowledge of, and firmer hold upon, the channels of inspiration and of positive demonstration. Some of the best work I ever witnesed was given from our rostrum. It was shown also that all our workers realized the obligation resting upon them as creators and molders of modern thought. In short, the earnestness of our public workers is a source of strength to the officials selected to in some measure shape the policies of the coming time.

As a parting thought upon this subject, I would like to pay tribute to the hearty co-operation accorded during the past year, by every one with whom I came in contact. Few can realize how much easier the work becomes, and how much more can be accomplished when such conditions prevail. The best results can only be obtained when the cause is first and and above all other considerations.

Returning to the coming year of 1909 let me say that we are now inaugurating our plan of campaign, and I am authorized by the management to call attention to our plans. The State Association owns a tract of ten acres, located about nine miles from Tacoma, and accessible by rail. This tract is platted in lots and streets. These lots are not for sale, but we lease them for from one to five years at $2.50 a year.

The locator can erect a residence to suit the purse, or we can rent you a tent at a nominal cost. We have a good well of water and fuel may be obtained for the gathering.

There are people located all around us, who work or do business in Tacoma, going to the city in the morning and returning in the evening. This year we are planning to erect an auditorium of good size, thus providing ample accommodation for gatherings appropriate to our work. The ground is already used as a neighborhood resort for boating, picnicing and other wholesome amusements.

If any of our friends desire a temporary home, this furnishes a fine opportunity, and is now, or at any time available. We are not attempting to divert any one from well defined plans of their own, but desire to let it be known that this opportunity exists. As a matter of fact we are continuing in some form our regular encampment enterprise. The "opening season," so called, will continue throughout the year. We will not break our psychic connection with this, our chosen center. Doubtless, with the spring and summer months of 1909, regular campers will be located, and finally the annual encampment of several weeks will be given.

If this reaches the attention of any desiring to avail themselves of its provisions, please communicate with Secretary D. D. Foster, 112½ Pike street, Seattle, or with myself. "General Delivery" should be placed on all communications addressed to me.

Now, friends and co-workers, do not pass this by, as simply a communi written in the spirit of co-operation. If you can come to this state do not "scatter out." Keep in line with the work.

I am reminded of that old and homely saying of "Birds of a feather should flock together." Spiritualists should grasp and apply its philosophical meaning.

If not—why not?

AN IMPRESSIVE ASSERTION.

Mourner's Weed a Menace to Health and Happiness.

I know a woman whom nature meant to be happy. She endowed her with the priceless possession of a sunny spirit, a disposition impregnable to ill-nature and a laugh so cheery and spontaneous that the grumpiest misanthrope could not resist its infection.

A year ago death to a relative, and the rigid adherence to conventions inculcated by an old-fashioned parent, cause her to substitute the conventional black for bright colors she had worn from girlhood. With the gay ribbons disappeared her happy laugh and bubbling optimism. She was not griefstricken. It was a bereavement merely in name, but her sensitive disposition succumbed to the somber colors that continually impressed her imagination with their gloom.

I know another woman who lost her husband more than a year ago. He was not much of a husband even as husbands go. He was too lazy to work and spent most of his time at the corner saloon, while she gave music lessons to pay the butcher and grocer, and to send the children to school.

There was no heart-break when he died. Even the children shed few tears for the father who never had filled a father's place. But custom demanded that the widow array herself in the black garments of woe, and she complied. She still wears them, and they diffuse a melancholy atmosphere throughout a home that otherwise would be far happier than when it was cursed with a drunken husband and father.

What a farce is this mistaken sentiment that saddens the lives of the living and aids not the dead! Why mar the sunshine with the shadow of the tomb? Why enshrine sorrow as a fetich and nourish grief?

The mourning habit is at war with both religion and common sense. We teach the doctrine of the resurrection in our churches. We affirm that to die is to enter into life. We tempt the imagination by visions of golden streets and celestial music and happiness forever, without end. Then when the buffeted soul has passed, and the trouble-worn body finds its everlasting rest, we make of grief something to be cherished and preserved. We clothe ourselves in the insignia of despair, when, if our belief is sincere, we should think of the lost one as having emerged triumphantly from shadow into sunshine, from stress and tempest and disappointed hopes into the placid restfulness of eternal peace.

Those who still remain also have a right to be considered. Life is none too satisfying at its best, and it is the duty of all humanity to aid in making this world as cheerful an abiding place as human frailty and selfishness will permit. What right have we to ask the world to share our sorrow, to flourish our badge of bereavement in the faces of the merry, and carry with us everywhere the suggestion of unforgotten grief?

It is time the world was done with this morbid and medieval custom. Consideration for the living will not make our love for the dead less sacred and abiding. Let us enshrine their memory in our hearts, not burlesque it in crepe upon our backs.

When I come to the end of this uncertain pathway I want to leave no heritage of sorrow to those I love. For them the flowers will bloom, the birds sing merrily and the joys of life flow on. They will love me best who wear for me only blossoms as bright and fragrant as those they heap upon my grave.—Madaline Deane, in the Chicago Journal.

LIFE'S ALLY.

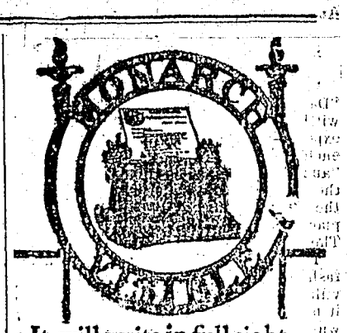
The hysterical cry
Goes repeatedly by,
"There is no Death to-day!
'Twas all a mistake
Of our forefather's make."
We've cast the mistake away."

But the cry is absurd
As the beast and the bird,
And the tree and the flower can say;
And our relatives all
Who have answered a call
By deserting their bodies of clay.

From life to life we cannot go
Without the aid of Death,
The power that frees us here below
And speeds our parting breath.

And when, in yonder spirit land
We reach a great divide,
And, lingering and bewildered stand
Before the other side,

With subtle force then Death again
Will twine his arms around us
To help us to a higher plane
Than that whereon he found us



Nor even then his work will cease:
A further change awaits us,
When Death, by causing fresh release,
To loftier spheres translates us.

Revealing thus his threefold power,
He acts as Life's ally,
And ever at the appointed hour
Unfailingly draws nigh.

And tho' his work beyond our sphere
Evades our earthly ken,
We all can see he's surely here
With every race of men.

Then drop the thoughtless parrot cry
That says: "There is no Death,"
At least until you've passed him by
To merge in mightier breath.

What Will Be the End?

This time it is Prof. Herbert L. Willett, of the University of Chicago Divinity School, who uses the following pointed language:

"No man ever lived who could perform a miracle, that is, could cause a change of God's laws of government of the universe. The Old Testament miracles, as narrated by Old Testament writers, are chiefly fanciful narratives based on fact or legend, and should not be taught children as a description of facts. You cannot teach children in school of the unchangeable laws of nature and then teach them in Sunday schools that these laws are at times broken by God or his prophets."

No person with brains can dispute Prof. Willett's position. It is identical with what has been taught in these columns for many years.

But here comes that colloquy between God and the snake, the latter walking on his tail before that event; a universal flood, with the windows of heaven opened to supply water, and all life destroyed other than that saved in a box, for such is the English of the word ark; the destruction of the cities of the plain, and turning Lot's wife into a pillar of salt; the conversion of the waters of Egypt into blood, and the dust into lice; opening a passage through the Dead Sea, at the command of a murderer; and thus on through hundreds of equal impossibilities; then a virgin bearing a son for God; a dove representing the Holy Ghost, declaring the baptized Jesus was his son; and all this climaxed by a fish, bearing in its mouth a coin to pay Jesus' taxes to Caesar. The Bible is filled with miracles, parables and allegories. These eliminated and what remains?

Yet each, to use Rev. Billy Sunday's often repeated classic, is a "lie."

But Rev. Willett is a Christian professor. His mission is to educate young men for the Christian ministry, in a great Christian university. Does not this fact alone show the trend to which all churches are rapidly hastening? When they shall comprehend the truth that the sacred book on which Christian teaching is founded, is fraudulent, what will the end be?

An Innovation.

The newspapers report that Judge Caruthers, of the Sixth Judicial District, at Bristow, Oklahoma, on recently convening court, requested a local preacher to open the court by prayer, asking all to stand. Wonder if this new innovation will become common? And what will be the next in order?

All Honor to the Pen.

Since the amicable settlement of the outrages perpetrated by British shipping on American commerce, by President Jefferson, there have been sixty-five international disputes and outrages adjusted by arbitration. Many of the noblest victories of the world have been won when needless battle flags were furled.

Perhaps.

"How do you suppose the story of Jonah and the whale originated?" inquired a studious and thoughtful Christian of his beginning-to-think pastor.

"Probably Jonah had been out on a bum, and that was the best excuse he could think of at the moment to offer his jealous wife for his protracted absence."

A Fish Story and a Fox Hunt.

We read the other day an account of a fishing adventure, wherein the late President Cleveland and Joe Jefferson were star actors. The President had failed to supply a sinker for his line, so as the story ran, he utilized his keys for that purpose. A vigorous bite, and an eel, five feet in length, was with difficulty pulled to shore. Then the sport commenced, as the victim was determined to regain its native element, whilst the disciples of Ik Walton were intent a choice transverse section should adorn their dinner table and minister to their famishing appetites. Each struggled with the lithe and slippery water-nymph. The latter wriggled and flapped himself in the contest some distance from shore. Loose for an instant he made a spring, caught its tail in its mouth, resolved itself into a hoop, and with the speed of an automobile when turned loose, it made a dash for the water, and gained it.

The narrator does not say the eel, when safe from danger, placed its thumb on its nose,, and wriggled his fingers with giggling laugh at his would-be captors.

This much for a modern Fish Story, without the usual frills. Now a Fox Hunt, and the sequel, by an inspired penman in ye olden time:

There was one Samson, a judge in Israel for twenty years. Displeased with the Philistines, he caught three hundred foxes, turned tail to tail, tied them together, with firebrands between; set them loose in the corn, burning not only that in shocks, but the standing grain, as also the vineyards and olives. He was angered at the Philistines, because his father-in-law was of that people, and would not allow him to see his wife, but offered a younger daughter instead.

Is not the story told with an abundance of trimming, in Judges 14, all of which partakes of the miraculous? Just the kind that makes good reading for our friend of Marblehead, who wished to learn, "Why we should seek to destroy the comfort millions of perplexed souls find in what they understand to be the promises of God?" Instead of "seeking to destroy" this tale which has given pleasure to countless millions, may be for 4,000 years, we don't care how long, we are trying to give it greater prominence, and add to the comfort of our many readers.

Besides a hunter, Samson proved to be something of a warrior. Says verse 15, of the chapter cited:

"And he [Samson] found a new jawbone of an ass, and put forth his hand, and took it, and slew a thousand men therewith."

The Lord seems to have been a looker-on at the slaughter, for Samson turned to him and asked the World Builder if he was going to let him die for thirst, and fall into the hands of the uncircumcised? This seemed to have been a poser to God, so, verse 19: "God clave a hollow place that was in the jaw, and there came water thereout," and the victor, with the blood of a thousand victims on his hands, "drunk," says the inspired volume, which would suggest to a carping skeptic that the jaw-bone from which the liquor flowed, may have been used by a boot-legger before the son of Zorah laid hands on it, and used it as a "big stick" to slaughter the friends of his father-in-law, who was insistent the Nazarite—for such it appears Samson was—should be content with a younger sister of the wife, instead of the wife herself.

But a query arises: How did God learn of the secret spring in that jawbone, by which he was enabled to "clave" or may be press on it, and induce the liquor within to flow therefrom? That is just what The Progressive Thinker wants to know.

The difference in the foregoing Munchausens: One was written by some eulogist of the lamented President Cleveland, to amuse the reader, and excite merriment. The other, the church for authority, is divine revelation, inspired by God himself, and preserved by miraculous interposition through three and a half thousand years, for the delectation of admiring and credulous Christians.

Inside Evidence.

The claim that the Old Testament is but altered and adapted Phenician history seems strengthened by this quotation from 2 Chronicles 9:25:

"And Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; whom he bestowed [made a gift of] in the chariot cities, and with [to] the king at Jerusalem [Solomon]."

The words interpolated in brackets are but definitions of the half obscure terms used by the translators. It is clearly represented that Solomon gave to himself and to the chariot cities the 4,000 stalls for horses and the 12,000 horsemen.

It indicates that in the original, before the passage was doctored, the name Hiram occurred where Solomon now appears.

This idea, hardly questionable, that it is the just one, shows how we read, and hurriedly pass over such disjointed passages, without catching the idea really expressed by the author.

A Practical Illustration.

On the tenth anniversary of his wedding a merchant was approached by a book agent, who offered for inspection a new edition of the Bible. He said:

"I have been told that this is your wedding anniversary, and you could make no better present to your wife than a family Bible; and this splendid edition which sells for $15 at retail, I am now able to offer to you for $10, spot cash."

He made the sale, giving a beautiful imitation morocco case, which he claimed was genuine. Then he hastened to the home of the merchant, induced the wife to buy another edition of the family Bible as an appropriate wedding present for her husband.

When they exchanged presents that evening there was a commotion in the home, and the husband was beside himself with rage, forgetting that both of those Bibles contained the injunction: "Let not the sun go down upon thy wrath." Being unable to go down town he telephoned a friend to go to the station and bring that book agent to the house without fail, but didn't say why he wanted the fellow. The friend hastened to the depot, caught the book agent, delivered the message and insisted upon the agent delaying his departure. The wily fellow, full of business, replied:

"I offered him a copy of this Bible for $10, and he put it off for the time. I am very sure that he has repented and wants a copy as a wedding present for his wife. He has undoubtedly told her of the bargain, and she wants it. I cannot remain over, however, for one sale, but you can take it to him and he will be delighted and will forever thank you for having overtaken me. The price is only $10, and you had better take it to him, as his wife is probably crazy to get it."

The friend paid the $10 and took the Bible home to his anxious friend; and, what then happened and what was said, would not be proper to print.

We clip the above from the Woman's National Daily. It well illustrates the methods employed to give the "Holy Bible" such a wide circulation. They who are ignorant of the facts suppose the Bible societies are eleemosynary institutions, founded with the charitable purpose of extending the inculcations of Christianity into the homes of unbelievers. Inquire into the truth and it is found the officers, managers and agents of such societies are salaried and are working for pay. By a judicious system of beggary they tease from Sunday school children, and from the hypocritical pious, the requisite finances to keep up current expenses, including the printing, binding, and the very limited gratuitous distributions. The society, if reports can be trusted, has waxed wealthy while translating the Scriptures into foreign tongues, and disposing of them to the heathen, to those in fact, who contribute their wealth, to make such distributions possible.

Prevention Better Than Cure.

It is announced that Illinois is about to institute a new sanitarium, to cost $125,000, with hydropathy as the curative agent, for treatment of the insane.

In skilled hands we have no question the proposed remedy will be more effective in that ailment than any other.

A preventive is better than any system of treatment, and the probabilities are a larger number can be saved from becoming mental wrecks by the arrest and detention of the inciters of insanity, the self-styled evangelists, and the revivalists of the Billy Sunday stripe—than by any system of medication.

In a better informed and a more advanced civilization, religious propagandists, whose trail can be traced by the lunatics they leave in their wake, will be silenced as disturbers of public tranquillity.

A Family Scene of the Long Ago.

Inquiring Boy—"Ma, did animals use to talk?"

Ma—"It seems so. The Bible tells of a conversation between Eve and the Serpent, and afterwards the snake with God. That was when the snake stood on his tail, before God compelled him to crawl on his belly for seducing Eve. And then there was Balaam's ass that talked. Elder Smith says: 'Every word between the two kivers of that sacred book came from God,' so I suppose there is no doubt animals used to talk."

I. Boy—"Why don't they talk now?"

Ma—"God confounded language so people could not understand each other. He was afraid they would conspire together, build a tower, scale heaven, and rob him of his throne. Because of this I suppose he silenced the speech of animals, since which snakes can only hiss, the donkey bray, the dog bark, the cat mew, the lamb bleat, and the ox bellow."

Older Than Christianity.

In answer to the question: "Has not Christianity brought civilization?" The Truth Seeker answers:

"Civilization antedates Christianity. It was on earth thusands of years before the advent of the Christian era. Christianity no more brought civilization than Christian Science brought health."

Should We Ever Be Discouraged?

A Pertinent Letter from the N. S. A. Secretary.

I am asked: "Don't you feel discouraged sometimes when you consider the contributions of Spiritualists towards philanthropic and reformatory work?"

The results of calls for such contributions are of a character to often discourage an iron man; and again the most stoical heart melts with the fervor of some contributors.

It is very difficult to obtain financial results from the majority of professed Spiritualists. I have had a couple of object lessons this summer at camp meetings. The programs called for certain sessions in the interest of the National Association; and I urged attendance to hear of the national work, and to understand more with regard to the results of organized effort. The people were told by the chairman to bring their pocket-books. That request killed the meeting; for they concluded it would be a meeting to solicit funds. They had heard of the N. S. A. missionaries and officials as being incessant beggars. They felt no personal interest in any affair that sought to obtain financial help. If it were to be a seance or message meeting, they would go; and some would stay from there if ten cents were charged. And yet less numbers would pay ten cents to hear a lecture. Such conditions of public spirit are met by every speaker and medium for Spiritualism.

BUT, THEY DO NOT OFTEN BECOME DISCOURAGED.

There is an impulse from the spirits that sustains the natural desire to assist humanity, which keeps the workers going on.

There is something more than dollars to labor for. But, dollars are now absolutely necessary! The spirits can contribute most of all other motive energy than dollars. And yet, some expect the spirits to supply the dollars. There are human duties! The matter of duty is not all with the spirits! We of this world should meet the spirits half way in the effort to propagate truth and bring joy to the despairing and sorrowing. Spiritualism is not for any one person or association of persons alone; but is for ALL PEOPLE!

The earnest Spiritualist should never be discouraged.

Optimism is always better than pessimism.

Results come apparently slow to our cause; but, in reality, they have come rapidly and with an esprit to make us proud!

Look about you and discover the many enterprises that Spiritualists have, considering the short time of its public propaganda.

Compute the property they possess in camps and local churches or meeting places, and some surprise awaits you. But, there is one great fault: That computation is difficult to obtain, because they do not supply the same on call. The N. S. A. asks for that, and many think it impertinence. The N. S. A. wants to supply such statistics for public information, to the credit of our mutual cause.

I trust that every N. S. A. auxiliary will send their annual report including financial and property possessions to the secretary in time for a compilation at the coming convention. IT IS HIGH TIME TO MAKE A SHOWING. A great amount of money has been given to the cause of Spiritualism. But, I ask with some conviction, has it been wisely given? The time has come to give our donations to the organized work, and not waste it in wild-cat or selfish enterprises.

I want to resent the assertion that the N. S. A. officials are beggars. They are soliciting for your benefit! No selfish motive ever actuated an N. S. A. solicitor! The solicitation is not a begging effort; but it is an appeal for the giving of that which you owe to humanity and the spirits. The solicitation is for the good of all and each, everywhere! No one locality or beneficiary is the recipient, but the cause everywhere is in the keeping and asks the assisting of the N. S. A. And, such is freely given, when worthily entitled or needed.

Yes, the majority of Spiritualists give missfly to the cause; but many, very many, are giving liberally. The local managers of meetings have serious obligations, which the critics of their efforts do not respect. Too many hold aloof, from small motives; and complain of irresponsible management; whereas, by their assistance the management would have the power to create grand results. Too few are the supporters, and too many the growlers! I prefer to feel hopeful and assist by even a "mite," than to stay outside and complain that the results are bad, and often disgraceful. They who hold off and fail to support, are the ones responsible for all failures!

Suppose there are a dozen or several dozen affairs in Spiritualism asking for our support. We should be proud that such is the case! It shows enterprise! Let the demands increase, rather than diminish.

Herald your projects unto the people, and do not hide out and wait for financial lightning to strike you! Create some magnetic power of your own to attract the electric force of finance to strike in your midst! You will then attract the multitude to see what sort of a display you are making. Sit down and whine, and the world's people will pass you by in pity and contempt. Assert yourself, and you gain force with every effort.

Discouraged? No, I am far from it. I have faith in the future! And I have much to feel grateful for in the present. Many people send small amounts to the N. S. A., and some send very liberal donations.

Let me whisper that the astrological signs are for many liberal gifts to the N. S. A., and a couple of promises are well defined for early results, which will enable that body to do great work for the cause of Spiritualism. Rest assured that the cause of Spiritualism is here to stay, and for grand efforts in behalf of human progress.

The future of the N. S. A. is bright with the promise of a "good time soon to be."

INTERESTING PARTICULARS.

First Phenomena Through Andrew Jackson Davis, in 1843 and 1844, in Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

In the autumn of 1843, Prof. Grimes delivered in Poughkeepsie a number of lectures on animal magnetism, performing during his course a number of illustrative experiments.

Among the persons on whom Mr. Grimes essayed to operate was young Davis; but in this instance his most powerful efforts failed to produce any apparent effect.

(Writer's comments.) In my 53 years' investigation I find those in earth life that have cultivated and unfolded mental powers to enable them to give inspirational instructive addresses without notes, when they vacate the physical form become conscious quickly and put in practice that strong affirmation Jesus of Nazareth made, "My father worketh hitherto and I work." Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Geo. Fox, Elias Hicks, Wm. Ellery Channing and a host of names I could give, are a band in spirit realms that found the Fox sisters at Bath, Canada. In 1843 they found from the aura evolving from young Davis they could use him to a greater advantage for the education of the people than if he fell under the influence of Prof. Grimes, which they successfully prevented.

By Prof. Grimes' lectures and successful experiments accompanying them, much excitement was created in the (then) village concerning this important branch of psychological science. Among those deeply interested was William Levingston, a tailor. A number in his shop were discussing the subject when young Davis happened in. Mr. L. said, "Suppose I try Davis." (This about Dec. 1, 1843. Mr. Davis, 17, Aug 11-12.) His first effort was successful and the boy exhibited powers of clairvoyance—which was truly surprising in describing places he had never seen, also when blindfolded. Levingston would take up any book, ask Davis to read to him on a given page, which Mr. L. did not know. He tried many pages and succeeded every time. Mr. L. gave a public exhibition of this kind. My uncle, Isaac Merritt, who owned three cotton factories at Hart's Village, now called Millbrook, was present. He was in the habit of dealing with one bank, and almost always carried their bills (bank notes). After Mr. L. had many successful experiments, Uncle said, "Let me try him," and taking hold of a note in his pocket Davis read rapidly fine and coarse type. "Uncle exclaimed, "I've got him," but on taking the note out of his pocket, he found to the astonishment of himself and all present Mr. Davis had read it correctly, Uncle having had a different note from what was in his mind. For two months Mr. Davis was thrown into the abnormal state, and Levingston's home was filled with investigators. Then Mr. Davis suggested the gift ought to be turned to better account than curiosity and amusement. Soon after he was influenced to diagnose diseases and prescribe remedies, mostly botanical, and was very successful. Not long after this, and by progressive stages, his scientific powers became immensely unfolded.

The scribe, Wm. Fishbough's Introduction, and A. J. Davis' address to the world, in the wonderful book, "Nature's Divine Revelations, and a Voice to Mankind," ought to be read by all.

A PLEA FOR MUSIC.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow Presents Some Facts for the Consideration of Spiritualists.

It is a well known fact that the Spiritualist body in general, has little or no music, beyond the Longley publications, and there is a great need of a suitable publication that can be used in any and all lines of the work; and such a one will come within the range of the average voice.

The N. S. A. Convention of 1907 had its attention called to the fact, and President Barrett appointed a committee to see what could be done. The chairman of this committe is Mr. Solomon Dill, of Centreville, Mich. The committee have done what they could, with what they had to do with. They would like contributions of songs, music and money, and as much as they can get, before October 1st., so as to be able to make a good report at the coming convention.

I hope that all in any way interested will send the same to Mr. Dill at once.

A SPIRIT VOICE SAVES SON'S LIFE.

Mother of George Traeumer Hears Warning and Rescues Dying Man.—Asphyxiated in Bath Room.—Woman Also Sees Vision of Victim in Peril and Rushes to Save His Life.—She Believes in Spiritualism.

Warned, as she believes, by spirit voices and by a vision of her son's plight, Mrs. Louis Traeumer found her son, George Traeumer, asphyxiated and apparently at the point of death in the bathroom at her home, 314 First avenue, and by almost superhuman efforts succeeded in bringing him back to life.

Strongly tinged with the supernatural, the story, as told by Mrs. Traeumer, is one of intense interest. Her son has for years been a photographer at Klein's studio on Wisconsin street, and Mrs. Traeumer is the widow of Peter Traeumer, who for twenty years was director of the South Side Turning Society. She has been a Spiritualist for a number of years.

Used Gas Water Heater.

"My son came over to see me after supper," said Mrs. Traeumer," to-day, "and after we had talked awhile, he suggested that he would like to take a bath. So I got towels for him, and he went into the bathroom, lighted the gas heater which is in the room, and was there for some time, preparing for his bath, while the water was heating. Finally he turned the gas off and got into the tub. He noticed, when he first lighted it, that there was an escape of gas, but thought nothing of it, supposing that it had escaped before he applied the match. I learned these details afterward, of course.

"Now it always is my custom to sit of an evening on our front porch, facing the west, where I have daylight until the last moment. But on that evening I seemed to be unable to leave the little side porch which is separated by the brick wall of the house from the bathroom.

Hears Spirit Voice.

"I tried to read the paper, but couldn't fix my mind on it. Then I began to feel depressed and sad, as if trouble were coming. All at once, as I stood on the side porch, with the wall between my son and me, I heard a voice saying, 'Watch that bathroom.' I heard it just as plainly as I heard my own voice, and though I knew it for the voice of a spirit friend, I did not recognize it. The warning puzzled me, and I thought, 'Why in the world should I watch the bathroom? A grown man can take a bath without needing watching over.' And then I thought, perhaps he was going to have some sort of fit or become ill in the bathroom.

Sees Son in Vision.

"As if in answer to my thought, I heard the voice say, 'No,' and then I saw the vision. I saw George lying in the bathtub, his eyes closed, his head lying back, and one hand beneath it, trying to lift his head up. Still I didn't realize that it was a warning.

"Then I heard a sound, as though George was trying to shut the door tighter, and I thought perhaps he was ill and didn't want me to know. I turned to walk away, but something made me turn around and go back, and then I heard a sound of moaning. I went to the bathroom door and found it shut. I called and called, but there was no answer. Then I tried to open the door, but it was fast. I pushed and pushed, and finally could see that he lay on the floor, having fallen in such a way that he lay across the door. By main strength I got it open, and found him as if dead. His head dangled when I raised it up and his arms and all his body were like a dead man's. The air was heavy with gas.

Mother Revives Him.

I was all alone in the house and didn't dare leave him to call help, lest the last breath of life leave him. I rubbed him and fanned him and after a long time he became partly conscious. Then I got him on a chair,, and as life began to come back to him, I hurried to the drug store and got some medicine. When he finally could walk a little I supported him to his own home at Sixth and National avenues, and his wife and I walked the streets with him until long after midnight that he might not go to sleep again."

George Traeumer's account supplements that of his mother.

"After I had been in the bathtub for a time, I began to feel a tightening of the muscles, and I found that I couldn't lift my head. I put my hand under my head, trying to lift it up, and couldn't. Then I found the muscles of my arms tightening, and my heart beating fast and a queer drumming in my ears. With an awful effort I raised up. How I got out of the tub and to the door I do not know. I lost consciousness and the next thing I knew I found mother working over me."

It is supposed in lighting the heater the lower stop cock was turned on too fully, allowing more gas to escape than was burned.—Evening Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

OBEYED SPIRIT, LOST ALL.—"SPIRIT" PHONED FOR COIN.

Mrs. Jennie Beals, Says She Parted with Her Money in Response to "Spirit Letters" From the Shades of "White Swan" and "Sun Beam" and, in Obedience to Their Wish, Drove Her Children From Home.—Woman Who Says She Was Cheated, and Wants Terrestrial Agents of Ghosts Arrested.

As a rule those who are swindled by the spirits are the ones who do not read The Progessive Thinker and are not posted as to the questionable character of certain communications that emanate from the Spirit World. That there has been a great many swindles perpetrated through the instrumentality of spirits, is now generally known, and those who do not happen to be aware of the fact are the ones who are separated from their hard earned money. The Los Angeles, Cal., Examiner of Aug. 12 has the following:

Although White Swan was an Indian chief contemporary with Columbus, and died long before the first settlement in America, he operated a twentieth-century hotel in Los Angeles up to a few months ago. It was the Tremont House, opposite the Arcade station, and Mrs. Jennie Beals, who once owned it, told City Prosecuter Guy Eddie yesterday that the red-skinned spook handled all the money, and finally sold the place, keeping most of the price. Five hundred dollars was all she got out of an investment of thousands.

Mrs. Beals went to the prosecutor to procure warrants aagainst Mrs. May E. Maley and Will J. Gould, manager of an insurance agency at 111 South Broadway, who she said, were the earthly agents through whom the Indian chief operated from the spirit world.

Says Shade Used Phone.

White Swan, according to Mrs. Beals, was far superior to any ordinary slate-writing wraith who could not appear excepting in a dark cabinet. He not only was general manager of her hotel, purchasing agent and disburser of her funds, but he could write letters. He mailed them himself, so he asserted in his communications to Mrs. Beals via the postman. And once he called her up on the telephone.

"Hello, Squaw," he said over the wire. "My Meda needs a white shirtwaist and $10 to pay the rent with. Send it to her. Your White Swan, who loves you, know it's all right."

White Swan's "Meda" was Mrs. Maley, who is said to use the name Crossman on occasion. He never appeared personally. All his operations were carried on through Mrs. Maley. Sun Beam was the spook hotel manager's assistant. She died when a pappoose about 400 years ago. Yet she also showed a suprising knowledge of modern conditions and fashions. She asked for sealskin saques and money for Medie, and she would probably have demanded a sheath gown, too, had the Directoire made its appearance at that time, and the noise it made on earth penetrated to the spirit world.

Drove Children Away.

Mrs. Beals said she became acquainted with Mrs. Maley a little more than a year ago, when Gould brought the woman to her and asked for a place to hold spiritualistic seances. This was only a short time after Mrs. Beals had lost the greater part of her wealth through other spirit advisers, who caused her to invest in a fake mine. But it required only a few weeks for White Swan and Sun Beam to acquire such influence that they were able to induce her to drive her son and daughter away and cleave only to the "medie" to the two Indians, Mrs. Maley.

"They made me drive my daugther, who is now Mrs. Stella Harrington of San Francisco, out of my house," said the woman. "After that I fell so completely under their control that I had a special letter of instruction from White Swan or Sunbeam. They sent me to San Francisco and then they sold my place, through Mrs. Maley and Gould. I got only $500 out of it, and when I asked her about it, Mrs. Maley refused to tell me at what price they had sold the house."

Ruled by "Spirit Control.

Mrs. Beals has been for the last two months trying to force a settlement from Gould and the spirit medium, and, failing, she went to the prosecutor yesterday with the tale of her woes.

"The letters that these controls are supposed to have written seem absurd to me now," she said. "But then I believed implicitly that they were messages from the other world written by souls that were working only for my good.

"I was hypnotized, that is all. Here is a specimen of the spirit letters:

"Well, my squaw, here I am down here again writing. I am only going to say a little this time. In the first place, I want you to pay the rent Tuesday, and pay the whole month. Send it down to this squaw, and when you send it make another postoffice money order for $10. This squaw will pay it back in a short time. She needs it for carfare. It is so hard for her to walk about attending to your interests.

" 'Now, squaw, do all I have asked in this letter for my sake, and you will get your reward. Good-by, my squaw.

"WHITE SWAN."

Gould Known as "Mr. G."

"Mrs. Maley lived at my place all the time," Mrs. Beals went on. "Mr. Gould had an office there, too. Mrs. Maley would not let me call him his name. Her orders were to refer to him only as "Mr. G." White Swan and Sun Beam never used anything but the initial."

Mrs. Beals is now living with her daughter and the latter's husband in San Francisco. She said last night that she had nothing left but a little lot that the spirits also tried to get.

"I woke up too soon. That's why they didn't," she exclained.

When she came down here two months ago to endeavor to procure a settlement, Mrs. Beals found Mrs. Maley at 517 West Eighth street, moved, and all efforts to locate her failed.

Gould's attorney, John R. Laying, wrote the victim of the spirits a letter yesterday, saying that her communications, demanding settlement of his client, were a violation of the United States postal laws, and conveying the information that if she pressed the case counter proceedings would be instituted against her.

"RELIGION."

A NEW PRESCRIPTION FOR DISEASE.

Various Churches are Taking the Lead in Uniting "Religion" with the Treatment of disease, thus doing a philanthropic work. Whatever a "Religion" may be, whether Spiritualism, Unitarianism, Christian Science or what not, if it does not unite philanthropic work therewith, it is a brazen skeleton, a tree without fruitage, and it in no wise represents the higher influences of the celestial spheres. There is a Vein of Truth in the sermon by the Rev. C. Waldo Cherry, and Spiritualists will read with pleasure and profit, and fully endorse it in some respects.

Pastor of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Develops Thoughts on Modes of Living as Regards Religion vs. Disease.

Rev. C. Waldo Cherry at the Second Presbyterian church, Troy, N. Y., delivered an impressive sermon on the subject, "A New Prescription for Disease—Religion." His text was:

"And Jesus went about in all Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness among the people." He said:

"In many minds to-day there is no connection between religion and medicine; between the healing of the soul and the cure of disease. For centuries Christianity practically ignored the physical man. The old heresy of the essential evil of matter somehow worked its leaven into mediaeval Christianity to such an extent that men thought that to take care of the body was a crime against spirituality. The body was nothing, the soul was everything. Physical pain and suffering were necessary in order that the soul might be perfect for heaven. It is not to be wondered then that this disposition to divorce religion and healing is part of our inheritance from the past, that in modern civilization the clergyman and doctor stand for entirely distinct and separate professions and that for centuries Christianity has had no message for the multitudes tortured by physical pain and suffering save to remind them of God's goodness, exhort them unto patience and to promise them peace and healing in another world.

Of late years there has been a great revolt from this doctrine of religion which limits its benefits purely to the soul of man. It has been felt that a religion which has nothing to offer but a vague and shadowy hope of the future, a religion that only takes in part of the future life; and that has nothing of alleviation or uplift for the life that now is, fails in its mission and cannot hold the devotion of men and women who are suffering and battling with the ills of this life. This conception that a true religion ought to help man here and now by relieving physical pain and bestowing bodily health and strength has found its expression in various sects such as Dowieism, faith cure, and the various cults of mental and Christian Science, the basis of whose creed is that religion provides a cure for physical disease, who say to the lame and the halt and the blind, to the neurotic and melancholic, to the morally and intellectually degenerate, "Come unto us, banish your drugs and doctors and by the exercise of our religious faith we will lift you up and make you well."

A Remarkable History.

"These movements have had a remarkable history in the past quarter century. They have numbered their converts by thousands and they have on record cures whose authenticity it is difficult to doubt. The feature of these movements has been their independence of historic Christianity. They have either rejected it entirely or so distorted and mangled its doctrines by elimination and substitution that when the process was complete there was little of the original left. But in the past two years a movement for the cure of disease has grown up within Christianity itself and in one of the most conservative of our denominations. This movement is based on the assumption that it is not necessary to go outside Christianity to find healing. The men responsible for the movement believed that something had been lost out of Christianity since Jesus asked the blind man at the pool of Bethesda if he would be made well. They believed that Christianity had a redeeming power for the cure of the body as well as for the soul and they began to carry their belief into practice. This movement is known as the Immanuel movement. Its originator was Dr. Ellwood Worcester, an Episcopalian rector in Boston. The success of the movement was beyond all expectation. To-day the meetings are being attended daily by a multitude of 500 to 1,000 people who gather to hear the story of the gospel and its healing for disease. Eminent physicians and psychologists have attended these gatherings, testified to the genuineness of the cures that have been effected and have given the whole movement their approbation. The question is whether as Christians we can indorse such a movement? Is there anything in Christianity that makes for the cure of physical disease? Does being a Christian help a man to bodily strength as well as to spiritual strength? I believe that there is a good deal in this doctrine, that it is one of the submerged and forgotten truths of Christianity which we need to uncover to our age.

"When Christ came into this world He came with healing power. He was the great physician. He cured men's bodies as well as their souls. Our text tells how He went through ancient Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of diseases. His preaching work was accompanied by healing work. The two went together, spiritual renewal and physical cure.

"Turning away then from all the wild absurdities upon this subject to which impostors and charlatans have given birth, there is something then in this doctrine of the relation between religion and medicine. There are grounds for our believing that to be a Christian increases a man's physical well-being. What the real connection is between these two is our purpose to discover.

Mind and Body.

"Christianity is a religion of health because it has power to control and renew those mental forces which dominate many's physical being. SCIENCE IS RECOGNIZING TO-DAY AS NEVER BEFORE THE INTER-RELATION BETWEEN THE PSYCHICAL AND THE PHYSICAL. The mind controls the nerves and the nerves control the body. The thoughts of a man's heart have their effect not merely upon his character but upon his health as well. A psychologist named Mosso conducted an ingenious experiment. He placed his subjects upon a table so carefully balanced that the slightest increase of weight at either extremity would turn the needle. He found that any active thinking by the subject like the solving of a problem, would at once cause the head end of the table to go down in consequence of the influx of blood to the head. That experiment proved beyond question that there is a connection between thought and the circulation of the blood, between the mental and physical.

We are all familiar with the effect of anger, worry, fear, upon certain secretions. It is a recognized fact that these emotions are the foes of health. On the other hand faith, hope and love are curative and life giving. Long centuries ago the wise man said, "A merry heart doeth good like medicine." This relation then between the mind and the body explains the existence of a vast number of diseases. A prominent nerve specialist is on record as stating that ten years ago there were 50,000 cases of nervous wreck in one form or another in the United States, and that number to-day has increased to 250,000. There is a formidable list of ailments which can be traced to deranged mental and spiritual conditions.

Suffering and Disease.

"In other words, there is a vast deal of suffering and disease in the world which is the product of men's thoughts. But if a disease is caused by the mind it is certainly reasonable to believe that it can be cured by the mind; to give the sufferer a new outlook upon life, to inspire courage and hope and faith, to renew the forces of the will, to turn away the mind from conditions which have caused nervous overthrow will bring physical cure. The world is full of facts which demonstrate the power of such a method to cure disease. The cures to which Ireneus bears witness in the second century, the marvelous physical results of the preaching of Bernard, the raising of Melancthon from what seemed immediate death at the prayer of Luther, the thousands of cures which have been wrought at shrines and sacred places or that have been brought about by the use of relics of the saints or of water that has been blessed, the cures of mental science and Christian Science are all testimonies not that mind is everything and that matter is nothing, but that the mind and body are indissolubly joined together and that the one may have an effect upon the other to a certain extent both for disease and for cure.

"But if it is true that the cure of certain kinds of disease can come through the mind then Christianity has a power of healing far above all other creeds. Christianity has the power to 'minister to a mind diseased,' emancipate it from care and worry and sin, to inspire it with fresh hope and determination. Tranquillity is health and the mind that thinks much on Christ and which desires to emulate his virtue will become a tranquil mind. Joy is health, and the mind conscious of God's forgiveness and his favor will be joyful.

"'I heard the voice of Jesus say, 'Come unto Me and rest;
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down thy head upon My breast.'
I came to Jesus as I was, weary and worn and sad,
I found in him a resting place, and He has made me glad.'

"And thus so far as disease comes from a condition of the mind, the principles of Christianity sincerely accepted and faithfully applied are calculated to bring physical healing. It is this truth about Christianity which the Immanuel movement is bringing out. Its leaders are Christian men. They cling to every doctrine of our evangelical faith. They do not ignore the fact of sin; they do not deny the reality of sickness. They stand for everything in healing that Christian Science or any other cult can do, but they stand for it as a part of Christianity, not apart from it. And the multitude of authenticated cures which have resulted from their labors stand as witnesses to the truth that Christianity is a religion of healing. But there is another truth along this line which is in great need of emphasis in these days.

The Reason Why.

"Christianity as a religion is a source of health because its moral law is the law of physical well-being. Nature has her laws of health as well as her laws for the cure of disease, and other things being equal the man who obeys those laws will preserve health and the man who disobeys those laws will lose his health.

"This is a fact that we do not often enough appreciate, that behind every diseased body, behind every bit of physical suffering is a broken law. The man himself may not have broken the law, but someone before him has transmitted the punishment. Intemperance, overwork, excess of any kind has its results in the breakdown of the nervous system, in an enfeebled and diseased body.

"It is a good thing to have a cure for disease, but it is a better thing to prevent it. And here is the remarkable truth that I wish we might note, namely, that the laws of Christianity are the laws of health, that the commandments God gave man for his moral and spiritual well-being also decide the quality of his physical life. We are impatient with many of these laws. We think they are arbitrary and unnecessary, but it is not so. Take for instance the legislation of Moses. There is much of it that is out of place and obsolete to-day; nevertheless it is the verdict of scientists and physicians that those laws of ceremonial cleansing, of the clean and unclean, beside having a religious significance, also had a physical value and that they preserved the health of the Israelitish nation, and it is not without significance that in history the Jew has been one of the most virile and persistent races that we know. Take the law of the Sabbath that commanded rest and relaxation from ordinary pursuits and avocations. Man may make light of that law to-day and call it arbitrary, but science is showing more and more that the human body is a machine that can run so long and then needs to be slowed down for repairs and rest or else disaster ensues. Take that law of chastity and I need not tell you that half the horrors of disease that have caused men to writhe in agony and have brought suffering to future generations have come from the breaking of that law. Obedience to the law of Christianity brings not only spiritual but physical well-being. Christianity demands of men that they shall be self-controlled, that they shall reverence their bodies as the temple of God, and other things being equal the man who obeys the laws of Christianity will preserve health, live to a good old age and transmit health, not disease, to his posterity.

Spirit of Philanthropy.

"Christianity is a religion of health because its spirit of philanthropy inspires men to minister unto the sick and to seek to alleviate their suffering. Jesus not only thus ministered but he called upon his disciples to do so, and ever since he lived he has inspired men with the feeling of pity and compassion which has been fruitful in the alleviation of human suffering. What a contrast between conditions in the world when he left and conditions to-day. No explorer in the ruins of Egypt or of Greece has yet come across the remains of a hospital. No student of ancient history has found a nation which devoted themselves in particular care and tenderness to the sick and to the diseased. But to-day every Christian community has its hospitals and its institutions for the care and cure of the suffering; has its special workers who devote their lives to ministering unto the sick and in seeking cures for disease, and I believe that the facts will bear me out when I say that spirit of pity and of helpfulness finds its inspiration in Him who called upon His followers to love each other. It is that spirit of Christian philanthropy that inspires the trained nurse and sends her out to be an angel of ministry by the bedside of pain. It is that spirit of philanthropy that brings the skilled physician at your summons at any hour of the day or night. There is no more devoted class of men in the world than our physicians. There are none who do more gratuitously. All the great discoveries of medical science have been given to the world freely, without money and without price. It is an unwritten law among physicians that they shall not advertise because they refuse to put their services upon a commercial basis.

"And it is that same spirit of Christian philanthropy that has inspired the tremendous advance which medical science has made in the last century in the discovery of how to combat pestilence and disease.

"Lastly it is that spirit of Christianity that sends the medical missionary out into the heathen world, there to bring the best knowledge and skill of the twentieth century to fight the fearful suffering and the terrible disease of pagan lands.

"Behind all our splendid knowledge of medicine, behind all our glorious victories in the campaign against disease and pain, behind all the great and noble names of the medical profession there stands that spirit of philanthropy which is the spirit of Christ.

"Let us then draw our conclusion. Christianity is a religion that makes for health and healing, in the faith it inspires, in the laws it enforces and in the spirit it inculcates. I know that as I speak these words thousands of true and devoted Christians are lying upon sick beds, are suffering from disease and yet that is not because Christianity does not possess the power of healing, but because we have not yet fully applied that power to the conditions which cause disease. The root cause of disease is sin, sin against God's law or against nature's law. And when obedience to Christ shall have brought man into conformity with the law of righteousness then the Son of Righteousness will arise with healing in his wings.

The Secret of It.

"My friends we do not need a new religion in order to have healing, we need to use the religion that we have. One of our pastors tells of meeting a man who for twelve years had suffered without a day's respite from pain; for twelve years he had taken strong medicine; one day when he was especially ill he found his physician had left the city. The man who was with him insisted on carrying him off to a lady who told him there was no such thing as matter or sickness, that all that is is good. And after three or four days she succeeded in making him believe that he could live without medicine, and in a months' time he stood forth blessed with perfect health and with the strength only less than that of an athlete. The secret of it was that he cast out fear and worry. He began to trust God for his future and the trustful, happy spirit within was medicine to the body without. That is Christ's principle, not Mrs. Eddy's. It belongs to the Sermon on the Mount, not to the philosophy of man. What we need to do is to read our Bibles more, to heed the teachings of our own faith. If we were stronger spiritually we would be stronger mentally and physically. What we need is more faith, more prayer, more trust in God. So shall we be cured of many ills, so shall we bring courage and cheer and helpfulness to sick and suffering humanity.

JOTTINGS.

As They Emanate From the Pen of Mattie E. Hull.

To the Editor:—It seems to me that every Spiritualist who reads the paper published in defense of his cause, has a reason these days to "rejoice and be exceeding glad" as he contemplates the outlook of the movement so dear to him. There may have been occasions in the past when some of our most faithful and honest workers may have been partially excusable in becoming somewhat pessimistic, but that time is not now.

One of the most discouraging phases in the field of local and also of general work, has been a diversity of opinions, on vital issues relative to methods.

Whether one has been willing to admit the fact or not (it has been recognized just the same) the false and the true, the simulated and the genuine, have stood side by side—abreast, among the rank and file, who are "Workers in the vineyard."

Many honest, well-meaning people, have said, "It is better not to attempt the effort of making a discrimination." They said, "Let the wheat and tares grow together; if there are those who are not wise enough to make the distinction, let them take the consequence."

It has been lamentable to know that honest people were being duped —robbed of time, confidence and their means, but this was not all—the true was condemned with the false, and every medium was under ban and regarded with suspicion while their names were grouped in advertisements with those who were known to be charlatans.

The question arose, time and time again, "How shall we draw the line of discrimination?"

The Chicago Ordinance.

Since the appearance of my previous article in The Progressive Thinker, I have received several letters from good friends who have taken issue with me relative to the passage of the Ordinance which I endorsed, and they claimed it was "an act of injustice to the 'dear mediums'" I replied in every instance, if I understand the matter it is to be the medium's defence; If I am wrong, I desire to be corrected.

Mr. Editor, I am heartily glad you published the history of the much discussed and largely condemned Ordinance in the last issue. Since hearing it read, and afterward carefully reading it myself, I am more than ever convinced that many who have denounced the measure, have done so through Misunderstanding.

O, that one word! how much meaning it holds; never is it impressed upon my mind more deeply than when "those of our own household of faith" are engaged in controversy and denunciation. If we would give more time to reflection in these matters, and deal more with principles and less with personalities, the cause "would be the better for it." If we had a better understanding of principles we would surely have less misunderstanding of persons.

Lily Dale's Triumph.

Perhaps it would be more appropriate to say, "P. L. O. A. Keeler's triumph!" I will let it go as above written, because Mr. Keeler has for so many years been identified with Lily Dale, and has done so great a work there, one can hardly disassociate.

The request of the Official Board of the Assembly was a just one, on behalf of the cause of Spiritualism, and the Association conducting meetings at Laly Dale. Mr. Keeler's attitude toward the management was not only a test of integrity as a man, but gave absolute proof of his trustfulness in his "Spirit Guides."

Dr. Warne of the Official Board of Lily Dale, may have been inspired when he referred to Talmage, "the great preacher," who six times delivered his unwarranted, and most bitter attack on Spiritualism, as having been under the influence of excarnate spirits who "hated Spiritualism," when he stated an eaves-dropper must have been around, when he found between the closed slates, a response to his words, signed, "Moses Hull."

This was very natural. Mr Hull, as many of my readers know, replied in full to Mr. Talmage's terrific onslaught on Spiritualism. Possibly many who read these lines, read the the reply published first in the Banner of Light, afterwards in pamphlet form. It was entitled, "Talmagean Inanities."

It is quite natural to suppose Mr. Hull would be present on that occasion, as he long since became interested in the work at Lily Dale, and for many years had been confident of the genuineness of Mr. Keeler's mediumship.

Another Proof of Mr. Hull's Presence at Lily Dale.

On one occasion (I think this occurred at a session of the meeting held at Forest Temple) a friend with whom I am in correspondence, living a short distance from the Dale, was told by a medium—an entire stranger—that Moses Hull was present, and desired to give her a message. He cited the fact that she had recently received a letter from me, and he referred to certain contents in the letter; he also gave her a test aside from this.

The Morris Pratt.

The vacation days are fast slipping away. In a few weeks the beautiful Temple will be opened, and students will be in the class room. Dear reader, whoever you are, wherever you may be, if you are unacquainted with the work of this grand Institute send your address to Prof. A. J. Weaver, and ask for printed matter giving you information.

Some of Our Graduates.

are already in the field at work, and we trust others will be one year hence.

Miss Sara Hull, (Mr. Hull's niece) is the first among our students to appear as a lecturer, on the Pacific Coast. She is filling a month's engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of Seattle, and we learn her work is well received. The writer learns from a correspondent at Lily Dale, that Amalia Pfenning, a member of the first class graduated from the M. P. I., was well received as a lecturer on the platform at Lily Dale. Complimentary words were sent me regarding her work.

Yesterday, the 11th inst., was the day set apart at Mt. Pleasant Park (Clinton, Iowa) to consider the interest of the school. I am informed that two of the trustees and several students, among them several graduates, will participate in the work of the day.

Field Work.

I desire to state again that I intend to make a brief eastern trip in a few weeks and would like work along the line in Indiana, Ohio, or Western N. Y. If any desire to correspond with me relative to the matter write soon, please.

To those who have sent orders for Mr. Hull's Biography, and written me such delightful letters since the publication of my former article, I send thanks.

Although bearing at times, burdens many, and walking at times through shadowy places, I know in truth there are no sunless days or starless nights. We cannot see beyond the clouds, with our finite vision; we cannot penetrate with mortal sense the blackened night-sky, but we know the sun shines and the stars glisten.

As I look upon my surroundings from the porch this lovely summer day, the grass, flowers and vines are sad reminders of the dear one who, only a little while ago made them his pride and care, and for a moment the sense of a great physical loss overwhelms me. Then there falls on my spirit a calm, and

"The hush o'er my heart is as holy"
As a spot some angel had known.

O, the comfort, the hope, the strength that Spiritualism gives us. I daily pledge my devotion, my strength and what little talent I possess in the defense of the Soul's Teacher, and comforter, Modern Spiritualism.

THE POTENCY OF THE INVISIBLE.

The Wonders Accomplished Through Its Influence.—Motive Power by Wireless.

Running trains by wireless [says the Chicago Tribune] is the idea of Frederick H. Millener, who has perfected and proved an invention for moving huge bodies by electricity wirelessly conducted. The apparatus consists of a truck weighing nearly three tons and having about ten horse power. Including its own weight it hauls a load of more than twenty tons. The wireless truck carries 144 feet of copper wire made into wireless wings or antennae, and fixed one set on each side of the truck at a height of about four feet from the ground. The cylindrical shape is preferred by Dr. Millener, as it permits the placing of the antennae so low as not to interfere when cars pass through tunnels or under bridges—an important consideration. Similar wings, built in the cylindrical form and attuned to the electrical truck, swing from a sixty-five foot flagpole at the central station, and from these antennae flow the controlled power waves which move with unfailing accuracy to the traveling truck and control its movements with unfailing perfection. Dr. Millener's invention may be applied to railroad signaling, which is now done by cumbersome lever and wires, and therefore cannot be done at any great distance from the signal towers. With Dr. Millener's invention any number of signals can be thrown or lowered by the mere touching of the sending device, and it matters not whether the signals be fifty feet, or fifty miles away. The device can be also applied to railroad telegraphy. Dr. Millener can ring a bell in a given one of any number of stations and leave bells in the others undisturbed. Torpedoes equipped with Dr. Millener's "selective device" can be steered through the water with unfailing accuracy by having the control of the rudder attuned so as to be controlled thereby. It is thought that one man can operate a number of trains on a railroad system of several hundred miles in length with the selective device attuned to the locomotives of the several trains, so that a certain truck would affect only a given locomotive; "and with a system of electric registration lights to show where each train is and its course of movement, it is not out of the range of the probable and practicable. When a train is ready to leave a station, the station agent merely would have to send a wireless flash to the central operating station, whence the locomotive would be started and run to the next station." Dr. Millener thinks that by his invention it will be possible to telegraph from a moving automobile.

DEAFNESS

Successfully Treated

By the Simplest Methods Yet Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of the cases of deafness brought to our attention are the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed relief is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying hence the inability of specialists to always effect a cure. Neither can ear drums cure deafness. But there is a scientific treatment for deafness and catarrh which is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the vibration of sound. Actina is also very successful in relieving ringing noises in the head. We have known people afflicted with this distressing trouble for years to be entirely relieved by a few week's use. Actina has always been very successful in the treatment of hay fever, asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds, headache and other troubles that are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina will be sent on trial, postpaid. Write us about your case. Our advice will be free as well as a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Disease. "RELIGION."

A NEW PRESCRIPTION FOR DISEASE.

Various Churches are Taking the Lead in Uniting "Religion" with the Treatment of disease, thus doing a philanthropic work. Whatever a "Religion" may be, whether Spiritualism, Unitarianism, Christian Science or what not, if it does not unite philanthropic work therewith, it is a brazen skeleton, a tree without fruitage, and it in no wise represents the higher influences of the celestial spheres. There is a Vein of Truth in the sermon by the Rev. C. Waldo Cherry, and Spiritualists will read with pleasure and profit, and fully endorse it in some respects.

Pastor of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Develops Thoughts on Modes of Living as Regards Religion vs. Disease.

Rev. C. Waldo Cherry at the Second Presbyterian church, Troy, N. Y., delivered an impressive sermon on the subject, "A New Prescription for Disease—Religion." His text was:

"And Jesus went about in all Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness among the people." He said:

"In many minds to-day there is no connection between religion and medicine; between the healing of the soul and the cure of disease. For centuries Christianity practically ignored the physical man. The old heresy of the essential evil of matter somehow worked its leaven into mediaeval Christianity to such an extent that men thought that to take care of the body was a crime against spirituality. The body was nothing, the soul was everything. Physical pain and suffering were necessary in order that the soul might be perfect for heaven. It is not to be wondered then that this disposition to divorce religion and healing is part of our inheritance from the past, that in modern civilization the clergyman and doctor stand for entirely distinct and separate professions and that for centuries Christianity has had no message for the multitudes tortured by physical pain and suffering save to remind them of God's goodness, exhort them unto patience and to promise them peace and healing in another world.

Of late years there has been a great revolt from this doctrine of religion which limits its benefits purely to the soul of man. It has been felt that a religion which has nothing to offer but a vague and shadowy hope of the future, a religion that only takes in part of the future life; and that has nothing of alleviation or uplift for the life that now is, fails in its mission and cannot hold the devotion of men and women who are suffering and battling with the ills of this life. This conception that a true religion ought to help man here and now by relieving physical pain and bestowing bodily health and strength has found its expression in various sects such as Dowieism, faith cure, and the various cults of mental and Christian Science, the basis of whose creed is that religion provides a cure for physical disease, who say to the lame and the halt and the blind, to the neurotic and melancholic, to the morally and intellectually degenerate, "Come unto us, banish your drugs and doctors and by the exercise of our religious faith we will lift you up and make you well."

A Remarkable History.

"These movements have had a remarkable history in the past quarter century. They have numbered their converts by thousands and they have on record cures whose authenticity it is difficult to doubt. The feature of these movements has been their independence of historic Christianity. They have either rejected it entirely or so distorted and mangled its doctrines by elimination and substitution that when the process was complete there was little of the original left. But in the past two years a movement for the cure of disease has grown up within Christianity itself and in one of the most conservative of our denominations. This movement is based on the assumption that it is not necessary to go outside Christianity to find healing. The men responsible for the movement believed that something had been lost out of Christianity since Jesus asked the blind man at the pool of Bethesda if he would be made well. They believed that Christianity had a redeeming power for the cure of the body as well as for the soul and they began to carry their belief into practice. This movement is known as the Immanuel movement. Its originator was Dr. Ellwood Worcester, an Episcopalian rector in Boston. The success of the movement was beyond all expectation. To-day the meetings are being attended daily by a multitude of 500 to 1,000 people who gather to hear the story of the gospel and its healing for disease. Eminent physicians and psychologists have attended these gatherings, testified to the genuineness of the cures that have been effected and have given the whole movement their approbation. The question is whether as Christians we can indorse such a movement? Is there anything in Christianity that makes for the cure of physical disease? Does being a Christian help a man to bodily strength as well as to spiritual strength? I believe that there is a good deal in this doctrine, that it is one of the submerged and forgotten truths of Christianity which we need to uncover to our age.

"When Christ came into this world He came with healing power. He was the great physician. He cured men's bodies as well as their souls. Our text tells how He went through ancient Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of diseases. His preaching work was accompanied by healing work. The two went together, spiritual renewal and physical cure.

"Turning away then from all the wild absurdities upon this subject to which impostors and charlatans have given birth, there is something then in this doctrine of the relation between religion and medicine. There are grounds for our believing that to be a Christian increases a man's physical well-being. What the real connection is between these two is our purpose to discover.

Mind and Body.

"Christianity is a religion of health because it has power to control and renew those mental forces which dominate many's physical being. SCIENCE IS RECOGNIZING TO-DAY AS NEVER BEFORE THE INTER-RELATION BETWEEN THE PSYCHICAL AND THE PHYSICAL. The mind controls the nerves and the nerves control the body. The thoughts of a man's heart have their effect not merely upon his character but upon his health as well. A psychologist named Mosso conducted an ingenious experiment. He placed his subjects upon a table so carefully balanced that the slightest increase of weight at either extremity would turn the needle. He found that any active thinking by the subject like the solving of a problem, would at once cause the head end of the table to go down in consequence of the influx of blood to the head. That experiment proved beyond question that there is a connection between thought and the circulation of the blood, between the mental and physical.

We are all familiar with the effect of anger, worry, fear, upon certain secretions. It is a recognized fact that these emotions are the foes of health. On the other hand faith, hope and love are curative and life giving. Long centuries ago the wise man said, "A merry heart doeth good like medicine." This relation then between the mind and the body explains the existence of a vast number of diseases. A prominent nerve specialist is on record as stating that ten years ago there were 50,000 cases of nervous wreck in one form or another in the United States, and that number to-day has increased to 250,000. There is a formidable list of ailments which can be traced to deranged mental and spiritual conditions.

Suffering and Disease.

"In other words, there is a vast deal of suffering and disease in the world which is the product of men's thoughts. But if a disease is caused by the mind it is certainly reasonable to believe that it can be cured by the mind; to give the sufferer a new outlook upon life, to inspire courage and hope and faith, to renew the forces of the will, to turn away the mind from conditions which have caused nervous overthrow will bring physical cure. The world is full of facts which demonstrate the power of such a method to cure disease. The cures to which Ireneus bears witness in the second century, the marvelous physical results of the preaching of Bernard, the raising of Melancthon from what seemed immediate death at the prayer of Luther, the thousands of cures which have been wrought at shrines and sacred places or that have been brought about by the use of relics of the saints or of water that has been blessed, the cures of mental science and Christian Science are all testimonies not that mind is everything and that matter is nothing, but that the mind and body are indissolubly joined together and that the one may have an effect upon the other to a certain extent both for disease and for cure.

"But if it is true that the cure of certain kinds of disease can come through the mind then Christianity has a power of healing far above all other creeds. Christianity has the power to 'minister to a mind diseased,' emancipate it from care and worry and sin, to inspire it with fresh hope and determination. Tranquillity is health and the mind that thinks much on Christ and which desires to emulate his virtue will become a tranquil mind. Joy is health, and the mind conscious of God's forgiveness and his favor will be joyful.

"'I heard the voice of Jesus say, 'Come unto Me and rest;
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down thy head upon My breast.'
I came to Jesus as I was, weary and worn and sad,
I found in him a resting place, and He has made me glad.'

"And thus so far as disease comes from a condition of the mind, the principles of Christianity sincerely accepted and faithfully applied are calculated to bring physical healing. It is this truth about Christianity which the Immanuel movement is bringing out. Its leaders are Christian men. They cling to every doctrine of our evangelical faith. They do not ignore the fact of sin; they do not deny the reality of sickness. They stand for everything in healing that Christian Science or any other cult can do, but they stand for it as a part of Christianity, not apart from it. And the multitude of authenticated cures which have resulted from their labors stand as witnesses to the truth that Christianity is a religion of healing. But there is another truth along this line which is in great need of emphasis in these days.

The Reason Why.

"Christianity as a religion is a source of health because its moral law is the law of physical well-being. Nature has her laws of health as well as her laws for the cure of disease, and other things being equal the man who obeys those laws will preserve health and the man who disobeys those laws will lose his health.

"This is a fact that we do not often enough appreciate, that behind every diseased body, behind every bit of physical suffering is a broken law. The man himself may not have broken the law, but someone before him has transmitted the punishment. Intemperance, overwork, excess of any kind has its results in the breakdown of the nervous system, in an enfeebled and diseased body.

"It is a good thing to have a cure for disease, but it is a better thing to prevent it. And here is the remarkable truth that I wish we might note, namely, that the laws of Christianity are the laws of health, that the commandments God gave man for his moral and spiritual well-being also decide the quality of his physical life. We are impatient with many of these laws. We think they are arbitrary and unnecessary, but it is not so. Take for instance the legislation of Moses. There is much of it that is out of place and obsolete to-day; nevertheless it is the verdict of scientists and physicians that those laws of ceremonial cleansing, of the clean and unclean, beside having a religious significance, also had a physical value and that they preserved the health of the Israelitish nation, and it is not without significance that in history the Jew has been one of the most virile and persistent races that we know. Take the law of the Sabbath that commanded rest and relaxation from ordinary pursuits and avocations. Man may make light of that law to-day and call it arbitrary, but science is showing more and more that the human body is a machine that can run so long and then needs to be slowed down for repairs and rest or else disaster ensues. Take that law of chastity and I need not tell you that half the horrors of disease that have caused men to writhe in agony and have brought suffering to future generations have come from the breaking of that law. Obedience to the law of Christianity brings not only spiritual but physical well-being. Christianity demands of men that they shall be self-controlled, that they shall reverence their bodies as the temple of God, and other things being equal the man who obeys the laws of Christianity will preserve health, live to a good old age and transmit health, not disease, to his posterity.

Spirit of Philanthropy.

"Christianity is a religion of health because its spirit of philanthropy inspires men to minister unto the sick and to seek to alleviate their suffering. Jesus not only thus ministered but he called upon his disciples to do so, and ever since he lived he has inspired men with the feeling of pity and compassion which has been fruitful in the alleviation of human suffering. What a contrast between conditions in the world when he left and conditions to-day. No explorer in the ruins of Egypt or of Greece has yet come across the remains of a hospital. No student of ancient history has found a nation which devoted themselves in particular care and tenderness to the sick and to the diseased. But to-day every Christian community has its hospitals and its institutions for the care and cure of the suffering; has its special workers who devote their lives to ministering unto the sick and in seeking cures for disease, and I believe that the facts will bear me out when I say that spirit of pity and of helpfulness finds its inspiration in Him who called upon His followers to love each other. It is that spirit of Christian philanthropy that inspires the trained nurse and sends her out to be an angel of ministry by the bedside of pain. It is that spirit of philanthropy that brings the skilled physician at your summons at any hour of the day or night. There is no more devoted class of men in the world than our physicians. There are none who do more gratuitously. All the great discoveries of medical science have been given to the world freely, without money and without price. It is an unwritten law among physicians that they shall not advertise because they refuse to put their services upon a commercial basis.

"And it is that same spirit of Christian philanthropy that has inspired the tremendous advance which medical science has made in the last century in the discovery of how to combat pestilence and disease.

"Lastly it is that spirit of Christianity that sends the medical missionary out into the heathen world, there to bring the best knowledge and skill of the twentieth century to fight the fearful suffering and the terrible disease of pagan lands.

"Behind all our splendid knowledge of medicine, behind all our glorious victories in the campaign against disease and pain, behind all the great and noble names of the medical profession there stands that spirit of philanthropy which is the spirit of Christ.

"Let us then draw our conclusion. Christianity is a religion that makes for health and healing, in the faith it inspires, in the laws it enforces and in the spirit it inculcates. I know that as I speak these words thousands of true and devoted Christians are lying upon sick beds, are suffering from disease and yet that is not because Christianity does not possess the power of healing, but because we have not yet fully applied that power to the conditions which cause disease. The root cause of disease is sin, sin against God's law or against nature's law. And when obedience to Christ shall have brought man into conformity with the law of righteousness then the Son of Righteousness will arise with healing in his wings.

The Secret of It.

"My friends we do not need a new religion in order to have healing, we need to use the religion that we have. One of our pastors tells of meeting a man who for twelve years had suffered without a day's respite from pain; for twelve years he had taken strong medicine; one day when he was especially ill he found his physician had left the city. The man who was with him insisted on carrying him off to a lady who told him there was no such thing as matter or sickness, that all that is is good. And after three or four days she succeeded in making him believe that he could live without medicine, and in a months' time he stood forth blessed with perfect health and with the strength only less than that of an athlete. The secret of it was that he cast out fear and worry. He began to trust God for his future and the trustful, happy spirit within was medicine to the body without. That is Christ's principle, not Mrs. Eddy's. It belongs to the Sermon on the Mount, not to the philosophy of man. What we need to do is to read our Bibles more, to heed the teachings of our own faith. If we were stronger spiritually we would be stronger mentally and physically. What we need is more faith, more prayer, more trust in God. So shall we be cured of many ills, so shall we bring courage and cheer and helpfulness to sick and suffering humanity.

JOTTINGS.

As They Emanate From the Pen of Mattie E. Hull.

To the Editor:—It seems to me that every Spiritualist who reads the paper published in defense of his cause, has a reason these days to "rejoice and be exceeding glad" as he contemplates the outlook of the movement so dear to him. There may have been occasions in the past when some of our most faithful and honest workers may have been partially excusable in becoming somewhat pessimistic, but that time is not now.

If we had a better understanding of principles we would surely have less misunderstanding of persons.

Lily Dale's Trimph.

Perhaps it would be more appropriate to say, "P. L. O. A. Keeler's triumph!" I will let it go as above written, because Mr. Keeler has for so many years been identified with Lily Dale, and has done so great a work there, one can hardly disassociate.

The request of the Official Board of the Assembly was a just one, on behalf of the cause of Spiritualism, and the Association conducting meetings at Laly Dale. Mr. Keeler's attitude toward the management was not only a test of integrity as a man, but gave absolute proof of his trustfulness in his "Spirit Guides."

Dr. Warne of the Official Board of Lily Dale, may have been inspired when he referred to Talmage, "the great preacher," who six times delivered his unwarranted, and most bitter attack on Spiritualism, as having been under the influence of excarnate spirits who "hated Spiritualism," when he stated an eaves-dropper must have been around, when he found between the closed slates, a response to his words, signed, "Moses Hull."

This was very natural. Mr Hull, as many of my readers know, replied in full to Mr. Talmage's terrific onslaught on Spiritualism. Possibly many who read these lines, read the the reply published first in the Banner of Light, afterwards in pamphlet form. It was entitled, "Talmagean Inanities."

It is quite natural to suppose Mr. Hull would be present on that occasion, as he long since became interested in the work at Lily Dale, and for many years had been confident of the genuineness of Mr. Keeler's mediumship.

Another Proof of Mr. Hull's Presence at Lily Dale.

On one occasion (I think this occurred at a session of the meeting held at Forest Temple) a friend with whom I am in correspondence, living a short distance from the Dale, was told by a medium—an entire stranger—that Moses Hull was present, and desired to give her a message. He cited the fact that she had recently received a letter from me, and he referred to certain contents in the letter; he also gave her a test aside from this.

The Morris Pratt.

The vacation days are fast slipping away. In a few weeks the beautiful Temple will be opened, and students will be in the class room. Dear reader, whoever you are, wherever you may be, if you are unacquainted with the work of this grand Institute send your address to Prof. A. J. Weaver, and ask for printed matter giving you information.

Some of Our Graduates.

are already in the field at work, and we trust others will be one year hence.

Miss Sara Hull, (Mr. Hull's niece) is the first among our students to appear as a lecturer, on the Pacific Coast. She is filling a month's engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of Seattle, and we learn her work is well received. The writer learns from a correspondent at Lily Dale, that Amalia Pfenning, a member of the first class graduated from the M. P. I., was well received as a lecturer on the platform at Lily Dale. Complimentary words were sent me regarding her work.

Yesterday, the 11th inst., was the day set apart at Mt. Pleasant Park (Clinton, Iowa) to consider the interest of the school. I am informed that two of the trustees and several students, among them several graduates, will participate in the work of the day.

Field Work.

I desire to state again that I intend to make a brief eastern trip in a few weeks and would like work along the line in Indiana, Ohio, or Western N. Y. If any desire to correspond with me relative to the matter write soon, please.

To those who have sent orders for Mr. Hull's Biography, and written me such delightful letters since the publication of my former article, I send thanks.

Although bearing at times, burdens many, and walking at times through shadowy places, I know in truth there are no sunless days or starless nights. We cannot see beyond the clouds, with our finite vision; we cannot penetrate with mortal sense the blackened night-sky, but we know the sun shines and the stars glisten.

As I look upon my surroundings from the porch this lovely summer day, the grass, flowers and vines are sad reminders of the dear one who, only a little while ago made them his pride and care, and for a moment the sense of a great physical loss overwhelms me. Then there falls on my spirit a calm, and

"The hush o'er my heart is as holy"
As a spot some angel had known.

O, the comfort, the hope, the strength that Spiritualism gives us. I daily pledge my devotion, my strength and what little talent I possess in the defense of the Soul's Teacher, and comforter, Modern Spiritualism. MATTIE E. HULL.

THE POTENCY OF THE INVISIBLE.

The Wonders Accomplished Through Its Influence.—Motive Power by Wireless.

Running trains by wireless [says the Chicago Tribune] is the idea of Frederick H. Millener, who has perfected and proved an invention for moving huge bodies by electricity wirelessly conducted. The apparatus consists of a truck weighing nearly three tons and having about ten horse power. Including its own weight it hauls a load of more than twenty tons. The wireless truck carries 144 feet of copper wire made into wireless wings or antennae, and fixed one set on each side of the truck at a height of about four feet from the ground. The cylindrical shape is preferred by Dr. Millener, as it permits the placing of the antennae so low as not to interfere when cars pass through tunnels or under bridges—an important consideration. Similar wings, built in the cylindrical form and attuned to the electrical truck, swing from a sixty-five foot flagpole at the central station, and from these antennae flow the controlled power waves which move with unfailing accuracy to the traveling truck and control its movements with unfailing perfection. Dr. Millener's invention may be appled to railroad signaling, which is now done by cumbersome lever and wires, and therefore cannot be done at any great distance from the signal towers. With Dr. Millener's invention any number of signals can be thrown or lowered by the mere touching of the sending device, and it matters not whether the signals be fifty feet, or fifty miles away. The device can be also applied to railroad telegraphy. Dr. Millener can ring a bell in a given one of any number of stations and leave bells in the others undisturbed. Torpedoes equipped with Dr. Millener's "selective device" can be steered through the water with unfailing accuracy by having the control of the rudder attuned so as to be controlled thereby. It is thought that one man can operate a number of trains on a railroad system of several hundred miles in length with the selective device attuned to the locomotives of the several trains, so that a certain truck would affect only a given locomotive; "and with a system of electric registration lights to show where each train is and its course of movement, it is not out of the range of the probable and practicable. When a train is ready to leave a station, the station agent merely would have to send a wireless flash to the central operating station, whence the locomotive would be started and run to the next station." Dr. Millener thinks that by his invention it will be possible to telegraph from a moving automobile.

DEAFNESS

Successfully Treated

By the Simplest Methods Yet Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of the cases of deafness brought to our attention are the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed relief is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying hence the inability of specialists to always effect a cure. Neither can ear drums cure deafness. But there is a scientific treatment for deafness and catarrh which is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the vibration of sound. Actina is also very successful in relieving ringing noises in the head. We have known people afflicted with this distressing trouble for years to be entirely relieved by a few week's use. Actina has always been very successful in the treatment of hay fever, asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds, headache and other troubles that are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina will be sent on trial, postpaid. Write us about your case. Our advice will be free as well as a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Disease. Address Actina Appliance Co. Bishop A. Beals writes from Summerland, Cal.: "Brother Dean Clarke's 'Epigrams and Nuggets,' that appear in The Progressive Thinker contain a sermon in each one, and are full of wit, reason and common sense and for household words make a rich setting for our everyday life and a compliment to the worthy author."

Dr. J. M. Peebles writes to Dr. T. Wilkins, with whom he had made an engagement to assist in opening the Golden Rule season of meetings, that he has been suddenly called to the bedside of his sick wife in New Jersey, and cannot tell as to his engagement with that society. It will be a disappointment to many, and it is a great sadness to Dr. Peebles. The Golden Rule Society gives promise of a good program at the opening, and will issue the same soon.

Mrs. Hilbert returned from the Chesterfield camp early last week, and seems to have had a good rest, though ailing most of the time while on the grounds. She reports a very quiet camp, with a few kickers against the C. S. L. and the I. S. S. A., but she is always able to hold her own with such persons, at any rate those who do not know what they are talking about. She knows what both those organizations stand for.

Correspondent writes: "Once more the name of Mrs. G. Partridge the well known psychic comes before the people, this time in Los Angeles, Cal. It is a pleasure to know this lady has not gone back on her mediumship, for the world needs many more such as Spiritualism she. The real need in she. The real need in Spiritualism to-day is the genuine workers and none but the genuine."

Mrs. C. Bergere writes: "The Fraternal Daughters' Social, held at the home of Mrs. Foute on Wednesday, August 26, was an enjoyable affair. The supper gets better every time and the smile on the face of the financial secretary will be hard to remove. While some were having readings, those waiting were entertained with music and song. We had also a short talk on Spiritualism by Mr. Warner, followed by one on the standing of the Order financially, etc., by Mrs. Adams. Prayers, both verbal and silent, were offered for the speedy and full recovery of our beloved Sister, Mrs. Ada T. Knapp."

R. W. Tennant writes: "There was another large and very interesting gathering at our Sunday evening meeting, at 77 East 31st St. Owing to the presence of many strangers with us, we omitted the usual lecture upon this occasion. We had a short but pleasant talk by Dr. Burgess, who has just returned from a delightful visit to Lily Dale; a pleasing poem from Dr. T. Wilkins; messages from our President, Mrs. Maggie Henry, Mr. Mansell of Boston, Mrs. White of California, and Mr. Schaefer, altogether one of the best possible evenings of enjoyment and interest, etc."

B. Weinberg, secretary, writes: "We have good news to all Spiritualists and investigators of the city, something which one and all ought to be proud of. The time has come when an "Old Spiritual Home has been erected by the First German Spiritual Society, known as Gartleman's, located at the corner of Ashland avenue and Thirteenth street, where the weekly meetings are held each Sunday at 3 o'clock, with very good lectures and spirit communications, all carrying a very harmonious and good influence. The society will have a picnic in its own grove, known as Gartleman's Grove, where the Home is located, on Monday, September 7, Labor Day, which will give all a good chance to enjoy themselves. We invite all Spiritually inclined persons to be there in time, so that we will be able to start our meeting at 3 o'clock sharp, Each one should take an interest in the work, and help enlarge our treasury, so we can open the doors of the Home for such needy ones as may apply. The Home is not intended for Germans only; it is for all who are spiritually inclined. The way to the Grove: Take Aurora-Elgin L. at 5th avenue terminal station, and Marshfield avenue; 52nd avenue; Desplaines avenue; 5th avenue, Maywood; 17th avenue, Maywood. Admission at gate 25 cents.

Will V. Nicum writes from Lake Brady Camp: "I have one more week of camp work which closes a very successful season, and then I begin my fall work, September and October, at Pittsburgh, Pa. I have a few open dates for the winter months, and any society desiring my services can address me at 1561 West 2nd street, Dayton, Ohio."

Harry J. Moore desires to correspond with societies wishing to employ a speaker for the fall and winter months. Address him at 818 Erie street, Toledo, Ohio.

Miss Eugenia Rouble, the efficient Secretary of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, has been with her old-time friend, Mrs. Amanda Coffman at Grand Rapids, Mich., taking a much needed rest. Her arduous work as assistant chief bookkeeper at the Postal Telegraph headquarters, her close attention to the duties of Secretary of the I. S. S. A, her two or three series of entertaining visitors at her beautiful home, and the too great amount of work generally and too little rest, made it necessary to take a rest. It is honed she will return recuperated greatly."

Correspondent writes: "Miss Elizabeth Harlow paid a flying visit to Chicago last week, and spent a day with Dr. and Mrs. Caird. Chicago friends, while pleased at her success, are sorry to learn that owing to engagements they will be unable to hear her until after 1910. We hope this will prove an incentive to our people to get together and make Chicago the center from which such stars radiate, instead of passing through."

H. Hegdahl writes from Minneapolis, Minn.:: "From July 26th to the 29th, I held meetings in Princeton. They were well attended by a class of good thinking people. There will in the near future be an organization there, with new life and activity. There was an organization there, but many of the old members had moved to other parts to live, and many others have moved beyond the Veil of Earthly existence, and now there must be added new blood to our ranks. This we hope at Princeton. There is need of young people to take up the work. Sisters and brothers at Princeton, take moral courage, come out and stand for the truth. You have nothing but old superstition to lose, and eternal knowledge to gain. Get together and work; without work there is no gain. Spiritualism is a truth that engages the attention of the whole thinking world, not Princeton alone. Set aside one or two evenings a week for your own spiritual good; one or two hours for your own soul's spiritual unfoldment."

Chris Krattle writes from Albion, N. Y.: "I have received your 8 premium books, and return my thanks to you for the same. I never expected to get such a number of so good books as these for such a small amount of money. I have been greatly surprised with them. I am so glad now to have sent for them."

Correspondent writes: "The funeral services held over the form of Mrs. Effie Moss, the well-known materializing medium, who died recently at Carlsbad, New Mexico, at Mr. Perrigo's morgue chapel, on Wednesday, August 26, was largely attended by the Spiritualists of the city. Mrs. Nora E. Hill offered the invocation, Mrs. Maggie Waite, Dr. T. Wilkins, Dr. C. A. Burgess and W. J. Lynn delivered short addresses. Dr. C. A. Burgess, president of the Chicago Spiritualist League, under whose auspices the funeral was conducted, took charge of the program, and nicely was it carried out, and to the entire satisfaction of the children of Mrs. Moss, and as was her last request. The services at the grave, in Oakwood Cemetery, were very impressive, conducted by Mrs. Waite, Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Brockway and Dr. Wilkins. Mr. Perrigo acted as funeral director himself, and was very attentive to the wants of the followers of the beloved arisen. The Chicago Spiritualist League has already received high praise for their attention to every detail of the ceremony and methodical rites."

Oscar A. Edgerly's engagements as made for the season of 1908 and 1909, are as follows: September with the Ladies' Spiritual Temple Fund Society of Cleveland, Ohio; October, with the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists, of Chicago, Ill.; November with the First Spiritual Church of Pittsburg, Pa.; December, 1908, and January 1909, with the First Church of Spiritualists of Baltimore, Md.; February and March with the Southern Cassadaga Spiritualist Camp meeting Association; April and May with the Spiritual Fraternity, Ayer's Temple, Boston, Mass.; June 1909, is still open for engagement. Mr. Edgerly's home address is 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. Hattie F. R. Peet, Corresponding Secretary, writes: "Members and friends of the Band of Harmony enjoyed a delightful afternoon and evening at the beautiful suburban home of Mr. and Mrs. Rohrbach, Rogers Park on Thursday last. Our next and last social of the season, will be held at the home of Mrs. E. A. Dyuliner, 93 Bowen avenue, Thursday afternoon and evening, September 10. There will be a grand Tea-Party in the afternoon, with readings and Progressive Euchre in the evening, with many fine prizes. Ladies bring lunch for themselves and friends; coffee served at 6 p. m. All cordially invited. We hope each member will accept this invitation, and all unite to make this social a success. Take Cottage Grove avenue cars to 41st street; go east to Ellis avenue; then south one block to Bowen avenue.

Mrs. M. E. Taylor writes from Wichita, Kan.: "Rev. Edna McCarthy has given us several of her fine lectures here, and something to think about. A large and appreciative audience greeted her as on former occasions. While here she stopped at the home of the writer, who feels highly honored to have the pleasure of entertaining her. Anyone wishing to correspond with her, will please adress her in care of Josephine Bruer, Sterling, Kan."

The Chicago Spiritualists' League will begin its regular monthly, Saturday afternoon and evening meetings on Saturday afternoon and evening, October 3. Everybody knows what that means, and will be ready to take up the thread of these interesting meetings where they left off at the beginning of the heated term. Don't forget to bring your lunch, as you tocmfwypetaoinshrdluaoincmfwyp the League committee expect to serve the coffee, as usual. The Programs will soon be out, and a good one it promises to be, an uplifting one.

TO THOSE INTERESTED IN PSYCHICAL RESEARCH

It is acknowledged by the leading Spiritualists that the investigation of the phenomena by trained minds and the application of scientific methods have done more for Spiritualists' belief than all others combined. The leading cities of the world have such societies. Chicago has none. There is now being an effort made to establish such a society in Chicago. No dues payable until the society is organized. Those who would encourage such a project by becoming members, are invidet to send their names to

D. S. HAGER, M. D.
181 West Madison St., Chicago.

Treasurer writes: "The Golden Rule has its cards out for the opening of the season's work and to see the program is to want to catch the vibration of this interesting occasion. To say that Dr. Burgess, as chairman of the committee on arrangements, has put his activity into the opening, is sufficient to assure its success. The speakers and mediums will be in their best fettle, and the meeting, all day, will be full of interest."

Correspondent writes: "The picnic of the Progressive Spiritual Church at Rasch's Grove, was a success, even if it was a very hot day. Everything went along without a hitch, and all were in their usual enthusiastic mood, with the increase of enthusiasm of the woods and the beach added. The evening services were presided over by the pastor, and the speakers and mediums were at their best. All the afternoon and until a late hour in the night these good people were telling what the spirit and Spiritualism meant to them, led off by a short talk by Dr. T. Wilkins and one by Dr. Burgess, and a message by the latter. As the names of some of the mediums have escaped, we hesitate to mention any of the names. It is but just to say that the management proved their power over the spirit of the occasion."

Mrs. Nora E. Hill has returned from her pleasant outing and engagement at the Delphos, Kansas, Camp meeting. She looks as though the trip, the rest, the change of pasture, the satisfaction of having done some good while she was gone, have rejuvenated her. Nora is always ready for the spiritual work, though she may be ailing in the flesh, at times.

Brother Will M. Kellogg sends us $17 in subscriptions from the Clinton camp. A pretty good showing this year.

Correspondent writes: "Miss Mattie Woodbury, of Laingsburg, Mich., is ready for work in any town in the state. She is known as an honest representative of the Cause, and one who appreciates The Progressive Thinker."

On and after Sept. 1 Chas. A. Thompson's address will be 717 Monroe street, three doors west of Lincoln street; transfer on either Madison or Robey street cars. Circle every Thursday evening at 8 p. m. Admission 25 cents.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood speaks in high terms of the Lily Dale camp. He says: "I have had a splendid class from start to finish. Over 200 were present at my last class lecture, and much enthusiasm was manifested. We will return to 723 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., our address in the future."

Mrs. Alex. Caird, secretary, writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club held one of the largest gatherings of the season at its hall, 70 E. Adams street, Tuesday, Aug. 25. In spite of the strenuous work done by the mediums present, Mrs. Howes doing special work, many of those in attendance were obliged to leave without receiving the much looked-for reading. The next tea party will be held Sept. 22. Several new mediums have promised to be present. Watch the next Progressive Thinker for a list of names; so be on hand, friends. Do not be discouraged, but try again. The regular business meetings will take place Sept. 8. All members are requested to be present."

ONSET CAMP MEETING.

The last week of camp has arrived, and certainly this has been one of the best seasons ever held. The speakers have been the best we could procure, and everybody has seemed pleased with the results. Sunday, the 23rd, we had two of the greatest lectures it was ever our privilege to hear, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond gave one of the lectures, her subject, "The Unfrequented Way." She handled it most masterfully, and she held her audience in rapt attention. In the afternoon Mr. Elbert Hubbard gave his address on "The Signs of the Times." His manner is most charming, his witticisms appreciated, his points most pointed, and his audience most appreciative.

Mrs. Walter Smith sang a vocal selection which was finely rendered. In the evening a meeting was held in the Temple. It was surprising to see how eager the people were to listen; and a real love feast was presented. Dr. Hale sang several of Prof. Longley's songs. Mr. E. W. Hatch gave piano selections, and Miss Susie C. Clark, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Mrs. Milton Rathbun and Mrs. Annie Coggeshall, all gave of their work, making all together a most harmonious meeting.

The vice-president of the association, Mr. J. B. Hatch, presided.

Monday we had a very enjoyable conference. Tuesday we had for speaker Mrs. Milton Rathbun, who gave us a most instructive and admirable address. Wednesday was conference day again, and as usual the time was most profitableably spent.

Thursday Mr. Thos. Cross gave a masterly address on the subject, "What Has Spiritualism Accomplished?" He felt that Spiritualists needed a little encouragement, so much soiled linen had been washed in public lately, that it looked to many as though it was our linen, when in reality it did not belong to us at all. He told of the accomplishments which had been done in the past 60 years, and after he was through with the lecture, every one felt better for having listened. Dr. Hale was the vocalist, and sang several selections. In the evening Mr. T. A. Wiggin gave one of his remarkable test seances, and everything about it was of the best.

The weather is delightful here, and everything promises good for the closing of the season. We have had a Morris Pratt day, which was under the direction of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond; it was of a most interesting character, and of benefit we hope to the school.

Greetings to all readers.

PASTOR TURNS ON CHURCH.

Man Driven to Retirement by Weak Eyes Quits Faith as He Dies—Shoots Himself After Writing to Friend and His Two Children—Had Given Up Struggle—Former Preacher, Broken in Health and Fortune, at End of Life Gives Credit to Ingersoll and Says He Could Not Justify His Life by Teachings of Jesus—Regrets That Money Is So Necessary to Life and Says He Cannot Worship It.

A special dispatch from New York to the Cleveland Plaindealer, Cleveland, Ohio, has the following:

The history of a broken man, a former pastor who renounced his belief in the efficacy of the church, who gave up with a bitter smile the struggle for existence, and who was driven half mad by illness and approaching blindness, came out to-day in the suicide of the Rev. Albert H. Trick.

Mr. Trick, who was once pastor of a Presbyterian church in Chicago, and later had a charge in Saratoga, N. Y., shot himself in a room in a Mills hotel to-day. He left letters saying that he could not worship "America's trinity—success, pleasure and gold," and lamenting the fact that he could not better provide for his children.

Failing sight is thought to have had a great deal to do with the suicide. Weakened eyes drove the pastor from his work in Saratoga several years ago, and since then he had obtained an insecure livelihood as an insurance agent in this city.

In a letter which he left to Charles N. Dowd of this city, who had befriended him, the former pastor declared that he was lonely even in the church when he attempted to "square his soul by the teachings of Jesus," and asserted that the modern church more nearly follows the example of Robert Ingersoll, that those of Jesus. The letter read in part as follows:

"I have never been able to conquer an inborn contempt for the place money has in this world, though knowing so well how absolutely necessary a fair amount of it, at least is to all of us. I never could adapt myself, in view of my early ideas, to the methods by which money is made. They are so transparently selfish and more or less unscrupulous, whether used by the church or the so-called 'world.' I never could worship America's trinity—success, pleasure and gold. I am too old and settled in my character to change, though my eyes have long been spent on my delusions.

Was Lonely in Church.

"I took deeply to heart the teachings of Jesus, and tried hard and long to square my soul by them. I found at last what a pitiful mistake I had made, and how lonely I was even in the church. The average man cares little about what Jesus taught, and it makes one heartsick to hear its ecclesiastics prate about it.

"I rejoice in the better day dawning when society, with its superstitions and errors, like all the other religions of men, shall have passed away and religion itself, free and simple, religion that has a passion for truth, justice, love and liberty, purity and humanity shall prevail. Ye gods, what does the church care for these things? It twists all the facts, philosophy and expressions of history to make them square, with the petty traditions and systems of a day.

"The day will soon come when the world will prove that, sacred as the place Jesus holds in the world's esteem, they are no more bound by what he taught, did and thought than they are by the precepts of Robert Ingersoll and the modern church more nearly follows this exemplary and kindly and honest American than they do the oriental.

"I wish I could live and preach this, but I am broken too much and the habit of my long life of self-denial and suffering—always so tragical—forbids it. I do not complain. It is all of destiny."

To his two sons and a daughter who live in Brooklyn the former pastor wrote:

"I did this myself. Do not blame me. I am unable longer to providee for you. However, go along in the way that I have taught you. Do not mention my domestic troubles to anyone.—Your father."

Later a second letter was found which was also adressed to the children. This letter read:

"My dear children: I solemnly warn you never to reproach each other or yourselves on account of this matter. You are not to blame if your father has proved unable to provide for you. Do not talk about our little domestic matters. It will do us no good. Your lives are before you. Make the best of them and forget and forgive your father, who, you all know loves you all, and has at least given you all he had. I am grateful that you are as old as you are and as well as you are.—Your devoted father."

Questions Asked by an Anxious Student of Nature.

1. Is electricity a principle or a substance?

2. What relation has the statement in the 8th chapter Revelations, 4th and 5th verses, to electricity?

3. Also, can you explain 10th Chap. Rev., 3 and 4 verses?

Answer.—1. Electricity is a principle, a force, also a substance, all depending upon what capacity it is used in or serving in.

Ans.—2. The passage in 8th Chapter Rev., verses 4 and 5, also in 10th Chapter of the same book, were lessons on symbolism, describing the dynamic output of the people, their exhaled electro-magnetic substance sent forth in strong desires and thoughts, which, when pure, rise as incense and are collected by those in authority, for action to improve the world and people.

It is also true that the symbolism points to electrical demonstrations which are destined to be realized on Earth in the last, or seventh cycle of the present eternity, which time is now.

During this advancing cycle all nature's secrets will be revealed, also demonstrated. This is in compliance with immutable law. Where the vision belonged to things to be realized in the so-called latter days, the seven thunders uttered their voices etc," it has reference to the seven specific grades of electricity which are incorporated in mankind as the principles of life and motive power, but the further elements contained in the human mechanism are also a necessity, for in man all of nature's forces and substances are interactive the same as in nature, wherefore man is called an epitome of the universe.

Here other questons were asked, viz.: How will those seven thunders utter their voices? If it has reference to different grades of electricity and means elemental and electrical disturbances, then we would be pleased to know if there is a special time for it, or a special process made use of, governed by those seven spirits of God, referred to?

For answer to these last questions two mighty spirits appeared before me, not visible to the others. One called himself Jupiter, master over electrical forces and displays. He caused to appear, an immense tube. Its size was enormous. As he approached me he said:

"Behold, I have collected so great an amount of surplus electricities, that were I to unbolt it all the so-called mundane would be shattered into fragments; but this is not granted nor desired on our part, but the necessary electrical display will take place and in accordance with nature's own ruling in all her realms; but at a time when planetary conjunctions call for special demonstrations then they take place.

All intervention in nature's just rules are prohibited. All interactive forces play for demonstrations at such times, however, are presided over by the respective Rulers in each special dominion. Thus these Masters utter their voices and the statements in the book cited are very incorrect and misleading. The original script was not rightly deciphered, and incorrectly translated.

The forces and principles of nature are wishes governed by those Masters styled the Seven Spirits of God, not for destructive purposes, but to become servants of the people and benefactors as the people learn by demonstration how to gain control of them to use them rightly.

The face of an immense clock was then shown me, which was explained as being the Great World Clock by which all events were regulated and the time for the referred-to demonstration has arrived.

This ended the vision. These are repeated visions, in part, that is, similar things were shown and explained to me in former years. Its repetition convinces me that the time for something special is very close.

NOT IMPOSSIBLE.

An Impressive Story About Bryan.

To the Editor: I enclose herewith a clipping from a secular paper in 1903, thinking I would see if anything ever did come of it, or not.

W. E. ROBINSON.

"Speaking of Washington," said the newspaper man, "I have a little story about William Jennings Bryan that will be interesting to the people who believe in spirits and other supernatural things, which I don't have any faith in. Along in 1892 I knew in Washington one of the most intellectual and intelligent women I have ever known. She believed in all these psychic folderols which I did not believe at all, but her mental qualities attracted my highest admiration and I talked with her whenever I had the opportunity. One evening at her house she told me she had met a few evenings before a young man, introduced by a Senator, whom she believed to be the coming man. She said his name was Bryan and that he was from Nebraska, but more than that she did not know. She said he had in him the making of one of the greatest men the country had ever known, but that he did not know it yet and would not until the occasion offered for him to come to the front. She asked me if I knew him, and I told her I did, and that I thought he was bright enough, but nothing unusual. She told me to wait and see how much I was mistaken. She then went into a mental analysis, or whatever you might call it, of him, and wound up by asking who was to be the Democratic nominee at the next convention. I told her it was altogether too far away to make any forecasts. She said Bryan would be the man, but that he would not be elected. The President and he would practically revolutionize the politics of the country, if not the government. Of course I laughed at her then, and afterwards when she talked of her man of destiny, but she never changed her opinion in the slightest. One day, a couple of years after meeting Mr. Bryan, she died suddenly. Just went out like a brilliant light that consumes itself.

"In time the date of the Democratic convention of 1896 arrived and I went to Chicago for the newspaper I represented. You all know the result of that convention. I came back to Washington immediately after it was over and in the mail waiting for me was a letter from a reputable physician of Washington, whom I did not know personally, but by reputation, and who knew me in the same way. He apologized for writing, but said a patient of his, a young woman and a medium, had at one of her seances received a message from some one she had never heard of addressed to me, and had asked him to send it to me. It was plain to read between the lines that he did not like the task assigned but he was doing it to please his patient. The young woman I had never heard of. Neither she nor the physician understood what the letter meant, nor did they know the name that was signed to it, and they sent it to me because they thought it might be of some importance. The note was very brief and said simply: "Dear Friend: What do you think now of what I told Oct. 15, four years ago?" It was signed by the full name of the lady who had made the prediction to me, and the date was right, because I remembered it as an anniversary. But how did those people know about it, and where did the message come from? The sender had been dead for two years or more, and she did not know these people at all. As I said before, I don't believe in the supernatural, but when a thing like that happens to a man it makes an impression that he cannot forget. I still have my doubts, but if Bryan ever is elected, I'll be blamed if I don't give up orthodoxy and go over to the spirits."

Harmony Grove Camp, California.

I depended on another to write up our Harmony Grove camp meeting, but seeing nothing as yet, will at this late date ask space for a short item.

The camp just ended has certainly been a very successful one in every respect. The association tents were all occupied during the entire camp, and at times we could have rented more if we had them, which makes me think the company should prepare a number before another camp opens. We had a fine corps of workers, both lecturers and message mediums, who worked together and harmonized so nicely that it seemed like one large family of brothers and sisters,

This was my fourth year as secretary and camp manager, and it does me proud to know that the camp has gone ahead in the way of improvements during that time, more than it ever had before. It is also a great satisfaction to me, now that I have declined the secretaryship any longer, to know that the camp is absolutely free from debt, and has a few dollars in the treasury to begin with another year.

And my earnest desire is, that my successor, M. D. Thiebaud, of San Bernardino, who was unanimously elected secretary for the ensuing year, will meet with even greater success in the future.

The camp undoubtedly has as fine a board of officers as could be found anywhere, with J. L. Dryden, of San Bernardino, as president; E. B. Lowman, of Escondido, vice-president; Ezra Foster, of Bernardo, treasurer; Henry Nulton, of Escondido, and Mrs. C. A. Dodge, of San Diego, directors; and M. D. Thiebaud, of San Bernardino, secretary, which certainly assures the future success of Harmony Grove.

Ex-secretary.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

THE ARCANA OF NATURE.—I am able to announce the publication of this book, Oct. 1. It will be issued simultaneously in London and New York. Swan, Sonnenschein & Co., England, and The Stillman Co., New York, are the publishers. Dr. Emmet Densmore edits the work and contributes a most valuable introduction. The book has been many years out of print. It will now be issued in beautiful type and binding. The price, $1.50. Friends who have so repeatedly asked for the book will have an opportunity to obtain it. They will confer a favor by sending their orders direct to me at Berlin Heights, O.

Victor M. Barton:—Q.—I would thank you if you could point out to me where I could secure a record or list of legacies in Germany, left to people who have yet to be found and identified.

A.—There is not any reliable list of such legacies kept in this country. There may be faked lists, used by shysters to defraud the credulous. Apply to the German Minister at Washington, or the American, at Berlin.

* * *

James Quillen:—Q.—When is All Soul's Day, and what is its purpose?

A.—Nov. 2. It is for the honor and repose of the dead, and commemorated by their friends by special ceremonies and the mass.

It is really an appropriate and beautiful offering of affection, and preserves and keeps green in memory the dear departed.

General Delevan Bates:—Q.—A perfect definition of anything is such a description as will distinguish it from everything else in nature. You have a very good command of the English language, will you please give definitions to the following words, in The Progressive Thinker. Make them brief and to the point, as is Mrs. Besant's definition of Happiness, viz.: "Pleasant sensations and pleasant thoughts." This is a perfect definition, according to my idea. These are the words:

Soul.
Spirit.
Mind.
Individuality.
Personality.
Life.
Death.

A.—It will be difficult to define the words given with the brevity and poetic suggestiveness of the example given. Most of these words have been and are used with such vague looseness of thought, that clearness and brevity are difficult to attain. Thus to extend the trinity—the threefold division—to man, theologians gave him a body, soul and spirit. The soul is superfluous, for it and the spirit are the same.

The soul is the spiritual portion of man.

The Spirit is the conscious, thinking, active self, having a continued existence after separating from the physical body.

Mind is the expression of the energies of the spirit, as physical force is that of the body.

Individuality is the sum and expression of all past expressions of personal and of remotest heredity.

Personality characterizes a self-conscious being, as opposed to an unconscious thing. While almost identical in meaning with individuality, it carries with it a sense of greater activity.

Life, as manifest in a being, is the sum and individualization of the Living energies of the cosmos.

Life, as a general expression, is the spiritual energy of creation.

Death is the suspension of the forces of life.

Applied to man, it is the severance of the union between the spiritual being—the soul—and the physical body.

Walter Loving:—Q.—How is the distance of the planets and stars from the earth calculated with certainty?

A.—By their parallax, or the angles they subtend. The planets are comparatively so near that the diameter of the earth may be taken as a base line. Thus the angles formed from the opposite sides, determine the distance at which the lines will meet, extended to a given planet. The problem is one readily understood. If you were on one side of a river and desired to know its width, the measurement could be made with exceeding accuracy. You would measure along the bank a base line of say 100 feet. Then with an instrument designed for the purpose you would take the angles of some object on the opposite shore, from each end of this line. With these elements the solution is readily made.

In precisely the same manner is the distance of the heavenly bodies determined. The diameter of the earth offers a base line of 8,000 miles, and this is the only one available for planetary computation. The distance of the stars, however, is so great that, practically, 8,000 miles gives no appreciable difference. Hence the diameter of the earth's orbit is taken; this is 180,000,000 miles. The angle of a star is taken, and six months after, when the earth has reached the opposite point of its orbit, the angle is again taken. Yet with this vast base line, so great is their distance that with the most delicate instruments possible to construct, the angles are so minute that it is difficult to measure them, and really there is no more than an approximation. No star has been given more thatn nine-tenths of a second, and this is probably greatly exaggerated. This is assigned to 61 Cygni, and the distance this implies, is best comprehended by stating it in light units, instead of miles. As light passes through space at a velocity of 192,000 miles in a second, it would require three and one-fourth years to reach the earth from that star.

While it is difficult to more than approximately measure the angles, it is certain that not a star exceeds one-tenth of a second, while almost all are so remote that the changes of the earth's position of 180,000,000 miles does not appreciably affect theirs.

Hence it cannot be determined how far away they are, it is assured that they cannot be less than ten parallactic units, or 2,062,650 times the distance of the sun from the earth. Across this distance light is thirty-two years in passing. That is, the star is seen by light waves that left it thirty-two years ago, and if it were suddenly blotted out, it would continue to be seen undisturbed for thirty-two years, before it disappeared.

The earlier astronomers with their imperfect instruments thought they obtained assured measurements of the parallax of a great number of stars. Present astronomers with the wonderfully perfected instruments in their possession, find that, contrary to expectation, the difficulty increases, and the parallax becomes less and less, and in a majority of cases disappears.

Space is the one thing which may be taken with the most lavish prodigality, and the sun-systems may be placed therein at such vastly remote distances as to have no disturbing influence on each other.

A train of cars moving thirty miles an hour, day and night, would be 266 days in covering the distance light makes in one second. To reach the nearest star would require at least 2,062,650 times this number.

THE HEAVENLY MESSENGER

A radiant form is standing near,
One hand upon my shoulder laid;
The gentle touch removes all fear,
And as I listen, I can hear.
These words, "Be not dismayed."

"The way sometimes may seem obscure,
A cloud may hide the bright sunlight,
But for a time can this endure;
The faith that's true, the love that's pure,
Illumines e'en the darkest night.

"The loving thoughts which you send forth,
From day to day, from hour to hour,
Return again to bless their birth,
To strengthen all your work on earth,
Until you reach the golden shore—

"Where you shall join the angel bands.
The unseen forces help to guide,
Return to earth or other lands,
To satisfy the great demands
Of those who trust, whate'er betide.

"To individualize the Soul,
Was what your Heavenly Father meant,
That all who strive shall reach the goal,
And while the endless ages roll,
The time in progress shall be spent.

"Onward and upward all must go,
Redeeming every day the time,
No moments wasted here below,
No fear, no worry and no woe,
But hope and love, and faith sublime."—

The vision faded—but the joy,
Shall ever in my heart abide,
No earthly cares can now annoy,
No doubt or fear my peace destroy,
My help comes from the other side.

Oh, weary ones! whose burden seems,
So grievous and so hard to bear,
Oh, weary ones! whose burden seems,
Of loved ones, who are "over there"
Remember, they your sorrows share.

By every power that's to them given
From day to day, they're helping you,
Unseen, but felt, the influence given,
That you may be prepared for heaven,
Where they now dwell, earth's journey through.

News From Lily Dale Camp.

The cool weather did not deter the usual crowd from coming to Lily Dale for the Sunday services.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, known as the Pilgrim, failed to materialize for his engagement on the rostrum, but his place was ably filled by Miss Carrie Twing, who said in proof of the continuity of life hereafter.

"What would you think of a ship-owner who would take a magnificent vessel, furnish it luxuliously and then take it out and sink it in the wide ocean. If there is no hereafter we are all as ships sunk in the ocean of eternity by the power that brought us into being.

"I once saved an old man of eighty from committing suicide by reminding him that death was only a journey and asking him where he was going when he was dead? He answered: "I don't know, but I'm tired of living."

"Then you are going to take a journey without a destination, a ticket or a time table. It seems to me only a fool would do that," and the old man decided to be "a living sage instead of a dead fool."

W. J. Colville was the afternoon speaker. The audience sang "My Country, 'tis of Thee," and he called attention to the fact that it applied to every land where freedom whether attained or idealistic, was the watchword. He dwelt on the unity of life, of purpose and the necessity of seeking agreements rather than disagreements, in order to uplift the human race as a whole. He seemed inspired by the Esperanto flag which hangs in the center of the auditorium.

In the presentation of this flag, Mr. Lee Morse explained its meaning in its significant colors, green and white, representing earth and sky, which the whole world shares alike.

Rev. George H. Brooks followed as test medium. Though tests do not always accompany the message, however, Mr. Brooks gave tests, if the testimony of the recipients counted for anything.

Said he to a lady: "A spirit impresses me and wants you to let him go. You keep him earth-bound by your grief, and he cannot progress. I want to shed tears and he says: "Let me go! Oh, don't hold me any longer. Let me go. Then I can help you and myself too. Your grief holds me. I am not free."

Mr. Brooks then went on to give points of identification to which the lady assented. Somebody whispered, "That's pretty good mind reading." "The spirit tells me this," Mr. Brooks declared: "It is not mind reading."

The lady then arose, declaring it was all true, that she had just arrived from Canada and had never seen the medium before. Then, said Mr. Brooks, "If it is mind reading, we are both liars, and if it is not, there is still a lie somewhere!"

To-day, Wednesday, Dr. Juliet Severance lectured on economics and the single tax, though her real theme was the co-operative commonwealth. She invited questions, and they came like a hailstorm. Some of them were unanswerable from our present understanding of what would uplift the whole mass of humanity without losing sight of the individual. But the doctor's wit came to the rescue and she often convulsed the audience with laughter, till the knotty naughty problems were forgotten.

Dr. Lockwood has closed his class work, but Mrs. Lillie and Mr. Colville continue to keep up the interest in that line.

To be able to know how to get demonstrations in our own homes is worth while. So also to learn to live on a higher plane, nearer the spirit world, where intercommunion with advanced disembodied souls is possible.

Many mediums who did good work during the season have left the camp.

We just bade good-bye to Mrs. Florence Padman of St. Louis, who has given her time and strength for the cause alone, refusing to take money when offered her. In her psychometric readings she was rapid and accurate, and to the writer she gave most satisfactory evidence of the presence of the so-called departed.

Last evening was Prof. Sheehan's last concert of the season. His Choral Club represents fifteen of the best trained voices on the ground, and Fred Stillman as reader was up-to-date in all his work. The concert was well worthy a detailed report, would space permit.

Rev. G. L. Sprague gave a brilliant address on universal salvation, which knocked the bottom out of the bottomless hell. His earnest, eloquent appeal to reason should have been heard by the churchman who refuses to revise his creed. Mr. Sprague is still young and we are proud of him.

Rev. Geo. H. Brooks has been very useful in other lines than that of message medium. His latest exploit was to tie the matrimonial knot for Mrs. Annie Lukels of Peoria. Ill., and Harry Williams of Akron, O.

The Old Maids' Convention given Friday evening brought good returns in mirth and money, we hope later in matrimony for the Old Maids. (?)

Camp Chesterfield, Ind.

Cheerful old Chesterfield begins to feel the chilling winds of fall, and the falling leaves remind us that soon the beauty upon which we are feasting now will be a thing of the past, and the place will be dressed in its winter garments of pure white.

Mr. Austin closed his engagement with the camp last Friday, and many were loth to say good-by.

Mr. Grimshaw occupied the rostrum Saturday at 2:30, and gave a vivid picture of his entry into the work of Spiritualism, and as speaker. It was very convincing. On yesterday, Sunday, he again occupied the rostrum and was entranced.

The Lyceum gave an entertainment Saturday, August 16, and netted $19.80 for the children. Their teacher, Mrs. Fessler, deserves great credit for the work. At the close they had a colored church, and your humble servant as preacher, also a colored wedding. It was a drawing card, and the audience was kept in a good humor from start to finish.

They are to give another entertainment this coming week for the benefit of the Lyceum, and I'm sure they will do well.

This season here has been a quiet one, and the camp has felt the hard times, but notwithstanding all I feel we have much to be thankful for. Harmony and good will prevailed all over the camp ground, and I feel many have been brought into the beautiful work, and realize that the truth as taught by us is far more beautiful than the orthodox creed, and realize that as we sow so must we expect to reap, and that no blood can wash away our sins.

This is Monday, blue Monday, but how charming, quiet and restful after the bustle and hurry of Sunday.

Friday is election day, and there has been much talk pro and con, in regard to officers. I feel sure we will have good judgment in the selection of officers, and may those elected deem it a duty to themselves to make the coming camp next year the most successful financially and spiritually that Chesterfield has ever known.

Let all mediums join heart and hand for mutual protection, harmony and good will. Let all strife and petty envy be eliminated from each one, so that we can have the inward inspiration for the loved ones to gather their forces, and put us upon that higher plane, where all that is noble, pure and good may spring up and bear abundant fruit of love, purity and honor, and that Camp Chesterfield shall be known from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Gulf to the Lakes as the most delightful, harmonious and best conducted camp in our land. Nature has given us a delightful spot, rolling and with spring water flowing all the year, a refreshing, cooling beverage. Let us strive to equal nature in her work, and all will be well.

September 6, Odd-Fellows will hold a reunion of all brothers and sisters who can come in Madison County; thousands are expected, and may good old Camp Chesterfield, by the aid of the angel loved ones spread her genial influence until every heart shall be filled with the glorious tidings that there is no death, but a glorious birth, and that we shall still progress until we shall become perfect and know as we are known.

Haslett Park Camp, Mich.

Haslett Park Camp, 1908, is now a thing of the past, but it has been a session that will long be remembered by many of the visitors there. We had a very good time from the commencement of camp, but each day brought us added pleasures, and the last week was one constant round of festivities, which will not pass from the memory of those who participated in the same, for many a day.

One evening a large bonfire was built around which we all gathered for a Marshmallow Roast, the boys and girls of 80 entering into the occasion with as much enthusiasm and enjoyment as did those of sixteen. An ice cream social, the annual masquerade party, and entertainments, all made the week a busy one, but it still remained for our Star and Crescent Upperatic Co., to put the finishing touches upon the social life of the camp, in a final entertainment upon Sunday evening. But I will halt here; to describe it would be impossible.

But these were not all the good things prepared for us, at Haslett Park. The lectures by B. F. Austin were of a high order, three of them being illustrated with stereopticon views, the subjects being of vast interest to thinking, growing humanity.

The work of Dr. Angus of Port Huron, Mich., was good and well received. Many practical lessons were left with his hearers, and he remained with us long enough to prove his ability to put in practice some of his suggestions. He stayed to the close of the camp, doing his private work, and holding trumpet seances, a generous division of the proceeds of the latter being given to the camp association.

W. D. Wattles and his estimable family were with us the last week of camp. He gave a very interesting and instructive series of lectures upon Evolution and the Constructive and Destructive Principles in Nature.

Singing by the quartette, Mr. and Mrs. Wattles, Russell and Florence, was exceptionally good and formed an attractive feature of the program.

Saturday, August 15 was State Association Day and we endeavored to make the most of it. Had an all-day's meeting—a lively conference in the morning, lecture by our State President, James E. Walker, of Grand Rapids, in the afternoon, and Dr. Angus in the evening, both lectures being followed by messages by Mrs. Fulgum of Battle Creek, a fine recitation was also given by her and special music was prepared for the occasion.

Our conference meetings were one of the interesting features of the camp. Many lively and profitable discussions were had.

So ends this camp for 1908, and many I believe have been made richer in knowledge, in thought and feeling by their associations there.

Treachery Discovered Through the Ouija Board.

On Oct. 8, 1907, my son was taken sick with typhoid fever, and was brought to my home Oct. 15, that I might care for him. Finding it more than my strength could endure, I hired a man nurse on Oct. 18. The nurse immediately began deceiving my physician and myself in regard to the case. When he found he could not disturb my confidence in my physician, he told my son that his case was so critical that blood was passing from both bowels and kidneys, and that there was nothing being done by his physician that should be done for a typhoid case.

Being very much alarmed I took my ouija board and asked my spirit son if his brother was going to die, and received this reply: "The nurse is lying to you. Watch yourself, and tell the doctor what you will find out."

I went to the sick room and told the nurse I would watch until midnight, and he might retire and rest, which he did. Long before midnight I found there was no blood being passed from the patient, and telephoned my physician that we were being deceived. I discharged the nurse and cared for the case myself until my son recovered.

Had it not been for the spirit message over the ouija board, I never would have discovered the treachery of the nurse or saved the life of my son.

I have had many truthful experiences of spirit return.

WHAT IS A STAR?

Brother W. F. Peck Takes the Question Under Consideration.

This question is too important to drop in the present stage of its discussion and so I crave the editor's and reader's indulgence while I write a final word and say all I care or need to say on the subject.

Brother Jamieson graciously admits his error as to the nearest star, but persists in the affirmation that the planets are properly termed stars. He says that the astronomers—"every blessed one of them"—call them stars. "They call our own earth a star; they term our sun a star; they apply the word 'star' to meteors."

Very well, why not extend the catalogue? There is a fish they call 'tar,' there is a "star-wheel" in machinery; there are "star" actors and pulpit and platform "stars" and for years Brother Jamieson was something of a star himself.

Nevertheless, while recognizing the wide application of the word, I still maintain that strictly and scientifically the term is applied only to those distant orbs in the depths of space which shine with their own light. In support of my position I cite a few out of numerous authorities.

Simon Newcomb, late professor of Mathematics and astronomy in the U. S. Naval Observatory, one of the most eminent modern astronomers, says:

"From the childhood of the race men have inquired, "What is a star?" At the present time we may define the stars as immense globes of matter generally millions of times the size of the earth, so intensely hot that they shine with their own light."—Popular Astronomy, p. 291-2.

From Johnson's Encyclopedia; "Stars: In general, immense masses of matter at a temperature so high as to be self luminous, scattered through the celestial spaces and of the same general nature as the sun."

The New International Encyclopedia defines a star as "One of those heavenly bodies which remain apparently immovable with respect to one another. * * !Twinkling or scintillating is another mark which distinguishes stars from planets."

The American Encyclopedic Dictionary gives the following definition: "Star. The word star is popularly applied to any of the heavenly bodies with the exception of the sun, the moon and comets. Strictly speaking, the name is limited to the self-luminous bodies constituted like the sun and apparently maintaining a fixed position toward each other."

The Standard Dictionary gives it thus: "Star; A luminous celestial body so distant as to appear a luminous point; in common usage including the planets, but in astronomy [the science] limited to the fixed stars."

Now, Brother Jamieson, will you be good? No? Strange, isn't it, how those people who are not "certain of their ground"—Popes only are, says Brother J.—are nevertheless most stubborn in maintaining it?

"How many mortals are certain of their ground?" Mr. Jamieson asks, and then adds, "Popes may be."

Talk about agnosticism, this is the Real Thing; Agnosticism gone to seed, and that, too, in an age of scientific certainty.

The astronomer predicts with mathematical accuracy, years in advance, the relative positions of sun, planets and satellites. The navigator determines to the fraction of a degree the latitude and longitude of his vessel on the trackless ocean. The chemist marshals his little array of elements, calculates their equivalents and separates or combines them with serene confidence in the integrity of the laws governing their action, and in the certainty of the results. Would these things be possible if nobody but popes were certain of their ground?

I repeat, it is not essential that our speakers should be "up to the mark"; that is, up-to-date, fairly well informed, on all scientific questions, but—and it seems hardly necessary to argue the point—no one should set up to teach what he does not know. Popes and their ilk have been doing that for ages, and the results have not been such as to encourage us to follow their example.

I forgive Brother Jamieson's little dig at my grammar, even though it shed no light on the subject under discussion, for I realize how great the temptation to show that, however mistaken he might be about Mars, he knew that that star of all discoverers, Columbus was too remote to be associated with the Mayflower. I suspect, however, that the natives around about Plymouth Rock would not excuse him so readily for confounding the Puritans with the Pilgrims. There was no love lost between those ancient worthies, and their descendents still preserve their traditions.

What I want to make clear is that though the term star is popularly applied to all starlike bodies in space, scientifically it is used to designate only those self-luminous bodies lying far outside the limits of the solar system. Time was when the term "fixed star" was used to distinguish those orbs from the planets, but since it is so thoroughly established that there are no "fixed" or motionless bodies in the heavens—the so-called fixed stars generally moving with a speed inconceivably greater than any planet—such designation has no proper meaning and is never used in a scientific sense. When an astronomer speaks of the stars his brethren of the telescope are never in doubt as to his meaning.

Freeville Camp, N. Y.

New York State Camp at Freeville has just closed a very interesting and instructive session of four weeks, with the best of speakers and mediums.

Mr. Herrick and wife, Mr. Fenner and wife of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs Morrell; Mrs Augusta Armstrong our chairwoman and others. The camp is prospering and increasing in interest on all sides. The grounds were in fine shape and are free from debt, and a lady has given $500 to build a boarding-house, and they are to build several cottages, and it is one of the delightful places of the country, with fine water of medicinal qualities, and as to railroad facilities, easy of access; and will in time be the camp of the State. The Auditorium was crowded beyond its capacity Sundays, and all seemed so interested and happy, and every test, of which we had some that were wonderfully convincing, was recognized. People from Pennsylvania came to visit the George Junior Republic, which is near, and they wandered in on the camp ground to see what was there, not knowing anything of Spiritualism, and stayed and got tests so convinving they came again, and were convinced of spirit return. The bazaar did good work and brought in quite a sum.

The same officers were elected for another year, they did such fine work. The flowers were beautiful, and everything bids fair for a grand time another year.

With love for the cause and the greatest paper on earth, our dear Progressive Thinker, I am yours for truth.

"Universal Spiritualism." Giving a view of Spiritualism from the earliest time, end in all nations. By W. J. Colville. Price $1.00

A PROPHECY FULFILLED.

Indicating That Spirits Foresaw the Unfortunate End.

To the Editor: A few years ago, in company with other neighbors, I was invited by one Wm. Russel to assist in raising a barn frame. The frame being light, it was soon raised, and by 4 p. m. the men were discharged. It being early in July, and warm enough for bathing in the lakes near by, one boastful boy by the name of George Hayes, said, "Hurrah, boys, let's go to the lake and have a swim." Mr. Russel, an old man, addressed them, saying, "Boys, I want to warn you about going to the lake, for I know that some of you are going to be drowned. I dreamed twice last night two of you boys went up to the lake and I saw you both apparently struggling and crawling on its bottom, and I tell you to keep away from the water."

George called to the other boys, "Never mind such kind of stuff as that," and led off, followed by at least six other boys. They went to a different lake, one of the number being a member of my family, I followed them, knowing there was no place for wading, and they would get in a boat and go onto water. None of them could swim ten feet from the boat. Sufficient say, I saw them dressed and on their way home before I left. The next day two of these boys, George and Can Cleve, went to the lake on the west for a swim. They entered the water. George, going out beyond his depth, was taken with a cramp, and went down. Coming up, he called to his companion for help. Van Cleve, in trying to reach him, went down, but, turning, he succeeded in getting a footing, so he reached the bank. But George had gone down for the last time. His body was taken from the water and laid out in Mr. Russel's house, where we saw it about 2 o'clock p. m. Was it prophecy or a vision on the part of the old gentleman.

There was one episode in connection with this unfortunate affair that stays by me yet. A full-fledged Billy Sunday bigot was sent to our house for salts for the body, and when received, and at the door, he turned and submerged us with the declaration, "We ought to do all we can for the poor fellow, now he has gone to his everlasting eternity." This greatly comforted us, who were left in this realm.

SHE WANTS JESUS TO REIGN.

But in the Opinion of Spiritualists Generally He Is a "Back Number" in Many Respects.

To the Editor:—My husband and I are believers in spirit manifestations and he takes your paper.

We believe that Jesus is the promised Christ of the Jews or Israelites.

Permit me to note Reigel's error in supposing Jesus Christ to be meant as a complete name. In the first of the New Testament (Mat. 1:16) is this expression: "Jesus who is called Christ."

Matthew, Mark, Luke and John each have the statement that Jesus is the Christ, indicating that to be a title.

Now, in regard to Nazareth: Matthew, Mark, Luke and John mention Nazareth freely.

Peter and Paul mention the same in the acts.

Since Riegel says Paul does not mention Nazareth in the epistles, I refer to the text in Acts 22:8 and 26:9.

Now here are six witnesses for the existence of the town and I always take pleasure in Acts 22:8. It was Jesus speaking to the medium Paul. Then it was Jesus speaking of himself as belonging with men—not wholly with heaven.

When Spiritualists go against the bible they are making a great mistake. Certainly we are to choose between good and evil.

Another point with Riegel: There is not a word to prove that Mary of Magdala was a vile woman even. She was possessed of seven demons, seven ill tempers, or it was a case of dementia. I have personally known four superior gentlewomen who were subject at long intervals to violent dementia, and no one even dreamed of belittling their characters.

There are imperfections in the bible, and there are disagreements enough to prevent any idea of collusion among the critics.

But the bible is a wonder of consistency. Not every word of it is inspired, as the characters disagree. The book of Job is a debating society, with honest truthseekers in forensic combat.

The trouble is, we study the surface which is largely human, instead of getting at the underlying or overtopping purpose, which is a kingdom of God on earth.

Men jangle for supremacy. God waits; Jesus waits awhile. We think we can do what is to be done. Meanwhile death has a certain mastery over the body.

In the books prepared by Josephus for Gentile sale, he said of Jesus, "He was the Christ."

There are many honest thinkers who disagree. We surely need one standard, one leader. Is there one personage in all history who is so safe a teacher as Jesus, who died, and rose again of his own God-given power? He is master of death and Hades, Lord of Life. I am interested in the manifestations of which you report, but my first wish is the reign of Jesus over which angels will rejoice.

Germs of Mind in Plants

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

ANOTHER ONE OBJECTS.

To the Singing of Orthodox Songs by Spiritualist Societies.

I most heartily agree with the remarks of Irene Du Pue in your issue of Aug. 22. I have often been grieved by hearing old, standard church songs sung in our meetings. In the place of "Nearer my God to Thee," if I should use anything in that line it would be

Nearer, oh truth, to thee
Nearer to thee,
E'en though it be a rope
That raiseth me.

Where is the sense of talking of getting nearer to that "in which we live and have our being?" Further, when Spiritualists sing these old songs they open the door for undeveloped Christian spirits to enter, and they make every effort to so modify us that Jesus may be accepted as leader and master. Some of our speakers acknowledge him as such even now. Col. Kelso, some years before he passed out, said in my hearing, that herders, when cattle broke from ther corral, did not attempt to drive them back, but got on to their horses, and riding ahead, led them back. This is what Christian spirits are doing with those Spiritualists who have left the church; they go ahead and are leading them back, not exactly into the same, but similar corrals.

The adoption of so many Christian customs by Spiritualist societies shows this to be true. Satan is fabled for his cunning. If he can beat Christian spirits on that line he should carry the palm.

Years since I attended a conference meeting of the Spiritualists in Council Bluffs, Iowa. They sang:

"Come thou fount of every blessing."

When they were through I objected to the lines:

"Prone to wander, Lord, I feel it Prone to leave the God of love."

I said it is false; we are not prone to leave what we love, and while I was speaking a medium was controlled, and when I sat down she arose, commenced singing something amout Jesus, offering her hand to each one as she passed among the people. I saw through the trick at once and when she came to me I folded my arms and said: "Not in that name." It broke the influence and the medium went to the back part of the room and sat down and cried. I was blamed, but I have never blamed myself. I could not have been true to the truth I saw, had I done otherwise.

I have not the least doubt but the singing of that old Methodist hymn brought that spirit there and a tacit recognition of Jesus would have been secured from all had I not broken the conditions. If Jesus ever lived on earth as a personality, I have no objection to recognizing him as I would any other man or woman, but never in any such sense as the church teaches.

At a camp meeting that I attended in Oregon a few years since, a woman at the noon recess had gathered quite a number of people around her and was talking to them. As she paused an old sea captain from Maine remarked: "I believe if Jesus himself was here he would sanction every word you say," she promptly responded: "I don't care whether he would or not; he is one person and I am another." The crowd laughed and dispersed.

Why should we defer to the figurehead of the churches? It is this deference that deprives us of half our power. I saw years ago that we do altogether too much courting; that is, we make concessions to win favor, whereas we should stand up in the conscious dignity of our selfhood and demand recognition on our own ground.

Some years since a lady who was giving a course of lectures in San Francisco, took one evening some of the sayings of Jesus as reported in the New Testament and analyzed them as if uttered by a man of today; for instance his reply to the question, "Who did sin, this man or his parents that he was born blind?" This after the man's sight had been restored. Mark the reply, "Neither this man nor his parents, but that the glory of God might be made manifest." What! Did God cause a child to be born blind so that when grown to manhood, his son might heal him—this that his own glory might be made manifest? exclaimed the speaker. "Suppose an earthly father skilled in human ailments should cause a child to be born blind in order that in after years he could teach his son to restore the afflicted man's sight, and thus spread abroad his own fame, what would you think of it?" she continued. "Would you not call it devilish instead of divine!"

There were several Catholics in the audience, those who came for the tests when the lecture was over. They were so angry they went into the hall and remained until the lecture was over and one of them said: "If that woman ever talks that way again where I am I will smash her mouth." After the lecture a Christian Spiritualist, if such a thing can be, was called for to give tests, as he was a very good medium, but the first thing he did was to criticise the speaker, making the very wise remark that vinegar caught no flies.

She promptly responded that she was not in the fly-catching business; and that is what all these concessions mean; it is trying to catch church flies, trying to bring into our ranks church babies, those who are not half grown to the point of understanding us—babies who will kick and squall if they cannot hold us to their stage of growth. The last concession of the kind I have come in contact with was the closing of a lecture and then tests, by singing the doxology: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," etc. Father and son, but no mother in the church Godhead. What are we coming to?

SUICIDE NEVER JUSTIFIABLE.

The Mills of the Gods Grind Slowly, But They Grind Exceedingly Fine—The Mills of the Gods Are the Laws of Nature."

To the Editor: I have been through those mills, ground to powder, crushed to atoms. Now, if I can save one desparing soul from the suicide of the body, I will be amply repaid for giving a few suggestions that may enter their inner consciousness and explode there. WILINS FOUR August 26

The suicide is the most abject of all cowards. He is simply trying to evade the consequences of his own acts. His condition, instead of being made better is made infinitely worse.

What awful agonies of shame and regret must be that of the suicide when first becoming conscious in the spiritual realm.

"'Tis then a painful sense comes on
Of something wholly lost and gone;
Of something from his being's chain
Broke off never to be linked again."

Throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity he will be branded, and brand himself as "coward."

It is a small thing to die; anybody can die; but to live, and live aright, requires the greatest courage.

How much better to live, suffer and grow strong, than "to shuffle off this mortal coil."

Those who are contemplating suicide should study carefully the sublime and heroic example of Job in the Old Testament. After having lost all, did the idea of suicide enter his brave heart? Not once!

I have no doubt that if the right suggestions could be given with sufficient force to the would-be suicide, he could be saved for a useful, honorable life. Auto-suggestion has saved many, but auto-suggestion may be, and sometimes is, angelic suggestion; that is, suggested by spirit guides or controls.

It seems to me my own life, from childhood up, presents many instances of angelic suggestion; so I offer this personal allusion to my life's history.

When I was about 60 years of age (I am nearly 70 now, and in the race for the century mark), for the first time in my life I contemplated suicide for a period of about six months. After innumerable falls and rises, failures and disappointments (in love): after having at three different times in my life lost everything I had, and again accumulated something of a competence; after having passed through many tempestuous storms by sea and land, both physical and mental, without fear, I, for the first time in life, was trying to decide on the best way of killing myself. I was in despair. The future held nothing for me worth living or striving for. I was entirely adone—no friend, no adviser. No one knew anything about the terrible condition of my mind and body, except, perhaps the angel ministers. Three different times I bought an ounce of morphine. Once I took enoughto make me dreadfully sick, and vomited everything up. This saved my life. I was astonished to find I could go to the drug store and buy morphine to kill myself as easily as I could buy a little candy.

I had a splendid revolver and was a dead shot. Once I cocked that revolver, held the muzzle to my temple for a long time, undecided as to whether I should pull the trigger or not. Finally, it seemed to me I heard a voice, deep down within my inner-consciousness. "Wait, wait, wait!" This, no doubt, was a spirit voice. My friends and guides in the spirit world had been making superhuman efforts to save me. I had been in a semi-trance for about six months. I was at times partially or fully under spirit control and removed to a distant city, and began to investigate Spiritualism, and study psychology. I learned self-control, quit tea and coffee, tobacco in all its forms, beer and whisky, and all forms of sensuality, so far as possible, and now I could live a thousand years in any condition, before I would commit the cowardly act of self-murder. I say unto you, be of good cheer, be of good courage and never give up the ship.

A SPIRIT VISITANT.

Interesting Particulars in Regard to the Same.

On August 23, 1870, while in my dry-goods store in Lebanon, Ohio (being a very dull business day, and both of my clerks having gone to dinner), and feeling impressed to do something and hardly knowing what, I took paper and pencil, sat down on a sofa and wrote the accompanying poem. Having finished, I went home to my dinner. I told my wife I did not care to eat, as I felt a peculiar sensation, and could hardly describe it. She replied: "I will make you a cup of tea, and have you put your feet in some warm water."

I drank the tea, allowed my feet to remain in the water a few minutes, and then lay down on a bed in a room which had but one window; shutters being closed, it was pleasantly dark. No sooner had I become passive than a man, a spirit, standing beside the bed, commenced talking to me. I heard him distinctly, and saw him plainly. After perhaps some twenty minutes' conversation, my wife came to the room door, and asked me how I felt. Just then in the midst of the conversation, there came three loud and distinct raps.

"Did you hear those raps?" she asked.

I replied, "I did."

I then asked her, "What part of the room do they come from?"

She walked up to the bed, laid her hand on the railing right where the spirit was standing, saying, "They seem to come out of the bed right here."

I replied to her: "You heard those raps. You spoke of them first. I am not deceiving myself. There has been a spirit standing right there talking to me for some time, and he is still here. Listen." We both heard him rapping in different parts of the room for some time.

Taking this as it actually occurred, it is at least to me a good proof of spirit return.

"ON THE ROAD."

Noting Certain Aggressive Tendencies of the Churches.

I noticed in one issue of The Progressive Thinker an article suggesting that the "Independents"should organize for their own protection. By Independents I presume is meant all who have no church affiliation, and all "Divorcees", as this later case is now especially under the ban of the Episcopal and Roman Catholic Church; the latter we all know to be the greatest political aggregation in the United States, and are at the present time the most aggressive, and will stop at no crime to subject all America to their will and law. They have controlled the last two presidents, and the Congress of the United Statss for some time; and I heartily agree with the article, and urge the gentleman who wrote, to keep up the agitation, as he seems capable of writing the right kind of articles on the subject.

When we sit up and take notice, we see about 30,000,000 church members (men, women and children) passing laws that are practically disfranchising about 55, 000,000 of people who have no church affiliation (estimating the population of the United States at 85,000,000). Where would the Blue Glass Blade, The Progressive Thinker, and a host of other able papers and periodicals be if things go on as they are?

Their last act was the placing of the "IN GOD WE TRUST" on the coin of the realm. In the words of another, "Why didn't they put a proper finish to it:—"All others cash."

You will notice that one branch squeezed out all the lotteries in the country. Another went after the sports—no more gambling—not any! Another is after the liquor men, and another is after the Spiritualist mediums. And it has about come to pass that a man may not only earn his money as they say, but also must spend it as the churches say, for they cut off about everything but kindergarten games. Curfew will soon be ringing in the city as well as in the country town. Give us an agitation that will bring back the days of honest, honorable chivalry. Make an agitation for high honor, noble men and noble women; one moral law for both and laws so severe and so thoroughly executed that no man will dare to think of breaking them, and give every man and woman a right to think and act as they please, so long as they do not transgress the laws, and let them be laws made by honorable liberty-loving modern Knights of Chivalry, teaching our young men and women, boys and girls, that liberty, honor, honesty, truth and virtue are above church or any other superstition that can possibly be invented, and when we have the days of Modern Chivalry, no man, woman, boy or girl will think of stooping to do a mean, dishonest, or immoral thing. At the rate we are going now, in the way we are being shown, no nation lives that will have a race so degenerate. Cry aloud, you who are gifted, for a better and a nobler teaching than we have, never forgetting Liberty first, last and all the time!

"AFTER YOU GIVE UP EVERYTHING ELSE, THEN TRY MRS. MATTESON."

Chappaqua Mountain Institute,
Chappaqua, N. Y., May 19, 1908.

Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, 248 N. Division St., Buffalo, N. Y.

My dear Mrs. Matteson:—It is a great pleasure for me to write and thank you for all you have done for me for many years past. About twenty years ago, when I was nineteen years of age, I was taken seriously ill with diphtheria, which left me a bed-ridden invalid. For seven years I was helpless, and only moved from bed to bed by nurses; and during that time the skill of fifteen doctors was tried, several of the most prominent in the profession, and to whom we paid as high as fifty dollars per visit. Finally all gave me up, and said it was impossible for me to live over a few weeks.

My uncle, Alexander Hale, living near Buffalo, then wrote and said: "After you give up everything else, then try Mrs. Matteson," and though I had no faith in you I did it to please my relatives. You examined and treated me over three hundred miles away, and said in your examination that mine was a very serious case, and it would take a long time to recover, but you believed you could cure me.

Your first bottle of medicine helped me, so much that I continued your treatment, and in two years was restored to good health, and by an occasional bottle of medicine, and some good advice, I have had a reputation for years of doing more than my share of the world's work. Your wonderful gift has revolutionized my religious belief; for though I have studied medicine, I had never believed that such skill as you possess could be given to any human being; and the saddest thing to me is that the scientific world can not or will not know and accept it.

In gratitude, I am sincerely thine,
(Signed) CHAS. R. BLENIS.

TRULY A HAUNTED HOUSE.

Farmer Hempstead and His Family Are Puzzled though, by Unnatural Activities of Household Articles.—Watchdog Seems To Enjoy The Goings on.—Visitors to Old House Where Small Things Dance About Fail to Solve Mystery.—It is Truly a Haunted House.

According to the New York World, Groton, Conn., is excited indeed over the amazing happenings at the fine old farm of William Hempstead, a mile east of New London. Visitors have been going out in automobiles and carriages to study the mystery.

Beginning a week ago small articles such as beans, spools of thread, knives, marbles, etc., have been moving about the house in broad daylight. Although the house is next to the old Knowles family cemetery the phenomena do not seem to be of the ghost or spook variety. The manifestation never take place at night. The house was built in the long ago and is two stories high, roomy, in good condition and happily situated. In the centre is an immense chimney 8 by 10 feet square. So far as the owner knows there is no secret closet or room in the house.

A week ago Mrs. Hempstead, who is a remarkably comely women of forty-nine, with snow white hair and a youthful face, was alone in the house. The stairs leading from the dining room to the second floor have a door at their head that on occasion was fastened on the downstairs side. Suddenly a spool of thread that had been in a work basket in the second story chamber came bounding down the stairs and moved across the floor of the dining room. Mrs. Hempstead looked up the stairs. The door at the head was still closed and fastened. Later while no one else was in the room, a bean traversed the room and struck her in the face. It did not harm her, but was a most disconcerting circumstance.

The family consists of Mr. Hempstead, a refined and practical old gentleman of seventy odd years. He does not believe in spooks. His wife has no superstitions. They have been married thirty years and have lived in the old manse since their wedding. Having no children they adopted thirteen years ago the young son of Mrs. Hempstead's sister, Frankie Gardiner, and gave him their name. The boy has a brother, Charles, who is about his own age. There is employed on the farm Gilbert Edwards, a lad of sixteen, son of a neighbor, and three hired men.

How Activities Began.

"When these strange things first began to happen," said Mr. Hempstead yesterday. "I said nothing because I din't want any one to think that I was deluded. I was in the cornfield one day when a marble such as the boys play with about the house fell at my feet. Looking toward the house, I saw that a screen in the second story had been pushed aside and a cloth was being waved from the window. Going into the house, I found that no one had been in the room where the cloth was waved. No one had thrown a marble. The hired men were at work and the boys were out of the house.

"I said nothing, but on Friday re discovered beans moving about the house in a most astonishing fashion. They were the same sort of beans as the ones we had raised, and had been laid out on the attic floor to dry. Of course beans will sometimes dry in the pods, and on a hot day will spill open and bounce around, but I never saw any beans that could come down the attic stairs, move around the room, cut square corrners and fall on the floor. There was a bean in the northeast room that came out of the north wall, sailed across the room, cut around the sewing machine, and after making several corners fell on the floor. Naturally we began to get nervous when marbles that the boys had not touched for months began to move about the house. They would come in at a door, move across the room and stop. We made certain that it was not the work of the boys, because these things happened when when the boys were out of the house.

For instance, several old rusty keys that had been lost for years came bounding down the stairs from the attic into the rooms upstairs and were picked up. I made sure that no one was up in the attic. I have heard some of our visitors account for the thing by electricity. We have a telephone and the wire runs half around the house and in at the dining-room window. But I have never heard that a telephone wire would do this thing."

Watchdog Enjoys It.

One peculiar thing about the phenomena is the queer action of Tige the watchdog, when anything happens. He capers about the yard, showing no supernatural fear or agitation, but every indication of joy. Tige is a special friend, by the way, of the two boys who live at the farm. Mrs. Hempstead said yesterday:

"It is true that these things have happened, but I am not superstitious. They are accomplished by some natural law, but how I do not know. No, I do not suspect the boys. Things have happened that could not be accounted for by them. I am not worrying over it, but I wish the manifestations would stop for my work is getting behind hand."

C. M. Miller, proprietor of a livery stable, who drove visitors out to the place several times during the week, said yesterday:

"I was there when something queer happened. We had searched the house from top to bottom, thinking perhaps some one was concealed in the attic or in nooks down stairs. We were standing in the attic and Frankie, the thirteen-year-old boy, was there, when suddenly a knife that had been lying in a basket of tableware in the attic, suddenly flopped out of the basket and fell on the floor. No one was near it."

While the World reporter was in the bedroom on the second floor just over the dining-room, talking to Mr. Hempstead, a bean suddenly went sailing across the southeast bedroom and fell bounding on the bare floor. Where it came from could not be told.

Eventually every house will be "haunted" if those having spirit messages and phenomena occurring therein can be called such.

OR, THE DIVIDING OF THE WAY

A Story of the Great Atlantis.

One of the Most Remarkable Books of the Age.

Physical Science was much farther advanced in Atlantis, 12000 years ago than it is to-day. As understood by the Poseidii (Atlanteans) the prime principle upon which it was based—"Incal Mallxetho," i. e., God is Immanent in Nature—was FIRST; to this they appended "Axte Incal, Axtuee Mun", translated: "To know God is to know all worlds whatever." They held that but One Substance existed, and but One Energy, the one being Incal (God) externalized and the other His Life in action in His Body. Applying this principle to their scientific work they accomplished through it aerial navigation without gas or sails, circumnavigating the globe in a day; conveyance of sound with reflection of the sender; heat and power conduction to whatever distance without material connection; transmuted metals; obtained, by electrical action, water from the atmosphere. These and many others were in common use. (Some of the things approach re-discovery, but the reader must remember that this book was finished in 1886, when the modern world knew them not. It knew not the cathode ray till 1896).

The book is endorsed by Prof. E. L. Larkin, the great astronomer and scientist; he regards it as one of the greatest books of the present age. Address

Psychic Unfoldment

No one can unfold all the phases but each one can unfold some phase of psychical power; by which he can demonstrate his own Divinity and his immortality. My system will teach you how. It has been doing so over (15) fifteen years. Spiritualists who believe in their own circles have found it a great help of practical benefit. It is endorsed by hundreds of students. All declare it a revelation. It is sane, scientific and practical. Read a few testimonials: "The lessons are remarkable."—Dr. David Crichton, Newtyle, Scotland. "I have developed more clairvoyance than anything else."—Miss A. Hodgkins, Buffalo, N. Y. "I can always see and hear at my sittings."—Mrs. Bowers, Toronto. Mr. Grumbine gladly refers to three or four prominent Spiritualists in the field work as his pupils who unfolded by his System. Mrs. J. Hary of St. Louis, and Mrs. L. Wilson of Cleveland, also Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Smith of Lowell and Methuen, Mass. Send stamped addressed envelope for circulars and percentage of psychical powers to J. C. F. CHILDREN IN SPIRIT LIFE.

As Vividly Portrayed by "A Lover of Children."—Weight of a Phantom.

In compliance with request on p. 383, that some readers of "Light" should give give their experience of child life in the spirit world, I venture to send you the following, which I trust may bring consolation to many bereaved parents.

My knowledge has been gained, by persistent and insistent intercourse during the last two years of investigation into the phenomena of spirit return, from those who have shown themselves well advanced in the life hereafter, as well as from my own kith, kin, and grandchild.

When a baby passes over, a foster-mother is waiting with loving hands to receive and tend it so long as it requires such care, then it is passed on to those who are more competent to deal with its subsequent stages of growth and progression. Children of tender years are likewise received and cared for by those best fitted for each individual soul until they outgrow the necessity for those guardians, and are then passed on to others more fitted for their advancement, and so on through the whole gamut of life from infancy to manhood. The appropriate foster-mother, guardian, or teacher, is found for each and every one: doubtless, all things being equal, preference is given to relatives. When ready they go to school and are taught, their minds expand their bodies grow, and they experience pretty much the same kind of temptation, sorrow, and joy that we do on this plane. As below, so above. As above, so below.

If parents will try to realise an ideal life for a child here, that will give them an idea of the life there, only the reality is a thousandfold better.

When first my grandson attempted to control the medium he failed. On the second occasion he managed to articulate the words, "Tell Daddy and Mummy that Sonny is not dead," and from that time onward he has learned (as a child learns to play a piano, how to manipulate the instrument placed at his disposal so completely that our intercourse is just as free as if he were here in the body talking to me. He always closes with the words, "They are calling me, grandpa, I must go."

This boy passed over when he had been on the earth plane not more than two months, yet he dates his birthday from his "death" day, and so by computation he has just been celebrating his tenth birthday; and here permit me to say that our spirit friends have shown me their full knowledge of such days, because I purposely kept the date of his passing hidden from the medium and from as free as if he was were here in the lodge of such days, because I purposely kept the date of his passing hidden from the medium and from the boy whilst an experiment was in progress, namely, that of a birthday gift "apported" to him from the material to the astral, and, watching for the day of translation, I was not surprised to find that the article disappeared on the exact date. I was not present, nor had I been in the medium's house nor in seance for nearly a month previous (so that the knowledge could not have been taken out of my mind by any kind of telepathic process The article was seen in the seance room by strangers on the evening of the previous day, and all your readers may be sure that the possession of a gift of that kind makes that boy, as he says, "feel quite like a man." As time went on he heard the use of the words "Pater" and "Mater" and immediately took the cue, and said "Oh, I am going to to call my Daddy Pater, and my "Mummy" "Mater"; they are men's words. The other words are only fit for girl's. On one occasion he was telling me how he had been with his "Uncle Charlie" to his own home to see the "Pater" and "Mater," at a time when his Uncle Charlie was visiting there. Curiosity prompted me to inquire if he could describe his home, and his reply was very characteristic, "It's all bottles and smells" (a chemist's shop).

Children in spirit life, as in this, are punished for their faults. If a child in this life were to appropriate another's toy, it would scolded, perhaps whipped, and the toy taken from it, but that is not the kind of punishment to which a child is subjected in the other life. There the punishment lies in the culprit being unable to restore the toy to its legitimate owner, and until that little soul has been thoroughly purged of its envy and avarice, the toy will stick to it like a leech, and every one of its playmates and schoolmates knows why, and hence the punishment is greater there than here.

My grandson comes to me for lessons in earth life; he asks to know all about fruits, horses, dogs, and is even interested in motor cabs, and describes how he rides (when I go in one) beside the chauffeur, and how he delights in trying to handle the steering wheel; he says he can feel the vibrations.

Your readers will, I am sure, understand that I am only giving my own experiences. I am not attempting to lay anything down authoritatively for anyone else; the experiences of others may be widely different. The medium I use is (in my judgment) a highly-developed, deep-trance, test sensitive, one who knows nothing of her controls, but relies absolutely for protection upon those who are commonly called her "guides," that is to say, on those who have been permitted to build up in her the necessary psychic condition, possibly pre-natally. One guide claims to be a clergyman of the Church of England, who passed over more than a hundred years ago; the other to be a medical man (Englishman), who passed over in another continent some fifty years ago, and who left behind him a hospital which still bears his name today; besides which, the medium is full of the maternal instinct, hence she is well fitted as an instrument for the use of children.

If any of your readers have any desire to know more of my experiences upon matters that I have not touched upon in this letter, I should be glad if they would write to me, addressed to the care of "Light"; meanwhile, I can only add that to obtain the best results there must be a sensitive and a sitter, both of whom can thoroughly answer to the description of a lover of children.—Light, London, Eng.

LESSONS IN LIFE.

Goethe's View of Art and of Nature.

Man is the last and highest link in nature. His task is to understand what she aims at in him, and then to fulfill her intentions.

This view of Herder was Goethe's sterling point in the formation of his "Weltanschauwen," or greater view of things.

"All the world," says one of the characters in "Wilhelm Meister," "lies before us like a vast quarry before the architect. He does not deserve the name if he does not compose with these accidental natural materials an image whose source is within his mind, and if he does not do it with the greatest possible economy, solidity and perfection."

All that we find outside of us—nay, within us—is object matter, but deep within us lives also a power capable of giving an ideal form to this matter.

This creative power allows us no rest till we have produced that ideal form in one or the other way; either without us in finished work, or in our own lives.

Here we already have in germ Schiller's idea that life ought to be a work of art. But how to achieve this task in a world continually impeded as we are by circumstances and by our fellow creatures who hinder our development of character in perfect conformity with nature.

Life is a problem, the solution of which comes slowly to all.

But down deep in the human soul is heard a language that is silent to the material senses, but audible to the clairaudient ear, which reveals mysteries of nature that no human record can.

Think of the mastery of life. All around us lie unsolved problems. Life is everywhere in evidence, and yet we do not understand it, cannot explain it. Perhaps there is a divine purpose in keeping hid from our senses much that we desire to know, that we may pursue a more vigorous study of the things which seem so hidden and mysterious to us.

There is an object lesson in all animal and insect life, that would profit us to study, and study deeply. The horse, the cow, the birds and bees, and many of the creeping things of life are all object lessons to man.

The writer of these lines never passes by a hive of bees without stopping to look at their wonderful and methodical movements. To the writer, they are a most wonderfully well-trained army of workers. Among the bees are to be found no drones. What a lesson for humans to heed.

Our late lamented brother and worker, Moses Hull, told me how a friend of his had induced him to read a book of 300 pages on the angle-worm. At first Moses declined to spend so much of his valuable time reading the book, but before he finished reading it he said he wished that there was 500 pages to it. Think, dear reader, of Mr. Hull, a walking encyclopedia, reading a history of the angle-worm and feeling that history of the worm was only too short. And so it is that there is much to be learned by studying the commonest insect that crawls upon the earth.

Despise not the least things in life, but aspire to the most exalted.

OIL KING'S PASTOR RAPS BIBLE WORSHIP.

Book Full of Errors, He Declares. Condemns Effort to Make all Believe It.—A Child Can See Flaws.

That "Bible worship" is doing more than atheism to empty the churches of the country is the assertion of the Rev. Charles F. Aked, the pastor of the fashionable Fifth Avenue Baptist Church in this city, which John D. Rockefeller attends. He insists there is no reason why the Bible should be considered above criticism or free from errors any more than any other book that has been handed down from century to century, passing through scores of translations from one language to another.

"In the pages of the Bible," says Dr. Aked in the September Appleton's Magazine, "are to be found historical errors, arithmetical mistakes, inconsistencies and manifold contradictions, and, what is far worse, one finds that the most horrible crimes are committed by men who plead "God said" in justification of their misdeeds.

"Moreover, the English Bible is a version of a version which is a translation of a translation. It has come down through Hebrew, Greek and Latin into English. In all its earlier stages it was copied by hand from one manuscript to another by different writers, a process certain to result in many mistakes."

Dr. Aked insists that he is not attacking the Bible itself, but merely the claim for infallibility which has been set up for it, and he asserts that this claim for a book in which it is possible for a child to discover errors is driving many intelligent people away from the church.

The right of every man to study and interpret the Scriptures for himself, he holds, is as great now as it was in the time of Luther and Calvin and Zwinglius, and such an independent attitude would do more to strengthen the hold of religion upon the multitude than any amount of the preaching and teaching in defense of the infallibility of every passage in the Bible.—The North American, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Look in Thy Heart and Write."

Written by Henry Morrison Tefft, Norwich, N. Y.

There is no well directed road to happiness; it is a "condition," not a "possession." There seems to be a fatality about our lives that we cannot change or alter. We are not allowed to select what cross we will bear; the burden imposed is never of our own choosing. It is hard to tell what the effect of any experience may have upon our life. Suffering elevates, purifies and subdues the soul. Grief makes a person serious, contemplative, earnest; joy makes a person light, trifling and frivolous. Schubert says, "Grief sharpens the understanding and strengthens the soul, whereas joy seldom troubles itself about the former, and makes the latter either effeminate or frivolous." If there had been no sorrow in the world there could have been no joy. Even religion would have no standing room. The individual who has never sinned and repented knows nothing about the suffering of the one or the joy of the other. It takes the cloud and the rain as well as the sunshine to paint the beautiful colors of the rainbow. We would as soon forget our days of rejoicing as we would our days of weeping. Each individual lives two lives; that which is public and apparent to every one—but another, which is known only to the individual alone. We are all more or less affected by our surroundings; the more sensitive the nature, the more dependent it is upon circumstances. The same words, the same acts, carry different messages; it all depends upon who says the words, who does the acts.

"How is it that one human soul draws out
Another's grace and power, where a third
Can find no strength or sweetness, as the sun
Brings out the flush and flavor of the fruit
From which the moonlight draws no taste or tint?"

A cloud which at midday would be almost pure white becomes radiant with color when touched by the setting sun. There is hope in a book, in inspiration, in a smile, poems and pictures in visions. "Dante wrote his poems," says Leigh Mitchell Hodges, "to a woman he never saw except in dreams. Plutarch did as much for another lady, who was the wife of another." It is claimed that there is an antidote for every poison, a cure for every sickness, a possibility of satisfaction for every human aspiration. These conclusions are hard to verify. No deep life is ever lived without disappointment; somewhere in the heart, unobserved, perhaps, by the thoughtless crowd, is a place dedicated to sorrow. Each soul cherishes its secret; it has joys and sorrows too sacred to be committed to words or made known even to our closest friend. Love gives times, places, and occasions a more sacred dedication, a more solemn blessing than any ceremony, liturgy or priestly words. A single circumstance changes the whole current of a life. Death sanctifies, purifies and ennobles wherever it goes. It makes things secular, sacred; things sinful, holy; and under its shadow the most trivial act becomes immortal. Yet the tragedy of life is more impressive than the solemnity of death. It requires more fortitude and endurance to sustain existence than it does to surrender it. Physical suffering is not to be compared with mental suffering.

"Is there no stoning save with flint and rock?
Yes, as the dead we weep for testify—
No desolation but by sword and fire?
Yes, as your moanings witness, and myself
Am lonelier, darker, earthlier for my loss."

There are times when to laugh or jest is to exhibit the basest hypocrisy—when tears express the heart's desires better than smiles. This is such a contradictory world; so much joy, so much suffering, all mingling together, moving, living side by side, jostling each other as they pass along the street. The last look, the last word is constantly being seen and spoken. The greetings and farewells follow each other in rapid succession. Yet, on its surface, life seems calm, placid and contented.

How different things appear in retrospect than they do when passing. The very facts and condition of our experiences, that we most deplore, are often our greatest blessings. If there were no burdens to bear what would we know of rest? If there was no sickness how could we appreciate health? If there was no sorrow in the world could there be any sense of happiness?

"If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender.

"If sorrow never claimed our heart
And every wish was granted,
Patience would die and hope depart—
Life would be disenchanted."

All the forces of the world are at equipoise. The picture of life requires both light and shade, brightness and gloom. Nature has her moods—somber and gay; there is the note of sadness as well as the not of joy. The seasons speak a language. Spring is full of hope, expectancy and growth; Summer, of maturity and ripening powers; Autumn reminds us of age and decay, and Winter means death when all the forces of life rest.

Nature in her deepest mood is serious. Listen to the moaning of the winds, the murmuring of the streams; look at the solemn grandeur of the mountains, the vastness of the ocean, the unbounded stretch of the prairie; what feelings do these expressions of nature inspire, sadness or mirth? Some wise writer has said, "You do not laugh when you look at the mountains nor when you look at the sea." The richest ore contains more or less slag. The most profound knowledge carries with it a great deal of doubt. The mind is like an old building, decayed and worthless timbers have to be taken out and new ones put in their places.

Some people utilize their thoughts, others waste them. The sun's ray has no light, no brilliancy, until it comes in contact with the atmosphere of the earth. Words are not ideas; they have no value unless we understand their meaning—what they represent. Giving expression to our opinions strengthens them. Rehearsing an event, incident or what we have read, fixes it in the mind more permanently than any kind of memorizing can do.

Spirit and matter are closely allied—they work in harmony. The physical form is a perfect picture of the spiritual; what lives within expresses itself without. Our experiences and mental state color all we see, hear, or contemplate. Beauty resides as much in the eye as it does in the object upon which the eye rests. "Nature," says Henri Pene DuBois, "is only what it appears to be. It is in itself neither beautiful nor ugly. It is the eye of the artist that makes the beauty of heaven and earth." The feeling of exaltation or depression is largely a matter of circumstance, outside of any visible cause.

Whether a scene or an incident elevates or depresses depends upon the condition of the mind more than the facts themselves. It has been said of Emerson, "To his mystic vision every mountain is a Sinai, every tree of the wood a burning bush, every breeze is vocal with the still small voice." What gives inspiration to one person has no effect upon another.

Some people have no sentiment, no feeling, no imagination. Every question is viewed from the standpoint of cold logic and reason. What cannot be mathematically demonstrated has no standing room in their mind.

Humanity is represented under a variety of styles. There are all kinds of wise men and all kinds of fools. When we call a man great, that may describe only one side of him. Inconsistency is almost always the accompaniment of genius. Because a man occupies a high position either in society or in public life it is not even presumptive evidence that he is qualified to fill the place. It was once said of a certain United States senator after the expiration of his term, that he had "been a cipher in the Senate since his admission to that body. He leaves it a cipher with the rim cut off, an attenuated nothingness, a shrunken nullity, a political quantity below zero which has to be measured by a minus prefix."

There are negative natures and positive natures. Some men have no convictions, no ardent purpose—only prejudices; neither their friendship nor their hate is ever more than lukewarm—never up to the boiling heat. A negative person passes through life doing anything very good or anything very bad, but he is worthless. He stands in community neutral, neither violating nor admonishing; leading a life perfectly colorless. He is not felt while living or missed when dead. The majority of mankind follow the course of least resistance. There is a difference between floating and swimming. The floater follows the tide whichever way it goes, while the swimmer goes against the current as well as with it, according to the needs of the occasion.

A man of convictions and earnestness always gets a hearing, no matter whether he is on the right or the wrong side of a question. He writes or talks to the point, he forces his thought upon you in a manner that is impossible for a surface and an artificial writer or talker to do. It is the wavering, uncertain, insincere man that fails of an audience. Smooth talk never takes the place of ideas. I once read of a minister of whom it was said that, "He always preached without notes and generally without ideas." Public speakers often drown thir thoughts with words. After witnessing the tragedy of Dionysius, Malanthius was asked how he enjoyed it, he replied, "I could not see it; it was so clouded with language."

Even a painting must be full of thought, expression and history. No amount of technical skill can atone for the loss or lack of an idea; it has got to express thoughts, or it has no value. Ruskin says, "No weight, nor mass, nor beauty of execution can outweigh one grain or fragment of thought. * * * But if one atom of thought has vanished, all color, all finish, all execution, all ornament, are too dearly bought." Some writers can put into a sentence more than others can on a page; an argument is stunned by a paragraph. Few people dare be original; not until a word, a sentence, an opinion, is worn threadbare can they use it.

The fear of ridicule has prevented more persons from achieving success in life than lack of ability, opposition or any adverse circumstance. It is not moral principle that keeps a large portion of mankind from committing sin, it is cowardice. The love of approbation, the desire for the esteem of the community in which one lives—keep thousands on the moral road more than natural desire. Some one has remarked that "Decency and external conscience often produce a fairer outside than is warranted by the stains within." A man's life speaks more than his words; they are often at variance; he may talk right but act wrong. Nine times out of ten the reformer needs reforming. He is more concerned about the moral condition of the world generally than he is about himself individually. Macaulay says, "But no people walk so ill as dancing masters, and no people reason so ill as mere mathematicians."

It is claimed that every material body has its spiritual counterpart. When we look into a mirror we see our own form reflected. So in life, our mental and spiritual form is reflected in all we say, do, or think. We are only capable of seeing in a book, in a painting or in a person just what is within ourselves; we cannot understand things alien to our nature. A fish out of water makes poor headway. The moment a person gets out of his natural element he is a failure. You cannot learn politeness by studying books on etiquette; it is a natural gift.

There is no likeness between an orator and an elocutionist; between a painter and a drawing master. Nature is a greater teacher than man. In what school did Homer or Ossian learn the rules of poetry. Or where did Job acquire the art and style of producing the grandest piece of literature ever wrought by mortal man.

The nearer we live to nature the nearer we are to God. There is a divine order in the social world the same as in the physical world. Men do not make events; events make men. Mankind follow the current of civilization; they do not guide it. All great movements, political, religious and moral, have come about as naturally and orderly as the day succeeds the night. Constituions are not arbitrarily made; they grow. A legislative enactment is only the signing and sealing of what has already been commanded.

At no age can a person sit down and draw a plan of his life as an architect does of a building. Circumstances overrule all human calculations. What is true with individuals is true with nations. At the close of the war of the Rebellion who could have foreseen our war with Spain and the surrendering up of so large a portion of her possessions to American rule. Man is an instrument controlled by unseen forces and only works by compulsion. He is not his own master—but a servant working out the decrees of destiny.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps on the sea
And rides upon the storm."

Cheer for the Departed.

Read at the funeral of Mrs. Effie Moss by the author and published by special request.

We must sometime pause from labor and our all-absorbing thought,
To look out upon the future, and to glimpses we have caught
Of a life beyond the mortal, where our friends who pass away
Often tell us in faint whispers, "All will meet some future day."

Oft when life seems bathed in sweetness and our soul its zenith finds,
Swift a cloud spreads out above us and our mortal vision blinds;
Then it is we are reminded of our weakness unto woe,
Though we know when all is over, light and darkness make us grow.

When there passes from the vision to that higher, brighter sphere,
An old kindred or companion who has been so long so near,
Even tears will fall to fully ease the pent-up throbbing heart,
For though knowing it were better, it were bitter thus to part.

When the spirit and the body can no longer live as one;
When the soul immortal, yearning, finds its earthly labor done,
It were wise to be transported to a higher plane of life,
There again in active labor to resume the round of strife.

It were wise to be uplifted from a worn-out form of earth;
It were wise to have soul-freedom in a higher form of birth,
And no matter how we miss them from our lonely earth abode,
We should hail the soul's transition, and give cheer along the road.

As upon the surging ocean, unencumbered by the forms,
They are drifting quite securely from this life's tempestuous storms,
All their faults of earthly nature will in time be gone, unknown;
Will be swept away eternal, when the spirits are full grown.

Let us follow them in silence and in love unto the door,
And then send along our blessings and good cheer forevermore,
And assure them in the spirit, of our pleasure unexpressed,
For their freedom from the bodies they have worn and laid to rest.

A TRENCHANT SERMON.

The Nation That Forgets God (Good) Shall be Turned Into Hell.—Bible.

Is the American nation going to destruction? If one is inclined to be pessimistic the answer would be in the affirmative. Every day brings revelations of gross licentiousness, extravagance, sensuality, and wickedness of the rich, and those occupying high stations in both church and state. Appalling crimes are almost daily committed by professing Christians and others heretofore enjoying the confidence of the community, many of them in possession of large wealth. Senator LaFollette recently recently said: "There are but five honest senators in the senate of the United States." The nation seems to be going "money mad!" Eighty millions of people seem to have lost conscience and moral integrity. Thomas Lawson told how, by trickery, and stock manipulation, one trust "made" thirty millions of dollars in one night, and how ten Wall street capitalists "made" six hundred millions in ten days. Reliable statistics show that the wealth of the nation is rapidly drifting into the possession of the few. Harper's Weekly says, "Five thousand men own one-sixth of the total wealth of the United States." There are in this country 16,000,000 families. Of these 8,305,000 own no homes and are practically propertyless. That is more than half our population. It is estimated that there are now three millions of unemployed workingmen in the coutry. Two millions of tender children are being worked like slaves in our mills and factories. In all of our large cities thousands of children are poorly clad and go crying to bed supperless. But these distressing things do not distress the plutocrats, the stock-gamblers, the "Four Hundred" members of "society," nor do they disturb to any appreciable extent the fat, sleek clergy, nor the average politician who who is in pursuit of an office. The Salvation Army is doing something to assuage the sorrows of the poor, and an occasional preacher of the liberal stripe speaks out in protest against the shams of "society" and the hypocrisy of the church, but all these occasional spurts of effort to better things, are soon lost in the mad rush for money and position. The Rev. Herbert S. Johnson, pastor of the Warren street Baptist church of Boston recently said:

"There are women in Boston who send poodles to hear Caruso. They get their doggies' nails manicured. Indeed, I have seen doggies taken to ride in coaches for their health. And a maid would go along to hold a parasol over each one."

The speaker also recalled the arrangements made for a recent eastern ball, were $100,000 worth of imported butterflies were turned loose to delight the guests. He was dealing with social problems, poodle dogs and aristocracy in contrast with the working people of the country.

And these butterflies cost $100,000, while four blocks from the ball-room there were women earning through the whole week only $4.

The great toiling masses read of these extravagances and immoralities of the rich; they know of the hypocrisies of the church; they daily read of the defalcations, swindlings, betrayal of trusts, corruption of the courts, the sale of senatorships and other official positions, and they lose faith in all mankind. The press, once influential, is now distrusted because of its lack of independence and its adherence to party, right or wrong.

A presidential campaign is pending, and we hear all sorts of promises made to the people by the politicians, but what have our alleged statesmen done the last ten years to preserve the Republic and advance the best interests of the great masses? Little more than to lay plans to secure offices, put money into their own pockets and strengthen their party.

Many ancient nations went to destruction because the wealth had passed into the possession of the few. These became sensual, corrupt, cruel and selfish. The poor, who had been robbed of the fruits of their labor, became ignorant, diseased, unpatriotic and vicious. Both classes were swept to destruction. Is this nation traveling the same broad road to ruin? I fear it is. Nothing can save us it seems to me unless we abandon a paganized system of religion which has for centuries defended kingcraft, plutocracy, slavery, war, and the competitive system of industrialism, whose motto is, "Every fellow for himself and let Satan take the hindmost." We must, as speedily as we can, abandon all these and adopt a common sense system of religion and a co-operative system of industrialism founded on the Golden Rule. This means that we must establish a co-operative commonwealth in which every worker with head or hand, in every useful pursuit, shall receive the full product of his labor; that every man shall be rewarded according to his deeds. Such is the teaching of earth's brightest minds, inhabiting both this and the spirit spheres. It behooves Spiritualists to teach this generation a better system of religion than Paganized Christianity which we now have, and to stand for a government founded on co-operation and brotherhood. The organized orthodox churches to-day are vastly more Pagan than Christian, and our entire business system is based on "might makes right," and "to the victor belongs the spoils." It is selfish and greedy to the core. These are the rocks on which this civilization is in danger of being wrecked.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation while sin is a reproach to any people!" R. A. DAGUE.

Tacoma, Wash.

As no man can be happy if he is wicked, foolish, or indolent, so no man can be wretched if he is virtuous, brave and wise. Glorious is the life of that man whose virtues and practice are praiseworthy; nor, indeed, ought that life to be escaped from which is deserving of praise, though it might well be cut short if it were a wretched one.—Cicero.

ETERNAL INDIVIDUALITY.

In No. 975 Mr. E. L. Dohoney says: "I have clearly proven that spirit, soul and mind are all distinct parts of man. The life which the spirit imparts to the spiritual body is the soul, and the life imparted to the physical body is the mind."

But why is life spirit, soul and mind any more than water is wood, rock and iron? And then he says:

"The object of earth life is to individualize the spirit. The physical body is simply a mold in which the spiritual body is formed and developed."

If there is no individual spiritual body, soul or mind, until they are formed in the physical body, then there is no personal immortality, for that alone which has had no commencement can be immortal.

He says the soul may not accept immortality, the spiritual body may die and "then the immortal spirit, having lost both bodies, may probably be permitted to return to earth, to re-embody, and make another effort to save a soul."

A spirit without body or soul, a man, without either physical or spiritual parts or counterparts or semblance of being, is not the manly sort of man we are trying to investigate.

If in "The Constitution of Man" he has clearly proven that the physical body is before individual life, is the mold for individualizing a spirit, and developing a soul, and that the soul, mind and spiritual body all die, as well as does the physical body, then he has proven that there is no immortality.

What we want to know is what makes the man a man while here or elsewhere, if there is elsewhere.

To our way of thinking, the real man is the soul man. Therefore the soul of man is the whole and entire man, in all of his faculties of conscious being; consisting and existing in the elemental issues and substances, emotional sensories and forces of an ever-existent and self-intelligent entity of individual life, inherently possessed of the energies of causation, for no living thing can be created and no non-intelligent object can comprehend and conform to intelligent instructions. The soul is the individual life principle, in which resides all of the feelings and faculties and forces ever made manifest through his spiritual and physical bodies. It is the casket of consciousness just as the body is the sum total of the physical organisms. It is the builder of the human body, just as the sun is the builder of the turnip. The physical body, instead of being a mold for the spiritual is fashioned by the spirit, or soul, animated and endowed by it with the means of respiration, digestion, and circulation, and made for the use, expression and locomotion of that spiritual being while here among material environments.

No man knows of a time when earth and sun—and stars, and man and beasts and birds did not exist, nor has he evidence that these things will ever cease to be. God could not have created himself; he would have had to exist before he existed to do so. Therefore, he is uncreated, ever-existent immortal.

Nothing can be produced except alone from pre-existing things, and each is "after its kind," demonstrating that the same elemental life principle, with its peculiar individual properties or faculties, is perplexed, as evidenced by the complete identity of each, whether in flavor and fragrance, or in form and faculty. There are hills in which are planted the seeds of corn and beans and pumpkins, with the same environments of soil, rain, sunshine, enclosure and culture, but their fruitage is each after its kind. It is known that the pre-existing wheat is the only source for its re-embodiment into new stalks and grains, and so it is with the human and the animal; neither springs from nothing nor from any other source than each after its kind.

"There is no new thing under the sun, that which has been now is, and that which is to be hath already been. All the rivers run into the sea, yet unto the place from whence the rivers came thither they return again."—Bible.

"It is impossible to go back to the origin of life, because it is of eternity. I believe candidly there was no beginning."—Prof. Agassiz.

Life is continuous, with allotted spans running through the material and the spiritual universe. Back of the beginning of this span of our lives were the beginnings of our parents, of their parents, of empires and epochs in history, all preceded by an endless chain of beginnings, like the changing seasons, making here and now so much a part of eternity as any other place or time can be.

Millions believe that this indwelling spiritual guide, the soul, with its elemental energies, emotional sensories, and intellectual faculties, which alone radiates the countenance with laughter and love, and makes the flesh glow with roseate charms, escapes unseen from the body at death, and continues to exist as an immortal entity. If this be true, it is equally as clear and as reasonable that it existed before the material body, as it can afterwards exist entirely independent of it.

Brother Hughes, of the Blue Grass Blade, believing that death ends all, says:

"Let it be observed that life is not an entity. Life is not a thing. It is simply a result. For every germ that succeeds in struggling into life there are a thousand that are lost."

If life is nothing, how can death affect it! How can germs be lost if they can struggle just as well without life as with it! Does not struggling cease when life ceases? We claim that souls are entities, are individual spiritual beings, are absolutely living things, from all eternity, without which these is no cognizance of other things. It seems to us that life is the most potential thing known as a basic factor in all achievements and results in the visible world around us. And if at death this living entity escapes unseen from the body, and lives a span of life, as a spiritual being in the spiritual universe, still subject to the irresistible laws of God and Nature, which the mightiest exterior of intellectual energies can not impede or change, which brought us here and will take us hence, regardless of our desires, it is as agreeable to reason that we will again be embodied as that we are embodied at this moment.

It is claimed that spiritual beings can pass through closed doors, and if their texture is so transcendently fine as that, surely when they shall have been purposely prepared for the process of re-incarnation by inhalation into the lungs and loins of mated material beings, under the divine laws of love and marriage, their re-embodiment for the re-enjoyment of mortal life, will not appear incredible to reason.

In his "Intellectual System," 1678, Cudworth says: "And neither were there any of the ancients, before Christianity, that held the soul's future permanency after death, who did not likewise assert its pre-existence, they clearly perceiving that if it was once granted that the soul was generated, it could never be proved, but that it might be corrupted."

The conclusion, therefore, is, that the spiritual being is an absolutely eternal entity; that its physical or material body dies; that its astral or ethereal body dies, but the individual spirit lives on forever, alternating its spans of life in the material and the spiritual universes. And surely there is no safer salvation than results from being good, doing good and avoiding harm; for this will truly save us from all that we can or should be saved—for we have to die and we have to save ourselves just the same as if Jesus had neither lived nor died. And there seems to us no sweeter hope, or more comforting belief than that we shall live again and again, as little children, through the glorious days of childhood; as lovers of the long ago, whose precious trysting places were hallowed by the holiest thoughts and richest feelings that human hearts can know; as parents of the darling tots, whose clinging arms and magnetic forms bound us to life, in bonds of love, making within us the kingdom of heaven, until here and there was heaven enough for us.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

Lessons of the School of Life.

All great achievements are results of ambitious thought. Ideals are as important as reals. As the soul unfolds along the lines of life, its ideality in advance of its environment makes the incentive to struggle on. Thought, aspiration, love, desire, lead and shape us more than circumstances or forces of heredity. What we want to be and do control our efforts, and thus we plod along, hoping tomorrow will bring better results than to-day.

We are going ever onward without limit in our career, and never fully comprehend what we are, and never will.

We cannot die nor stand still, nor retrace the steps of our pilgrimage; we must move forward and upward forever.

We are born with organizations and faculties filled with longings, desires, passions and powers, for which we are not responsible; yet no finite intelligence can judge how far a person may be responsible for his or her thoughts and acts. We are not responsible for many of them, but will have to bear the consequences of them; and also the effects of some thoughts and acts of our fellow-beings.

Some causes of suffering may be traced to ancestry, some to individual action, yet wherever a cause may rest, it is in accordance with the operations of nature. The purpose of suffering is to teach the correct method and conduct of life. Heaven is for people who have grown to it; not by miraculous gift, prayer or free grace, but by assiduous culture, improvement, and often through long, painful discipline of events.

We would not remove the stumbling blocks from man's way in search of truth and knowledge—they are needed for his development.

The long and hard road is for him who needs it. A person put into a sphere of bliss beyond his development could have no just appreciation of its delights.

Looking only on external forms of existence we behold imperfections in abundance; but there is always imperfect before there can be a perfect manifestation of any design. The doctrine of "the survival of the fittest" applies to persons and things of progressive natures. That which is not perfect is not fit to survive. A condition that brings suffering is not perfect and must be removed or outgrown. A mistake or error in an effort to do the right should be viewed as a temporary failure.

Suffering for wrong-doing is purifying in effect; and when failings, faults, vices are rectified there is no longer any need for the suffering. If we make no mistakes we will not have to suffer; but having made them, suffering should be regarded as the way out of the trouble.

A person gains experience through discipline. As we unfold from ignorance to knowledge, we gain in part by pains entailed upon us by wrong-doing and thinking; yet when we understand how to apply our powers to practical results, sufferings decrease; because we realize how to make the most of our opportunities, confident of the results that come from earnest labor, from sincere purpose and effort.

He (or she) who endeavors to unfold his qualities of self-reliance, endurance, patience, along with other attributes of mental and spiritual natures, will be able to hold his own ground of harmony and strength—he will labor with a strong reliant will, certain of success at any cost, and gain knowledge of his inherent powers, gain a self-poise of inestimable value to him as he presses onward.

Many people who were unknown, unhonored, unsung on the earth plane now stand exalted in spirit; and we are all destined to be beautiful sometime. As man reaches forward in thought and aspiration in his endeavors to know more, he may look ahead in the boundless universe and say: My race is onward; my end I shall not find; for progression is boundless and endless. I may learn, strive, achieve, through all the coming ages.

The Papal Decree.

It Wars on American Law, Calumniates Parents and Disgraces Their Children, as Set Forth in the New York Truth Seeker.

How a working man, secretary of an obscure sect composed principally of slaves, has left as his successor a territorial prince, who styles himself "vice-god" and sits on a gold throne between two carved cherubim to emphasize the assumption, and to identify himself with him who sits between the cherubim is a mystery which must amaze everyone who gives any thought of the church of Rome, not as a superstition, but as an actual fact in the history of Europe for fifteen hundred years. Further, how this theocratic prince in the eleventh and following centuries contrived to obtain lordship over the greater part of Europe, and reduce its kings to vassals, is incomprehensible to the uninformed thinker. The mode, however, is known. With many other arts, that which was most successful in producing this subjugation was the assumption that the natural function of procreation was an ecclesiastical art, and under the authority of the church. First marriage was declared a religious rite; it was discovered that it had become a mystery, made so by a Syrian carpenter some six hundred years before. Then it was asserted that its true performance was defined only by the church. THEN KING AFTER KING WAS VILIFIED FOR HIS DOMESTIC ARRANGEMENTS AND PRIVATE CONDUCT — DEPOSED AND ROBBED BY THIS "MAN OF SORROWS" ON EARTH, WHO THEREON ASSUMED THEM TO HIMSELF.

But the world is changed. The pope no longer terrorizes kings and rules them through their marital conduct. America has no king. The German Emperor is a Protestant. The eldest son of the church, the king of France, has ceased to exist. The king of Italy has usurped Rome and reigns in it in defiance of the church. The kings of Naples and the dukes of the Italian republics are extinct. The king of Bavaria is a vassal of the Protestant German empire; none remain Romanists but the kings of Spain, Belgium and Portugal and the emperor of Austria. The Roman faith is NO LONGER THE STATE RELIGION OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE. It is the cult of a sect throughout the world, in conflict with the religions of the nations of the world—a conflict which, like the conflict of the Jewish race with civilization, is dissolving it by the mere contact with the enemy it has set itself to conquer. Only forty years ago it had the power to instigate the Emperor Napoleon III. to enter on a war to destroy Protestantism by crushing the kingdom of Prussia. Now there is no French empire—there is no Catholic France, Russia leads in an advancing Germanic empire which is hourly becoming more Liberal. The British empire is under an aggressive Puritanism. The Roman church in America is with difficulty retained in contact with Rome and has just celebrated the centenary of its solidification in New York with a deification of the American flag; an immense demonstration in which not one Christian, much less Roman, emblem appeared; a demonstration that might rather have been a threat of the state against all religion, than the parade of the army of a foreign theocrat, who claims both the private possession and the public right to rule the continent which contains the United States.

Holland, although largely Romanist, is becoming feudatory to Prussia. Sweden, Norway and Denmark are closing in with England, while the Russian empire is painfully hastening up to the common plane of civilization, instead of retrograding under papal direction. Moreover, the Protestant forces are estimable; its representatives are "respectable." The Emperor William is a typical German citizen. The king of England is the type of a British squire. The kings of Sweden and Norway, and as far as I know, of Denmark, are without reproach. But the kings of the Catholic countries, Belgium and Austria, have not a shred of character. Alfonso already has shown the Protestant influence of his wife and his mother-in-law, and very sanely, seems intent on solidifying his own disjointed empire rather than entering on a crusade against France. Kings are no longer an asset of the Vaticanal imposture. It therefore turns to the individual, to the voter, and to the voter's wife and sweetheart. It has suddenly produced a whole chain of obstacles to marriage by a decree on marriage issued by the present pope last year. By this it has raised a doubt as to the real validity of the majority of existing marriages by making that validity depend on the status of the priest who witnesses it; thus it has cast a suspicion of bastardy on practically all the children of Romanist families, and made the question of the legitimacy of existing and all future papists depend on matters wholly out of the power of the laity to affect, or even to be cognizant of.

Nothing demonstrates the imposture and bad faith of the papal sect more than its dealings in regard to marriage. Moreover, nothing demonstrates the audacity of ignorance which rules it more than its frequent pronouncements in regard to it. It constantly insists upon this ceremony or that ceremony constituting a valid marriage, yet its statute law—its canon—emphatically declares that marriage is not a sacrament to which ceremony is attached; or that it is administered in any mode or sense by the church. The utmost the church has to do in the matter is to approve of the event of a marriage, i. e., it blesses the spouses and nothing more—a definition, strangely enough, fixed in the Roman church by a general of the Jesuits, Lavnez, at the Council of Trent.

Here is the express form of the definition of marriage, which, until Easter Sunday of this year, has been the doctrine of the Church of Rome. I take it from a Breviarium Theologicum, published in Mechlin in 1729: "Sacramenti Matrimonii minister, non est parochus sed insi fideles contrahentes, quia insi sunt, qui applicant formam materiae." This expressly declares that the "parochus," the parish priest, does not administer the sacrament of marriage, and that the material form of marriage is administered by the faithful themselves. According to the Council of Trent marriage is the consent of the parties—the simple intention to marry. The catechism of the Council of Trent, as translated by J. Donovan of Maynooth, says clearly: "Without consummation," the consent of the parties, expressed by words, or even by a nod, or the silence of the bride, with the spoken assent of her parents or guardians, constitutes a true marriage.

In all that the decrees or the catechism of the Council of Trent have to say on the nature of marriage, the priest is not mentioned. With the Council of Trent marriage was essentially personal. This is still recognized by the law of Scotland, and moreover, this was declared to be the law of the Roman church, and an attempt was made to get it recognized as English law so recently as 1898, only ten years ago; when a doctor of Manchester endeavored to have his connection with his housekeeper declared to be a valid marriage in English law. This gentleman, under the direct control of a priest, omitted the marriage ceremony, and was given the assurance by his "parochus" that it was not needed. At the present moment this case is of vital importance as it demonstrates that the doctrine of the Roman church was held by priests to exclude the "parochus" and witnesses from the essence of this sacrament. (This account of this most interesting and amazing case will appear later.)

Now at first this new decree appears to be nothing other than the insistence that every marriage not performed by the parish priest, or his duly authorized representative, or substitute, is invalid or illicit. Six of the ten articles of the decree deal with the parish priest in regard to the celebration of marriages. Yet it is to be observed that the decree nowhere says that the couple is married by the priest; or that he performs a marriage ceremony. It makes him merely the recorder of an event wholly apart from him. It speaks of the marriages as "contracted before the parish priest" and says that "he assists at them."

So on the one hand the law of this sect declares that marriage is solely the intention to be married, and a mutual consent to the union. Nevertheless, on the other hand, the head of this communion, in his decree, denounces all supposed marriages as void which are not contracted before a parish priest, his ordinary, or their representative.

This is an assumption that the presence of a private citizen, in no way representing the community, intruded into the domestic life of individuals, in some magical manner renders moral common actions, which, without their self-assumptive presence, would be incomprehensibly and irredeemably immoral and reprehensible. This assumption, which formerly was regarded as applying to a limited number of parishes, is now made universal and restraint is thus placed on marriage throughout the Roman communion. But the status of the priest himself affects the validity of the marriages contracted before him. Thus, only a very few persons are absolutely assured within their own minds that they are not living a life "in sin." This may occur if the priest should have been suspended by his superior and have concealed the fact of suspension; if he has not been validly in possession of the benefice, or has not duly entered on the office, or has not been strictly within the limits of his own territory—which in some cases would make his having stood on one side of a room instead of another invalidate the marriage performed before him; it would also occur if he omits to ask the consent of the contracting parties, when acting as deputy for a neighboring priest, or should the priest omit to ascertain if the parties are free to contract the marriage.

The pope is not content thus to check marriage in his own communion, and to carry scandal, doubt, and social fanaticism throughout his own adherents. He has boldly assumed the power to dictate to the whole world as to the status of their wives, and the legitimacy of their offspring. He has the magnanimity to assure non-Catholics that they are not bound by this law, provided that they never have been baptized by a Romanist. Should this have ever happened, their marriages contracted in their own manners are null and void. The effect of this decree is to proclaim as concubines all women married to men who reject Romanism, after having been by any means, either by treachery of servants when children, or by their own will, baptized by a Romanist; or women who themselves repudiate Romanism after a Romanist baptism. Even Christians of cognate sects, orthodox Greeks and Anglicans, are thus outraged.

Here is a clear advance in that aggression over the individual which formerly was effected over the state. This imposture starts with the easy and acceptable proposition that marriage is mutual consent. It goes even further and declares that the expressed consent to a marriage constitutes a valid marriage, even though the parties are then unable to cohabit. But it winds up with the insolent declaration that such of its opponents as may ever, by any circumstance, have been "baptized" by one of its members, are living in open immorality, "in sin," because they had not asked its consent to their marriages—a consent, by the way, which is granted to no one, male or female, until that person has informed a priest of such circumstances in his career as would make him amenable to the law of the state.

This Bedlamite conspiracy recognizes no law but its own. The Vatican does not talk about this or that being right "in the eyes of the church," as The Truth Seeker reports the Rev. William Fitzgerald to have said in regard to the marriage of Mrs. Giuffra. It claims to rule the whole world and to command all mankind. A pretension which was the root of all the horrors which stultified Europe from the Lateran Council in the middle of the eleventh century to the expulsion of the French from Rome in 1871.

The Rev. Isaac J. Lansing, in "Romanism and the Republic," p. xi., gives, on the authority of Dr. G. F. von Schulte, professor of canon law at Prague, the following as fundamental and unalterable laws of the Roman communion: All human power must stand under the pope and the temporal powers must act unconditionally in accordance with the orders of the clergy. The church is empowered to grant or take away any temporal possesssion, to give away nations which are non-Catholic to Catholic regents (i. e., deputies of the church itself), which "regents" can reduce these said non-Catholic nations to slavery.

The pope has the right to annul state laws. The pope can annul all legal relations of those under its curse (i. e., non-Catholics), especially their marriages.

These claims appear to us non-Catholics, brought up under Protestant rule, to be merely the antiquarian relics of past ages—horrors dragged from the lumber cellars and forgotten dungeons of the Vatican. There is no greater delusion. And this is a delusion created by invertebrates posing as Protestants, or as Catholics, according to the phases of the moon. It is not a delusion created or fostered by the authorities of the Roman church itself. That has never ceased or varied in putting forth these pretensions, save to intensify and enlarge them. In the bull for the deposition of Queen Elizabeth, issued by "Our Sovereign Lord, the Pope Pius V.," as he styled himself, Pius V. declared that Christ had set him "over all nations, and over all kingdoms, to root up and to destroy, to waste and to scatter, to plant and to build."

The late Cardinal Manning, in a sermon preached about fifty years ago in England, said of the English race: "We have to subjugate and subdue; to conquer and rule it. We have to 'bend or break' its will."

Here in America fifty years appears an eternity, but the Roman bishop in that time has kept pace in madness even with the American republics in their evolution. Since then the pope has had himself declared infallible, and has issued a dozen encyclicals and two syllabuses of Modern Errors, which emphasizes all that was claimed by his ancient predecessors. Among them, Leo XIII. declared that Jesus Christ commanded the successors of the apostles (i. e., the popes) to the end of time to rule the nations; and that he ordered the nations to obey their authority. Cardinal Manning, in a preface to Leo the Thirteenth's Encyclical on Liberty, asserts that his church is independent and sufficing in itself with powers to legislate, to judge, and to punish all. He derides the idea that this power is confined to "those who are willing to submit to it." He says: "Such a theory banishes the church into a land of dreams, beyond the conflict of human action, surrendering mankind to the state."

Observe that he puts the whole position in the one word "surrendering." With this imposture the fiction is that the Roman church existed before men acquired that coherence in conduct which constitutes numbers of individuals into a society—into the state—an imposture which is obviously false, and is, moreover, historically and scientifically false. Nevertheless, I especially call the attention of those adherents of the pope, who were so loud and so eloquent in their denunciations of the French government two years ago, to the fact that this pretension of the bishop of Rome is not dropped. In the very meeting in the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, called to protest against the action of France in resisting the pope's claim to intrude bishops into French sees, Archbishop Ryan declared that "the pope is the head of all, of every nationality under the sun. As God is father of all humanity in general and equally father of each member of the human family, so is the pope in his vicarial character." Later still, in this very year, in the sermon preached by the Dominician friar, Father L. F. Kearney, at the placing of the pope's halter on the neck of the archbishop of Boston on Jan. 28, he said: "Jesus Christ established a visible kingdom. * * * It was necessary that he should place over his earthly kingdom a head; a visible sovereign, vested with supreme authority—authority not only to pronounce doctrinal matters, but to govern and to rule, to administer and control the world—embracing society and all its parts and all its members.

This is the proclamation of a wholly different institution from any other religious communion in the republic. This is the pretension of an individual, a man. This is no longer a church, an ecclesiastical association, but a king with a direct appointment from God for secular dominion, with whom the American republic have to deal—a king, it must never be forgotten, who has already divided America between the kings of Spain and Portugal, a fact, by-the-bye, we never hear from the loud-voiced proclaimers of the Monroe doctrine. This assumption of overlordship over a country anywhere but in America would be treated as an invasion. It would be recognized as warfare; and the adherents of the claimant of overlordship would be incontinently expatriated as traitors. Unhappily these encroachments are not recognized here; the history of America does not show a thousand years of horror created by this imposture. It has no crusades, no ages of contention between the federal authority and a vice-God. It has had no Inquisition, nor is the President under sentence of anathema maranatha because he is the President. The encroachments of Rome are recognized in France, and are met with in a virile manner, as they have been within almost living memory in Austria, Mexico, and are still in Italy. But this decree of the pope is merely the same assumption of ownership of the present sovereign of civilized countries, the voter, that was made formerly over the autocrats of the middle ages. And by the same means—the creation of doubt as to legitimacy the pope, not the state, declared the sole authority on bastardy; and consequently in papist countries the final disposer of inheritance, and here in Protestant nations of the honor of matrons and the status of their children.

The decree is a clear supplanting and nullification of the state by the Vatican. It goes directly and boldly beyond the limits of the sect which the pope rules; and traduces the families of all what have unhappily once been deluded by its monstrous lying to have entered that sect; or have been treacherously "baptized" by a servant, a nurse, or midwife in fancy. This does not ignore American laws; it goes farther and declares war on them. In effect, this decree declares that American law is powerless to make a marriage valid in America. It goes beyond the pope's own following, and, irrespective of law, declares what is and what is not legal for American citizens repudiating this sect.

That the warning of this article is not far-fetched is demonstrated by the event which has caused it to be written. This decree was issued on Aug. 2 of last year, and already its pretensions are enforced here, where we sing we live in a "SWEET LAND OF LIBERTY." A Protestant lady in no way connected with this usurpation, has now to appeal to her country for protection from this official of a foreign organization, who has had the temerity to declare that an American woman, acting in conformity with American law, has thereby entered on a "life of sin," a phrase which is a mere euphonism for lewdness. She has been publicly denounced to the society in which she lives, and the denouncer boldly puts forth the law of a mediatized European prince as superior to, and nullifying, the law of the United States.

The claim to override states and to dictate to its rivals its own grotesque regulations—in this instance a regulation so grotesque that it ignores and reverses its own doctrine—is a demonstration of that inanity which in ordinary individuals is produced by congestion of the brain. When a power-mania rules the world in a mad-house, surgical means are taken to relieve his surcharged brain. Now the Roman sect again is in frenzy, the sixth or seventh time since the orthodox Greeks and the Protestants were demented enough to restore the papacy in 1813. Since the battle of Waterloo the Protestant sects have gradually succumbed to the opiates of the Tory reaction to feudalism and operative slavery. It is time they stirred themselves not merely to preserve their liberty to remain in existence as sects, but to preserve their own freedom from social ostracism and to defend their wives and children from the taboo of imbecile superstition.

P. S.—Since the above was written Cardinal Gibbons has gone a step farther in the reconquest of the state by calling on all the other Christians to combine with him in establishing an Inquisition in the public service, which would give effect to a conspiracy to exclude all Jews, Atheists, Agnostics, Mormons, Mohammedans, Buddhists and Parsees from all offices of authority; while it treasonably defies the Constitution and steals public money for the creation of the dementia in the children of the love of a figment. This is as crude a piece of treason and as direct a provocation to civil commotion as the Roman church has yet contrived throughout the whole length of its awful and horrifying career; also it is as straightforward a call as can be made on citizens to conspire to subvert and defy the basic law of the Republic of the United States—the law of liberty.

LETTER FROM IGNORAMUS.

He Can't Understand Why God Went to the Trouble of Creating Insects Which have to be Fought With Insects, and He Sends us the Following Editorial in the Chicago Post:

Could the crops of the country be preserved even for a single year from the many voracious insect foes which assail them, the wealth of the farmers and of the entire nation would be increased many fold. This is exactly what the Bureau of Entomology at Washington is striving to do, and though the results accomplished fall short of complete success the victories won from the insect foes are remarkable, while even more remarkable are the methods enployed to conquer the farmer's smallest and most powerful enemies.

A little stranger, as a writer in Van Norden's Magazine puts it, arrived in Washington not long ago. To the naked eye the newcomer, which was about the size of a pin's head, was a most uninteresting immigrant. It came from Europe in a glass bottle and was worth many times its weight in gold, for it was the egg parasite of the elm leaf beetle. Anyone from New England knows about the elm leaf beetle, which in recent years has destroyed innumerable magnificent shade trees and has defied puny man's efforts to destroy him. But the new immigrant is relied upon to turn the scale of battle and save the trees.

Another pest which is to be fought with an army of fellow insect foes is the gypsy moth, which has spread from Maine to Connecticut and has done damage incalculable. From Europe has been brought an insect which is the traditional foe of the gypsy moth, and the newcomer is to be propagated by the million and then turned loose to fight man's battle for him—a battle in which no quarter will be given and no prisoners taken, for the vanquished will be devoured by the victors.

Man has seldom undertaken a more wonderful work than this of fighting insects with insects. Think of searching the world over for a creature the size of a pin's head, of transporting it when found thousands of miles, of propagating it by the million and then turning it loose to fight the battles which man is powerless to fight for himself. It must seem at times that man is the puny creature and these insects the mighty ones of the world.

All that "Ignoramus" has got to do in order to fully understand the "Whys" and "Wherefores" of pernicious insect life, is to call upon an ignorant minister of the gospel for an explanation. The more ignorant he is the easier he will explain the whole matter making, it perfectly plain to Ignoramus's mind.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?
The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP
with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Camp Meetings.

Harrison D. Barrett Again Makes Some Important Statements in Regard to Camp Meetings, and Their Effects on Local Societies.—He Presents Some Impressive Statistics Which Spiritualists Would Do Well to Carefully Consider.

When I wrote my article that appeared in The Progressive Thinker of Aug. 22, I had not seen the reviews of my former contributions from the facile pens of my esteemed friends, Rev. W. F. Peck, Mrs. Martha Woolsey and Mrs. M. T. Longley. My article was called forth by personal letters, in criticisms, for the most part kindly, of previous essays of mine upon the same subject. I do not believe that Brother Peck and Mrs. Longley had written their very able reviews at the time my contribution to No. 978 of The Progressive Thinker was mailed to Editor Francis. I make the above statement in order that the readers of these words may not mistake what I have have hitherto said as replies to what had not really been seen by me.

With nearly everything my able reviewers have said, I am in perfect accord. Aside from Mrs. Woolsey, who assumes a personal motive on my part in the present discussion, my friends have really argued my case for me. Their statements actually prove my leading contentions, and I feel to thank them for helping me out so ably. Fortunate indeed is he whose opponents rally to support his side of the controversy. I am pleased to find myself in such perfect accord with these loyal workers for the Cause of Spiritualism. It is seldom that the slightest difference of opinion arises between either one of these "Defenders of the Faith" and myself. It is good to know that the supposed difference in the present discussion is more apparent than real. There are, however, some few points that require further elucidation, and for that purpose, I again venture to trespass upon your valuable space.

Let us go over the ground briefly that we may see just what is at issue. Please remember, friends, these facts:

I AM NOT AN ENEMY TO CAMP MEETINGS.
I admit that they have done a great deal of good in the past.
I admit some of them are doing good to-day.
I grant that they have converted some people to Spiritualism.
I grant that they have introduced Spiritualism to many others.
I concede that some camps are doing this work to-day.
I admit their past and present social attractiveness.
I admit that they have been educational centers in past years.
I cheerfully concede the disinterestedness and broad public spirit of the great majority of the officers of our camps.
MY CONTENTIONS ARE:
That the influence of all camps is abstract—not concrete.
That their tendency is to weaken, not strengthen existing organizations.
That they do not promote the formation of local and state associations.
That Spiritualism needs concrete effort—not abstractions.
That strong state and local organizations would do more for our Cause, as a whole, than do our summer assemblies.
That the facts and figures of history prove the disintegrating influence of such assemblies.
That there are altogether too many camps now in existence.
That ten or twelve well managed spiritual Chautauquas would meet our every need.

I have no reason to believe that any well informed Spiritualist will take exception to my first contention. I have been attending camp meetings for almost a quarter of a century, and my experience teaches me that the permanent good of the individual, man or woman, beyond momentary instruction or entertainment, is not sought, and cannot be sought even if desired at any camp. Attendance at all camps is never permanent. The population is constantly changing. A very few are able to hear all of the lectures at any one camp. No one pretends to reduce the phenomena witnessed by him to orderly form, or to analyze them scientifically. A pleasant outing, some slight dabbling with phenomena, largely for fun, a lecture or two, just to see what the speaker looks like, or may say out of the ordinary, and you have one type of camp goers.

That camps weaken local societies, no well informed Spiritualist can successfully deny. Take the state of New Hampshire. In the early seventies there was a working state organization in that commonwealth, and in round numbers, thirty local societies. There were then no camps in the state. Camps were established in Rindge and Lake Sunapee in the early eighties. Rindge did not last long, but it helped to disintegrate the locals in that state. To-day, New Hampshire has no State Association, and only two local societies, both of them located in the city of Manchester! What did it? Not New Hampshire camps alone, but New England camps taken as a whole.

Take the camp at Lily Dale, N. Y. No one denies its power. No one says it has failed to do good. The fact remains, however, and a most stubborn fact it is that that great camp has not strengthened existing local societies, nor established new ones. Why are there not strong local societies in Jamestown, Fredonia, Dunkirk, Kiantone, Dayton, Olean, Salamanca, Wellsville, Little Valley, Frewsburg, Sinclairville, and Angola? Why are there not strong working societies in Warren, Corry, Bradford, Spartanburg, Richmond, Erie, Meadville, Tidioute, Franklin, Oil City, Kane, Kane City, Mercer, and Ridgeway, Pennsylvania? Local societies once existed in every place I have named. In a half dozen of them weak societies exist to-day, doing little or no work. These cities and towns in the two states mentioned are all within one hundred and fifty, or at most two hundred miles of Lily Dale. The Spiritualists go to that beautiful and most attractive resort to get their Spiritualism, and do not care to sustain local work when at home.

In attending camps from Maine to California, Minnesota to Tennessee, I have heard, and I am within bounds, hundreds of people say that they could get all the Spiritualism they wanted at the camps, and had no use for local societies! I know of one prominent camp whose leading officer, next to the president, was not known as a Spiritualist in his home city! He, himself, told me that he was a director in one of the churches where he resided, and never attended Spiritualist meetings when any such were held there! He was a bitter and most unreasonable opponent of the State and National Associations! This man does not stand alone. He can be found at many camps. His influence is perceptible all over the land. He and his kind are doing their best to kill local organizations. I do not know of more than two or three states in which camps exist where his is not the controlling influence. For every local society organized as the direct result of the influence of camp meetings, twenty can be found that have been weakened, and, perhaps, killed by them.

Take the state of Michigan. At one time there were nine camp meetings in that state, and two or three grove meetings. Not so many years ago (I can remember it), eighty-six local societies were at work in that state. In 1907, Miss Spaulding, the conscientious secretary of the State Association, reported only thirty-five locals in existence, and some of them too weak to hold more than one or two meetings per year! Take the John Goff will. It was once reported in my hearing that there are 100,000 Spiritualists in Michigan.

During the past six years, five or six camps have been in existence in the same state. Did these camps raise the money to defend the Goff will? Did the local societies do it? It is reported that only about one thousand dollars were raised by our Michigan brethren in defense of the will whose provisions benefited the Spiritualists of the Wolverine state alone. The N. S. A. went to their aid and has spent in round numbers, SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS in defending that will! What influence was at work to produce this result? Was it not not that of "Individualism" as developed by the camps?

The Spiritualists of Michigan are good people at heart. They did not realize their duty in the contest in question. The camps failed to teach them their responsibility, and they did not defend their own. They got what Spiritualism they wanted at the camps, and did not care for anything outside of their own personal needs. Had there been strong local societies at work in Cass county and other sections of Michigan, public sentiment would have been so enlightened as to have made it an absolute impossibility to find twelve men so biassed by religious prejudice as to return a verdict against that will. Something was the matter in Michigan. What caused the trouble? Why were not our friends there on the defensive? There are loyal hearted people in Michigan. I am not condemning them. They are but types of what can be found in all sections of the land. The camps have weakened and overthrown local societies in that state, and they (the Spiritualists) felt under no obligations to support what to them is outside or abstract work.

State Associations are needed to protect our people from unjust legislation, and to foster missionary work. Local societies are needed to educate the people in the truths of Spiritualism. They should guard the public schools, care for the indigent, and create a healthy public sentiment as an offset to ecclesiastical bigotry and creedal prejudice. The camps do not do this work. At their very best, they can only reach a few citizens from each city or town, and those citizens do not take their Spiritualism home with them. They like Spiritualism in the abstract, but rebel at concrete labor. The camps teach an "up-in-the-air, over-head Spiritualism." A "down-on-the earth," practical, life-affecting, working Spiritualism, is the need of the race.

Brother Peck has most ably and effectively supported my arguments regarding local societies. I grant that the organization of twenty-one State Associations and the demise of the same number of camps does not appear to be a coincidence, yet coincidences have causes. I do not lay any stress whatsoever upon this singular fact that the rise of the one followed the decay of the other. In regard to the number of societies of all sorts and conditions, let me say that it should have read "860" instead of "760." In copying my manuscript the figure 7 was struck instead of 8. Of this number, 437 local societies are actually at work. Some of them are very weak, and hold only occasional meetings. Two hundred and sixteen exist only on paper, but have not surrendered their incorporation papers, or their charters as the case may be. One or two Spiritualists in each of these sleeping societies entertain the fond hope of seeing them come to life again. The other so-called societies simply represent nondescript gatherings, led by some "manager" for personal profit, or by some one medium of the anarchistic type, who wishes "to go it alone." There are over 200 such gatherings in the United States and Canada. Their average attendance is about 40,000. I do not claim that they are Spiritualists, and I do not believe Brother Peck will do so either. The 216 sleeping societies report a membership list of 13,785.

What influence, or influences, can be charged with having weakened many of the 437 live societies and soothed to sleep the 216? If the camps have not helped to do this fatal work, then I cannot read the facts of history as they stand revealed after years of careful study. Let me be perfectly fair to Brother Peck. He argued the weak and ephemeral character of our local societies, but did not reveal the cause. He is as zealous in defending organization as I am, and is more than anxious to build up local societies. He will have to look to forces other than camp meetings in order to accomplish the desired result. I claim that the fatal weakness of nearly all of our local societies is in part due to our camp meetings. In my essay in No. 978 of The Progressive Thinker, I cited three other influences that have hurt our locals. Another may be mentioned here, and it is one that Spiritualists should study with the greatest possible care.

Many local societies have been crippled and ultimately killed by the holding of seances for the purpose of freeing "spirits in prison," or of "pulling Catholic spirits off people's spines." All over this land there are circles held for these purposes only. From three to fifteen persons make up the attendance at this form of Kalee worship or Yezidi-like orgies. I heard a Buffalo, N. Y., lawyer declare before 2,000 people that the freeing of spirits who did not know they had left their bodies, and the capturing vicious ones who had attached themselves to the forms of mortals, constituted the sole purpose of Spiritualism. He further told his hearers that he alone had been selected to perform this mighty special work; that it was greater and by far more potent than the work of local societies, churches, or reform associations, taken as a whole. If I have heard one man say the very same thing, I have heard one hundred! I have good reason to believe that 10,000 is a very conservative estimate as to the number of seances held every week in the United States alone for the purpose of "freeing and catching spirits!" These ridiculous performances disgust self-respecting, intelligent Spiritualists, and cause them to go to liberal churches for their religious pabulum.

Sister Woolsey's insinuation in regard to self-seeking on my part is not fair, in fact, it is wholly unwarranted. I am the last one in the world to seek or desire "one man power." I was accused of being a "Pope," of desiring to dictate, when I opened fire on the frauds and their helpers. I am not seeking to destroy the camps. I would not do it if I could! I could not do it if I would. In studying the problem of our local societies, and seeking to find the cause of their weakness, I could not escape the logic of fact, nor the revelations of truth. The camps do not help local and state associations. This is proved by history, by statistics, and by mathematical demonstrations innumerable. I believe that a few, say a dozen camps or Chautauquas rightly conducted, could be made invaluable aids to our local societies. They could do splendid concrete work along educational and reformatory lines. By exercising due care in the selection of mediums of all phases, the phenomenal work could be placed upon a scientific basis, and instructive records made of the same. I hope this may be the ultimate of all our camps.

Sister Woolsey says "The camps have come to stay." They will stay just as long as the people patronize them, and no longer. The Methodists, Adventists, Dunkards, and other Partialist denominations all declared that their camps had come to stay. Time has done its fatal work for them all. Very few camps, as camps, are now in existence. Chautauquas have taken their places, or they have gone to return no more. A few remain and the chief object of the people who attend them is to recount the glories of the past, and to mourn over the decadent days in which they are living. History ever repeats itself. Our Spiritualist camps will follow the very same law that the other denominational camps have followed. They will remain in existence just as long as the people think they need them, and are willing to patronize them. They will then be abandoned and some other attraction will take their place.

It is said that Emperor Nero of Rome was ever on the alert to discover new forms of amusement for himself and his special flatterers, also to develop some strange dish to tempt his flagging appetite. His favorite soup was made of humming birds' tongues. Some Spiritualists are as keen for new forms of amusement as was Nero, and never find a marvel too great for them to swallow! They protest in virtuous indignation that the story of Jonah and the whale is a monstrous falsehood, yet eat the savory soup of humming birds' tongues in the form of one hundred bogus materializations per hour with great gusto, then expectantly look over their shoulders for more! Great is Diana of the Ephesians," and truly fraud is her special prophet!

Let me say here that the officers of the N. S. A. are not responsible for my opinions. So far as I know, not one of the nine trustees agrees with me. I have no assurance that the intrepid editor of The Progressive Thinker agrees with me. He has published my articles because he believes that I have gotten hold of a segment of truth with which his fifty thousand readers should become acquainted. I am not, neither is the N. S. A., attacking our camps. I am protesting against the wicked waste of vital and financial energy that an overplus of camps entail. I am calling attention to conditions, not to vague theories. I am pleading for reformation in methods of camp work to the end that bogus phenomena may be suppressed, honest mediums supported, educational work carried on, and a religious, progressive, enlightened Spiritualism established. LET US BROADEN OUR CAMPS INTO VERITABLE SPIRITUAL MECCAS, BY MAKING THEM EDUCATIONAL CENTERS, HUMANITARIAN ENTERPRISES, AND PROPAGANDISTS OF EVERY TRUTH THAT CAN POSSIBLY BE OF SERVICE TO OUR FELLOWMEN.

Yours for Spiritualism,
The "Rose City." HARRISON D. BARRETT.

DEATH DREAM COMES TRUE.

Man Laughs at Wife's Premonition—Is Mangled Beneath Train.

Tearing himself from the arms of his wife, who begged him not to leave his home in Springfield, Mo., because she had a presentiment in her dreams that he would be terribly mangled, Oscar Whitworth, a brakeman on a Frisco train, left his home on a ride to death, for he fell from the top of a car one mile west of Aurora and was ground to pieces beneath the wheels of the train.

Whitworth's absence was not noticed by members of his train crew until the freight arrived at Monett, sixteen miles away.

Half an hour later the members of another train crew passing the spot where Whitworth had fallen saw the body.

Whitworth was 30 years old and leaves a widow and two children.

When he started to go out on his run his wife, with tears streaming from her eyes, begged him to stay at home. Whitworth laughed at her premonition, and as he left home laughingly told her that he would return all right and disprove her belief in dreams.

An Advanced Chautauqua.

Particulars About Camp Meetings.—One Proposed for Illinois.

To the Editor. I have been much interested in the discussion going on in your columns regarding the past, present and future of the camps. In enumerating the causes of their decline it seem's that the fundamental cause has been entirely overlooked. We think that the cause of the non-success of the camps in the past can be found in the factthat the management has been, in nearly all cases, in the hands of a few. The stock company method, as applied to camps, never has been, and, in our opinion, never can be, so successful as a camp belonging to, and managed by, the people themselves. We are aware that those now controlling the camps may wish for no change but we feel that the camp of the future, to be successful and to accomplish the most for the good of the cause, must be a co-operative one. People will not take a personal interest in a society or association that is in the hands of and controlled by a few and in which they can have no voice in the management.

The history of all our large camps is practically the same. They were started by a few enthusiastic workers getting together and securing a location, putting in a large amount of work clearing and cleaning the grounds and doing cheerfully for the cause what they could not have been hired to do for any other object. To raise money for the necessary improvements a stock company is formed of all who can be induced to assist. All goes well for a few years until the founders begin to drop out, dissensions and dissatisfactions begin to arise, and the stock gradually gets into the hands of disinterested and in some cases dishonest parties. Perhaps the stock goes down in price enabling a few to get possession and thereby manipulate matters to suit themselves. Perhaps the controlling interest falls into the hands of one person who may run the whole camp just as he or she thinks best. Even where some of the sincere and devoted workers are able to retain their stock and continue to work for the good of the cause, canvassing and trying to bring about needed reforms, it is surely pitiful to see all their efforts rendered as naught by one person who can, by casting the controlling votes, leave matters perhaps worse than before.

When the rage for physical phenomena was at its height, we all know that the affairs of most of our camps were manipulated by those interested in materialization and other physical manifestations. Few knew to what "perfection" materialization, (so called) has been carried at some of our camps. At one camp a spirit was not only married to his affinity, but occupied with her, the bridal chamber so kindly prepared that the marriage might be consummated.

It was also stated at a mass meeting held at another camp, that several years before spirits had been so perfectly materialized that they had remained in that condition from the commencement of the camp until its close, passing their time by day, when they were not appearing at seances, in playing ball and other games, but, "thanks be," these times are nearly past. Even the stock companies are waking up and making efforts to weed out objectionable features and when a few more trumpet workers and those who are mediums at camp only, to pay for their summer's outing, are prevented from robbing visitors by taking their money and giving them nothing in return, then and not until then, will intelligent Spiritualists attend and help in the support of the needs of the public.

Now, as to camp of the future; what is needed? In our opinion there are three conditions to be met before we shall have a camp that will meet needs of the public.

First, it must be a summer resort for our young people during their vacations.

Second, we need summer schools in which instruction may be given in all psychic cults.

Third, a sanatorium where the sick may receive the benefit of the most advanced treatments, surrounded by their friends and receiving the advantage of all the beneficent features of the camp, combining advice from learned and advanced spirits with the influences of fresh air and sunshine. The camp of the future will be an advanced Chautauqua. We are aware that CAMP ASSOCIATIONS, LIKE INDIVIDUALS, CANNOT BREAK ABRUPTLY FROM THE PAST, but that a radical change in the methods by which they have been conducted, will have to be made before our camps will fulfill the purpose for which they are or should be organized, no thoughtful Spiritualist can deny.

How shall this be brought about? Sometime ago you published my call, which outlined plans for a co-operative camp for the State of Illinois, in which there would be no stock to be manipulated, where the vote of one member would be just as good as that of another and where the majority would rule; a plan which bids fair to be put in operation in the near future. But we need the co-operation of all the Spiritualists in the State. Spiritualists, do you want the very best camp in the country and are you willing to work toward the end? If you are, we can have it with a very small individual cost.

To accompish this grand object we must try to arouse a wave of enthusiasm among the Spiritualists of the state that shall assist in bringing about the right conditions. It will be an easy matter to secure the needed land and funds for improvements if all those interested will unite in one grand effort; pull all together. And now is the time to do it; do not let us put it off to some better time which may never come. If it is desirable to have a camp, it is desirable to work for it now, this coming season.

Now, what steps shall be taken to accomplish this much-to-be desired end? A few can not do it alone; we need the co-operation of all the Spiritualists in the State; we want a camp that shall belong to them all, not to a few; one in which we can all take an interest and feel that it belongs to us, our spiritual home.

The following suggestions are presented for your consideration:

First: Let twenty-five representative Spiritualists from different parts of the State, men and women of known business capability, meet and organize the Fraternal Camp Association. Elect a board of officers and get a charter from the State of Illinois, authorizing them to establish a camp for religious and educational purposes, (not for gain) allowing them to hold the necessary property and to transact all necessary business pertaining to the same; the officers to be authorized to secure an option on a suitable grove, preferably near Chicago, as being the largest business center.

Second: Get one hunderd or more persons to give the sum of five dollars each, or upward, to become charter members, and three thousand or more to pledge themselves to pay one dollar per year, annual dues. This means work, hard work, and continued work, but all things come to those who work, wait and believe. If anything is worth having, it is worth working for.

Third: Collect money and pay for the grove, and proceed with the needed improvements. The ground will need to be graded, sewers constructed electric lights and water works provided, auditorium and dancing pavilion built, and many other improvements made to make it what we are determined to have, the very best camp in the world. Get the grove paid for and all the rest will come easy. All needed improvements can be secured by giving security on the ground and improvements.

Fourth: Lease lots for a period of ninety-nine years to responsible persons at five to ten dollars per lot. In that way people will be encouraged to build substantial cottages in which they can make a summer home for themselves and families from June to September, where they can be surrounded by friends and be instructed as well as amused, and at the same time have the best possible conditions for health and happiness.

Fifth: Proceed to raise money in all legitimate ways to pay the indebtedness. Money can be raised by fairs, dances, seances and circles by mediums interested in the success of the organization, by donations and by all the various ways in which money is raised by other organizations. AFTER THE DEBTS ARE ALL PAID, let the one dollar annual dues entitle members in good standing to all the privileges of the Association, lectures, concerts, classes, etc., without charge.

Sixth: Use all possible efforts to induce wealthy Spiritualists and other friends of the enterprise and of the cause, to build and endow schools for special summer coures on all progressive lines. Have competent teachers instruct the children in all heathful field sports, including fishing, swimming and boating, in addition to the instruction given in the lyceums and pleasure afforded by suitable entertainments, making the summers spent at the camp among their pleasantest memories, that their children and their children's children may continue to make the camp their summer home.

We can have all this and more, on a firm foundation, if we will. Let us all unite in an effort to get members to join it. We want, and we can get, members enough that our organization shall stand as an irresistible force, working for the building of this camp; let us work unselfishly, hand in hand, for the advantage to the Spiritual Cause and it will surely be for the advantage of us as individuals as well. Let us get three thousand members and it will be a simple thing to build the grandest camp that ever stood in the name of Spiritualism.

If you want to have the privilege of hearing the best lecturers, the best test mediums and the best music the world affords, at the least individual expense, join this movement and help make it possible.

Let us organize and solemnly pledge ourselves to give time and money, (as far as possible) to further the objects of the organization and help make a grand camp center that shall send out a wave of progressive thought that may be felt all over the world.

This is an age of improvement and progress; we must keep step with other organizations; and above all, let us cultivate a spirit of harmony, cleansing our hearts of all selfish motives and instead of working for personal gain and self-aggrandizement, let us have courage and enthusiasm; as Scarboro says, "If you don't feel enthusiastic, get out and run up against some fellow that does." Enthusiasm is contagious and if we have not got it, let's try to "catch it."

This movement, in common with all other enterprises, would be of benefit to the business interests of the State. Chicago being the greatest railroad center in America, makes it more suitable than any other location for an enterprise of this nature. People come to Chicago from all parts of the world, on both business and pleasure, and those interested in Spiritualism would combine the two by spending their vacation at the camp and accomplishing their trading or whatever business might call them to our city at the same time.

Dear readers, will you help in this grand undertaking? Will you each consider yourself a committee of one to talk the matter up, and try and arouse an interest in your fellow Spiritualists? The writer will be glad to hear from all who are interested and are willing to help organize an Association for the purpose of securing a Spiritualists' Camp in this State. Send the address of those you consider suitable for the first committee of twenty-five to organize and oblige.

Emotional Insanity.

The time has come when the truth should be told about Cain and Abel. The world has been deceived by priestly guile and misrepresentation long enough. Born of our first parents who had been recently fashioned by God himself, and placed in the Garden of Eden, a glorious future seemed to open before them. They had largely in their hands the shaping of all future generations. Cain, the elder, a lover of fruits and vegetables, and of industrious habits, became a tiller of the soil. His mother had shown her love of fruit, so like a good son he determined to grow apples in abundance, with other choice garden productions. Cain's delight was to see flocks of sheep and lambs gamboling on the lawn, with doves and their younglings sporting in the trees and enjoying life.

Abel was a sort of cowboy. He turned his attention mostly to sheep culture and feasted on their flesh, probably drinking their blood as we know was a common habit soon after.

Genesis 3:21 says: "The Lord God made coats of skins and clothed them," the first human kind. From this it is probable it was this deific firm who first commenced the butcher business, as it was they who inaugurated tailoring, and possibly that of tanning hides; for unless well dressed, sheep pelts would not be adapted to the making of good clothes. Probably he ate of the flesh, for the record says: Abel sacrificed to him the firstlings of his flocks, and the fat thereof, for which "the Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering."

Cain was opposed to the slaughter business, and was greatly vexed because Abel killed his pets. He attempted to please the Lord by offering him the fruits of the ground, but that functionary rejected Cain's bloodless offering. Cain was angered as he had cause to be, to find the Lord feasting on his flocks, and rejecting the delicious apple that tempted his mother. Borrowing one of God's attributes, jealousy (see Ex. 20:5), and revolving the subject over in mind, he became suddenly insane, the first recorded case of emotional insanity, so grabbing a sledstake, a heavy ox-goad, or some other deadly instrument, with no thought only to revenge the insult the Lord had offered him, he just knocked the life out of his brother, when it was the Lord in fact who merited the pummeling, if deserved by any one.

There were no shrewd lawyers in those early times to spring the modern defense which saved Thaw from the electric chair, so unfortunate Cain for near 6,000 years has ignobly borne the reputation of being the first to shed blood, whereas the facts, as divinely related, place it on the first tailor.

And as to sacrifices, in after years the Lord was content to feast on the aroma from broiling bullocks, lambs, doves, and first born of human kind, while the officiating priest feasted on the barbecued flesh.

Though the sacred historian in relating the story of Cain and Abel, makes no mention of priests ministering at the altar, yet the chances are a hundred to one some worthless cuss, posing as the Lord, was there, and hugely enjoyed the roasted mutton, while Cain was in anger because of the loss of his favorite merino, from whose fine wool he contemplated making a wedding suit.

A New Church Organization Proposed.

We see it stated that the evangelical churches have determined to unite in a general association, hoping thereby to advance the common interest, and the better to crush out opposition. Wonder what will be the distinguishing feature in such an organization? Seventy-five years ago a bodily resurrection of the dead was taught by all the churches. That idea of a resurrection was borrowed from Egypt, and was to transpire when Gabriel with one foot on the sea, the other on the land, should blow his great trumpet, and proclaim, "Time shall be no longer." Then the air was to be filled with fragments of humanity rushing forward to join its fellow, and thence the parts re-united, to the throne where each person was to be sentenced according to his deeds, to spend an eternity in singing praises to the lamb, else to a hell of burning brimstone, with the Devil as stoker, there to suffer undying pains forever.

Such, in very few words, was the teaching of all the evangelical churches down to 1848, when Spiritualism, with a common sense teaching, burst on the world. Since then the idea of a material heaven, peopled with physical bodies, and a fiery hell with ceaseless torture, has gradually given way to the then Universalist idea, that, finally, humanity, however sunk in vice, would be restored to holiness and happiness.

Scarcely a churchman, unless an ignoramus, can be found to-day holding the old-time faith. Will the reconstructed and remodeled churches revive the old-time faith, as still taught in their creeds, or will they eliminate the barbarism taught therein and accept Spiritual teaching, and treat its founders as they do the so-called Jews, and brand us, as they do them, "Christ Killers."

And where are they going to draw the line between the sects, some of which will of course be left out as non-evangelic? Take the Mormons. There is no sect more earnest in the belief of a crucified Savior than they; and if the Book of Mormon is authority, they have a Devil, and a hell as hot as any Protestant ever taught, and we suppose they will cheerfully join with the reconstructed churchmen as ardently in eating their crucified junior God, and in drinking his blood as the most zealous of their numbers. Will the Mormons be left outside? We shall see.

Then there are the Destructionists. They are earnest believers in Jesus, are exemplary in their lives, and claim to be the most earnest of Christians. But there comes up the very words of the Master, responding to the inquiry of the Sadducee: "Whose wife shall she be?" who had seven husbands and died childless.—See Luke 20:25, 26, who answered:

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal to the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

They who are not "worthy to obtain the resurrection," say the Destructionists, are "cast out from the presence of the Lord and his power forever." Of course they are annihilated. Will that class of believers have any standing in the proposed new organization? We can't know until the final action.

Jesus had an inflexible rule for determining his followers. It is unfailing, and easily applied, and he who vaunteth he is a Christian should be tested by this trusty standard, and end all question in the premise.

"These signs shall follow them that believe. In my name * * * if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them."—Mark 16:17, 18.

As a man if he is a believer in Jesus, he may answer with a lie, in the affirmative; but a two-grain dose of corrosive sublimate will settle the question quickly and for all time.

Shall this be the test, good brothers of the proposed new organization?

The Prediction Will Not Materialize.

The rector of the Apostolic Mission House, at the Catholic University of Washington, Priest A. P. Doyle, reports he had access to the ear of the Pope while late in Rome, and he predicted:

"Through the work of the Mission House, in a few years the Roman Catholics in the United States will be four times as many as they now are, reaching the figures of 60,000,000 to 75,000,000, so that America, practically, will be a Catholic country."

That Catholicism aspires to dominate this country, and is laboring to that end we all know, but with its decline everywhere, only Austria, Belgium, Portugal and Spain are left to her, while indications are that the latter will soon give way; hence we apprehend something more than a "few years" will be needed to make Catholicism dominant in America. The immigration which has been pouring in upon us from Southern Europe for the last half dozen years, has turned in the opposite direction. They came as tools of their church and to advance its interests; but they did not find things as represented and so returned to Europe filled with disgust.

Some are of the opinion these returned "undesirable citizens" will come back to us, bringing large numbers with them. Such would have been the case with emigration from the north of Europe, and the country would have been profited in consequence. Not as, however, with the criminal class, representatives of the Vatican, whose highest ambition, so far as we have observed, is to get back home, and they have resorted to all manner of crime, to gain money to pay the expenses of a homeward journey, even robbing and murdering their own associates.

Its Prestige Lost in Rome.

Most Rev. Sebastian G. Messmer, Archbishop of Milwaukee, who has lately returned from a visit to Rome, makes a discouraging report of Catholicism in the city of its birth and its past glory, as well of shame. The Archbishop says:

"There are places in Rome where it is not safe for a priest to go, especially at night. If the Holy Father were to go into the streets there is no doubt his life would be in danger. There is the utmost hostility to the Pope, and the priesthood, among the lower classes."

There must be a cause for such hostility. The Archbishop ascribes it to the "contemptible press" as the cause of the disaffection; but who ever heard of a press which draws its entire support from the people of a city making open war on a popular cause. All information from Rome agrees in saying, Catholicism in its home is in a rapid decline. And, sorrowful to relate, it is positively evident, the "Mother of Harlots" is exerting all her power to the building up in the United States of her lost fame.

The Pope loses no opportunity to glorify America and its achievements. For many years it has been apparent his Holiness is co-operating with his prelates to colonize this country, and people it with the uneducated and criminal classes of Southern Europe, who are ever ready to act upon a bull from the Pope, though it required the murder of a President.

A late news article from this city to the Associated Press contained the following:

"What is considered by Catholic clergy circles of Chicago a long step toward the Americanization of the Roman Catholic Church will be taken at Rome Aug. 24, when the Congregation of the Propaganda will place the American church under canon law. Heretofore the American church has been conducted as a mission, all its affairs being administered by the Congregation of the Propaganda.

"Under the new order of affairs, as directed by the Pope, a new Archbishop, Bishop and Cardinal will be named, together with many minor positions. The American church will be placed on the same basis with Germany, France, Spain and other European Catholic countries and will be empowered to conduct its own missions in United States possessions.

"Chancellor Dunne of the Archdiocese of Chicago to-day stated he had no direct information as to the division of the church diocese. If the territory was divided, he said, Rockford, Ill., in all probability, will be named as the new See city."

And lastly, comes a cablegram from Rome telling of an audience between Cardinal Gibbons and the Pope in which the latter expressed his satisfaction with the condition of Catholicism in America, concluding with: "The Pope is preparing a letter of commendation of the work of the apostolic mission house in Washington, which he told the Cardinal he would soon publish."

Changing Front as to Theaters.

The press reports the churches are again changing front in regard to theaters. Originally in their hands, presenting the miracle and Passion Play, with various other religious scenes, the system became so corrupt the civil authorities banned against it, and sought its correction. During the reign of Elizabeth the control of the church, since which it has gradually improved in morals till the present time.

Now it is understood priestly opposition is largely withdrawn, and they will again enlist its service in advancing their interests. If the present theatrical managers continue in the lead it is confidently believed the Sisters' nude ankles, peeping out from the edge of the curtain, and sold to the highest bidder at so much an ankle for the evening, to replenish an empty treasury, will not be repeated very soon.

An English Scientist on the Subject.

Sir Oliver Lodge, in an article in the August Harper's, replying to the often-made point that communications from spirits are frequently of a trivial character, well says:

"The object is to get, not something dignified, but something evidential. What evidence of persistent memory can be better than the recollection of trifling incidents which for some personal reason happen to have made a permanent impression. * * * Do we not ourselves remember domestic trifles more vividly than things which to the outside world seem important? Wars and coronations are affairs read of in newspapers—they are usually far too public to be of use as evidence of persistent identity; but a broken toy, a family joke, or a schoolboy adventure has a more personal flavor, and is of a kind more likely to be remembered in rending old age or after a rending shock."

Sacrificed to the Nile.

The ancient Egyptians, if they did not worship the river Nile, held it in great veneration and even dread. The Nile had its appointed priests, festivals and sacrifices, and if its rising was delayed for a single day a beautiful young girl was thrown into its waters and drowned in order to appease the god's anger and secure his favors.

HYMNOLOGY.

As Viewed by One Educated in a Unitarian College, but Now a Spiritualist.

At least two lady writers in The Progressive Thinker have lately strenuously objected to the singing of what they call the orthodox hymn, entitled "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Although sung in orthodox churches, this hymn is not orthodox. It was written by a Unitarian, an English lady, in the early days of that church, when it took courage to be a Unitarian.

The Unitarians are not orthodox. I was born, trained and educated in the Unitarian church, and at a Unitarian college, but when I entered the ranks of Spiritualism I didn't change my views a particle in regard to theological and scientific methods.

To my mind and heart the Higher Criticism, the Higher Unitarianism and the Higher Spiritualism are identical.

Even yet I work harmoniously with Unitarians whenever I can get a favorable opportunity, at the same time claiming to be a Spiritualist.

One writer objects strongly to the use of the word "God" in said hymn. She would change it to read thus: "Nearer, O Truth, to thee!"

Now, "Truth" personified is a very good name, but not sufficiently comprehensive and expressive. The word "God" is the English name for the Universal Spirit of Truth.

All the great powers of the universe are totally invisible—steam, electricity, gravitation, magnetism. Now, the name God is that which designates all these powers combined, and the intelligence behind them.

There are a great many hymns sung in orthodox churches that are good enough for Spiritualists.

Attend the orthodox churches about Eastertime, and you will hear some very fine Spiritualist songs sung. Take the popular hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light;" this is really a Spiritualist hymn written by an orthodox for the orthodox.

Some of the sacred songs written by Thomas Moore are very fine. Indeed, some of the finest poetry in the English language is found in the hymn books. Spiritualists generally don't pay enough attention to music; especially at our camps there ought to be classes in music where trained teachers could teach the children and grown people, too, how to sing. This would elevate our cause immeasurably.

When I was a student at Antioch College, the college choir could sing at chapel exercises a wonderfully "beautiful" hymn. I have not heard it since. One stanza of that song has been ringing in my heart and memory ever since, thus:

"Hast thou ne'er midst life's empty noises,
Heard the solemn steps of Time,
And the low, mysterious noises
Of another clime?"

Yes, I have, and so have you if you have ears to hear (internal). Now, I would call that pure Spiritualism. Why not revive this song once sung at a Unitarian college, and let the Spiritualists have it?

Let me remind you right here that the N. S. A. is having prepared a new hymn book with songs written by Spiritualists for Spiritualists.

Let us hope this new song book will bring a new era and a revival of music and singing in our ranks.

"Music! Oh, how faint, how weak;
Language fails before thy spell;
Why should feeling ever speak
When thou canst breathe her soul so well?"

UNIQUE FUNERAL.

A Distinguished Public Man Has Neither Sermon Nor Music at His Funeral Obsequies.

To the Editor: You doubtless have seen in the papers the recent death of Col. W. F. Vilas, Madison's leading citizen, the greatest orator in the state, member of Cleveland's cabinet and one term in the United States Senate. He was the richest man in Madison, of high social position and had considerable of a reputation.

At his funeral they had no sermon and no music. The family church was Episcopalian, but don't think he could have been a member, for at the funeral they had two ministers, one Episcopalian, who read simply the Episcopal burial service; the other a Unitarian minister, who read Tennyson's poem, "Crossing the Bar."

It suggests to me that had he been a strict church member no Unitarian would have taken part. It further suggests that, fundamentally, the man himself had a little bit, if not more, of religious progress.

No music and no sermon was a great innovation on the Christian funeral usages. It will make innovations on funeral services less objectionable here in Madison hereafter, for everything that Colonel Vilas did goes here.

I want no music at my funeral, simply a beautiful Spiritualist opening poem, and closing with a brief discourse devoid of a single word suggestive of iconoclasm; not a thought against any church built up in the past, but as full as possible of information, attractive information about the next life, condensed as much as possible into a brief discourse, and what will give my Christian neighbors information they most desire.

If they should only hear themselves abused they would be justified in obsessing me in return. In my parting message I feel like, "Let the past dead bury the dead."

Of course what I would prefer giving to my Christian friends here in Madison would be nothing at all new to the thousands and thousands of readers of the grand old fighter, The Progressive Thinker.

But now since Vilas has paved the way for me, I want no music at my funeral.

I feel now that the churches of the past have been the ladder up which we have climbed to where we now have a new ladder.

WEIGHT OF A PHANTOM.

Various recent observations, curious if not entirely convincing, tend to show that there is, in connection with the living body, a second body, or form which under certain circumstances can be detached from the physical body even during life, and is itself of semi-material consistency, so that it can not only be clairvoyantly seen, but photographed and even weighed. On p. 249 of "Light" for 1907 we gave a summary of the reported results obtained by Dr. Mac Dougall, of Massachusetts, U. S. A., who, it was said, found that at the moment of death the body suddenly decreased in weight by an amount varying "from three-eighths or half an ounce up to one and one-half ounces," and this was regarded as representing the weight of the departing "soul," or psychic body.

A communication to the Societe Magnetique de France, reproduced in "Annales des Sciences Psychiques" for July-August, states that M. Rousseau, a commercial agent, living at Versailles, possesses the power of sending his "Phantom" to a distance, and it was arranged that at a given time he should send it to a seance which was being held at Paris. The medium, in an induced magnetic trance, saw the phantom enter the room, seat itself in an armchair (as had been agreed), and after eight or ten minutes approach the sitters (not according to agreement), and then go out at the door, with a parting look towards the experimenters (as agreed). The medium was disturbed and even frightened by this apparition. On inquiry afterwards it was learnt that M. Rousseau, after retiring to rest, had willed that his "double" should perform the actions described, including that of going towards the sitters, which was not contemplated in the previous arrangement. The "double," or "phantom," also succeeded in rendering some prepared screens luminous by the emanation of N-rays, indicating that those radiations proceed from the psychic body, and not from the physical one. (This fact has also been observed when the "double" of a hypnotised subject has been externalised by the method used by Count Albert de Rochas.) On another occasion the phantom double of a hypnotised subject moved a table twice, while passing close to it, just as a person's physical body would do by brushing against it, and produced raps on the table as well.

With the phantom of still another hypnotised subject an experiment was made to determine whether this projected double had weight. A large balance was fitted up, with an electric bell attachment, so that a pressure of two grammes on the scale would cause the bell to ring. The phantom came, rapped on the table, and was asked to climb on to the table; creaking sounds were heard, "as though a heavy and not very agile person was making considerable efforts to mount on to it," and the table seemed to be shaken under the strain. Then the phantom was asked to stand on the scale, placing its whole weight upon it; the balance oscillated, and the electric bell rang. From the amount of bending in a sheet of tin placed under the scale, it was estimated in another experiment that a pressure of about an ounce had been exerted on the scale. This accords with the average results obtained by Dr. MacDougall, but scarcely with the apparent action on the table, which creaked as though under the weight of a heavy person, by which we might understand a person weighing at least 150 pounds.

The same No. of "Annales des Sciences Psychiques" contains an account of Dr. Baraduc's photographs, recently exhibited in London, representing emanations from the human body, sufficiently luminous or radio-active to impress the plate. Among them is one representing three nebulous globes detaching themselves from the body of a person who had just died. These photographs of psychic emanations can it is said, be obtained in a perfectly dark room, or one lighted only by the green "safe-light" sometimes used by photographers. Still, it would be desirable, in the interests of science, that Dr. Baradue should publish futher details as to his processes, for photographic plates handled in the dark, as is done by thousands of eurs and amttttttt t t ttonnu.'atma amateurs and professionals, do not usally show any traces of auric emanations; if they did, amateur photography would be beset with more difficulties than it is at present.—Light, London, England.

GOLDEN SHEAVES.

Mortals, glean ye in the wheat-fields,
Life's vales of shadow-swept grain,
Gather the sheaves for the harvest,
Sheaves that are garnered from pain.
Bring ye the wheat that is winnowed,
From that o'er which the soul grieves,
And seek to glean from the reaping,
Life's beautiful golden sheaves.

Mortals, life's harvest is ready,
Go gather the sheaves of gold,
Bind them with fetters of sunshine,
And let progression unfold.
Let not the moments be wasted,
For o'er them the spirit grieves,
So, go ye into the wheat-field,
To gather life's golden sheaves.

Mortals, go forth to the gleaning,
With purpose earnest and true,
And gather your sheaves together,
While yet life's morning is new,
While its roseate light is gleaming,
And the loom of life fast weaves,
Walk ye in the ripened wheat-fields,
Gleaning the golden sheaves.

Yea, the sheaves of a heart of pity;
The sheaves of a tender soul,
The sheaves of power God-given,
The sheaves of supreme control.
And when ye have gleaned the harvest,
God's law of unfoldment weaves,
Ye can walk in the sunny wheat-fields,
Bringing your golden sheaves.

THE LAMENTED COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

His Widow Seeking the Light of Spiritualism.—The Great Agnostic Will Eventually Reach Her From His Spirit Home.

To the Editor: I enclose an article published Aug. 31 in a Philadelphia (Pa.) paper, concerning the widow of Robert G. Ingersoll.

I had a personal acquaintance with Mr. Ingersoll for several years, and while I could not agree with the great doubter, I considered him an honest and sincere man. He used to say: "I have great respect for the Spiritualists as a class; they are intelligent and tolerant, and can always give a reason for their belief.

Many years ago when the orthodox ministers of all orthodox churches had only harsh criticism and abuse to fling at liberals of all kinds, especially Spiritualists, the Lake Pleasant Camp Meeting Association for a few seasons established a broad and entirely Free Platform. Among the regular speakers were: Dr. Robert Collyer, Dr. J. W. Chadwick, Robert G. Ingersoll, Bishop Henry Turner (colored), of Tennessee, and three nearby ministers, a Universalist, Baptist and Congregationalist.

I was present at the Republican national convention when Mr. Ingersoll made the nominating speech for James G. Blaine. That speech I never heard equaled.

One season the lecture committee of Rutland, Vt., had Mr. Ingersoll on its list. Some of the extreme orthodox people said they had heard him in a public lecture course, but would like to hear him explain as to whether he really believed in any overruling power in the universe. He arrived in town at 2 p. m., and later, being acquainted, I called on him at the hotel, and told him what had been said. He smiled and said he could explain in a very few words during his popular course lecture.

In the evening as an introduction, he said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I am informed that some of the Christian people of Rutland think that I should explain as to whether I believe in ANY overruling power. It may be that I do ridicule and make light of the God you believe in and worship. It is the OLD TESTAMENT JEHOVAH that I am after, who gave the order 'THAT THE TAINTED MEAT SHOULD BE SOLD TO THE STRANGERS WITHOUT THE GATE'."

I sincerely hope that Mrs. Ingersoll may wish on, hope on, and lovingly trust on, and the vanished hand may again clasp hers, and the voice that was stilled, may declare that "love and united affection never dies.

Dear waiting souls, let in the light
That comes direct from heaven;
'Tis brought to us by Angels bright—
To all 'tis freely given.

NEWMAN WEEKS.

Lansdowne, Pa.

A Philadelphia paper says:

The widow of Robert G. Ingersoll is endeavoring to communicate with the great agnostic's spirit.

Although during his life she was his most devoted follower in his rejection of the Christian belief that a hereafter was certain, her great love for "Bob" has brought her to a different frame of mind. She is testing Spiritualism.

"I do not know that there is a hereafter, but there may be one," she said yesterday. "I am not a Spiritualist, and I do not know that there are spirits. But if spirits exist, I think my husband's spirit will seek me out. I am trying to aid it."

"Mrs. Ingersoll, a cultured, kindly, gentle woman, made it very clear when she admitted this that only her head and not her heart would accept evidences, if they come, of her husband's spirit. She must have its existence, and its presence, indubitably proved before she will believe.

Betrothal Period to Test Faith.

"I must have the most positive communication," she said earnestly. "The words, or messages, must deal with subject known only to myself and my husband. Before I will finally admit the identity of the spirit—if it comes—it must tell me certain sacred things in our life, it must go over with me, for instance, the period between our betrothal and our marriage. If that can be done I will admit a hereafter and a spirit world."

The interview which Mrs. Ingersoll gave yesterday to a reporter took place in the great towered mansion overlooking the wide sweep of the Hudson at Dobbs Ferry—Watson—where the Ingersolls spent their last happy married years, and where the widow has since made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Walston H. Brown.

All about the place were intimate relics of the great agnostic philosopher. His favorite books, the manuscripts of his own numerous writings, and portraits of him were present in profusion. Certainly—as his widow admitted—his spirit, granting that it exists, should return to this place above all others.

Light Burns in Tower of Home.

High in the tower of "Walston" hangs at night a lamp, visible from the river many miles north and south, and the mariners of the Hudson know it as a familiar beacon. Down in the village of Dobbs Ferry, where some of the townspeople have heard of Mrs. Ingersoll's spirit quests, there runs a story that this is intended to "guide the Colonel's spirit home."

Mrs. Ingersoll laughed when this story was repeated to her. She made it plain that she had no such ultra-sentimental ideas. It's merely a night lamp; most of the houses in the hills have them," she explained. Then with a touch of charming humor: "Surely, a spirit shouldn't need a lamp!"

"I am not a Spiritualist," she began, in setting forth her narrative, "yet I am not opposed to Spiritualists. They are a kindly people, as a rule. Their beliefs are at least harmless. Their ideas seem to give great comfort to some.

"I have a woman friend who is a medium. She appears to have unusual powers. Yet many others who displayed strange powers before my husband and myself—one was the noted Slade—were afterward exposed as fakirs. And so—I have no firm opinion.

"Yet, this is what makes me persist in seeking the truth on the subject. My husband, influenced by his own great love of truth on every subject, said to me before his death:

"If a world of spirits exists, and it is possible for a spirit to establish communication between that world and this on which we live, I will try to establish communication with you."

"I am endeavoring," the widow continued, "to aid in the establishment of that communication."

"And it has not come?"

"No, it has not come."

It was suggested to Mrs. Ingersoll that divers noted mediums had professed to have received communications from her husband.

Finds Comfort in Hope.

"I know," she said, smiling, "I have heard some of them. I have heard sentences purporting to be in his style of oratory. They were flimsy imitation, imagined by those who gave them out."

"Yet you hope that Colonel Ingersoll's spirit may come?"

"I hope so, yes. It would be a great comfort to me to be sure that his spirit was waiting for mine to join it, and also to believe that in the spirit world he was continuing the activities of which I was so proud in this life. If I were sure of this I would not care to live longer. I am sure that if there is a spirit world there are no evil spirits in it; it must be altogether a good world."

Mr. Ingersoll died in 1899. The nearest approach he ever made to admitting even the possibility of a hereafter was in the famous funeral oration which he delivered over the body of his brother, in which he said:

"What awaits us after death? Whether it be annihilation or immortality, we can speak with no certainty."

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Letter from Harrison D. Barrett.

To the Editor: Just a line to tell you that I am not considering the Secretaryship of the N. S. A. in any way, shape or form at the present moment; neither am I a candidate for the presidency of the National body. I am not an aspirant for any position, directly or indirectly, connected with the N. S. A. I may change my mind in regard to the Historian's work, if it seems desirable for me to complete it.

Intimations are reaching me to the effect that I am in the field against President Warne. You cannot make the statement too emphatic to your readers should you say that this statement is untrue. I have only one candidate for the presidency of the N. S. A.; that candidate is George B. Warne, first, last and all the time. He deserves a unanimous re-election, and I hope that no one will enter the list against him.

A Deep Subject for Philosophers to Consider.—Mrs. Hitchcock, in Trance, Told Suicide Story.—Dr. von Gieson Astounds Lunacy Commission by Announcing that He Hypnotized Woman Accused of Murdering Her Husband and that in Sub-Conscious State She Showed How He Shot Her and Killed Himself.—Extraordinary Turn in Inquiry Into Her Sanity.—The Health Board's Expert, Who Exercised the Spell on the Prisoner in a Tombs Cell, Offers to Repeat the Feat Before the Members of the Commission.

To the Editor: According to a statement made in the New York World of recent date, a sensation was caused near the end of the session of the commission appointed to ascertain the mental condition of Mrs. Charlotte Hitchcock, accused of the murder of her husband, when Dr. Ira T. Von Geison, an expert of the board of health, connected with the Willard Parker hospital, testified that he had placed the woman in "an intermediary hypnotic state," by holding a lighted candle over her head, and that while in this condition, HER SUBCONSCIOUS SELF RELATED THE STORY OF THE SHOOTING LAST NOV. 20. Dr. Von Geison volunteered to hypnotize Mrs. Hitchcock in the presence of the commission.

"We make this offer in good faith," said Lawyer Talley, for the defense; "we offer to go through the same process that we did in the Tombs and let Mrs. Hitchcock tell her story as she told it while her conscious mind was dormant."

Assistant District Attorney Du Vivier, as well as Drs. Hamilton, MacDonald and Robertson, the members of the commission, were taken by surprise.

"This is something entirely novel," said the assistant district attorney, "to put a defendant on the witness stand in a hypnotized condition and compel her to testify."

Did Not "Compel" Her.

"Not compel," interrupted Dr. Van Gieson; "permitting, if you please; permitting."

The testimony of Dr. Van Gieson followed an effort on the part of the attorney for the defendant to have it agreed that the commission in lunacy should confine itself entirely to the mental condition of Mrs. Hitchcock at the time her husband was shot to death beside her in bed and she was wounded. Judge Foster directed that her present condition should also be considered.

Dr. Von Gieson was of the opinion that the woman had complete amnesia, at least two days before the shooting.

"My opinion is based on examinations I made in the Tombs," said the witness; "on June 8 I placed her in an intermediary hypnotic state, and got from her a fairly coherent and consistent story of the whole affair. Mr. Lenahan, of Goldfogle & Talley's office, took down the substance of the woman's statements while she was in the subconscious condition. In my opinion, she was insane on Nov. 20, but is sane now.

Here we have something which Spiritualists do not fully understand in a practical manner—the full nature of the subconscious mind or self. Who can tell exactly what it is, and how, under all circumstances, it acts?

A TRUTH SEEKER.

Infinite Intelligence.

A Highly Instructive, Interesting and Suggestive Communication.

"We believe in Infinite Intelligence." This is the first tenet of our Declaration of Principles. We hold this belief, because the universe is constructed upon and operates under intelligent principles. That being true, we feel that the more knowledge we acquire and the more wisdom we develop, the nearer we approach Infinite Intelligence and the better are we able to order our lives and affairs aright.

It is sometimes charged that Spiritualists are atheists, but such charges are made to discredit us and are not based upon unbiased inquiry. There are undoubtedly, individuals in our ranks who hold that since the existence of a God is unprovable, mere belief in his existence neither makes us better nor worse, and that such belief is not necessary to the spiritualization of man; the the great body of Spiritualists do believe that Supreme Intelligence—call it God or by whatever other name—pervades the universe. The able men and women who have spoken from our platform or written for our Cause, have with rare exceptions declared in beautiful and exalted terms their belief in Deity.

Emma Hardinge Britten, in one of her lectures delivered in 1860, said:

"* * * every comet, every planet, every star, booming ocean, bellowing wind, whispering lily, and murmuring fountain, perpetually echoing—God! God! God!"

Andrew Jackson Davis, in his Harmonia, says

"Man's highest feeling, therefore, is universal love—that is, the love of a God of Love.

The distinguished writer and lecturer, Dr. J. M. Peebles, is quoted in his biography as follows:

"To us God is the Infinite Spirit; soul of all things; the incarnate Life Principle of the universe, imminent in dewdrops that glitter, and shells that shine, in stars that sail through silver seas, and angels that delight to do the Eternal's will."

Dr. B. F. Austin, the pastor of Plymouth Spiritualist church, Rochester, N. Y., and editor of Reason, in the November number of 1906 that magazine, says:

"The man of the future will hear the voice of God within himself and not the echo of that voice through some other man, council or church."

Charles M. Lane, in his work on "The Theory of Spiritualism," declares:

"We want men to be able to go out into the woods and commune with God—listen to the merry songs of the sweet birds as they flit from tree to tree, and behold a manifestation of God there."

T. A. Bland, M. D., author of "In the World Celestial," writes:

"There is but one fact in existence, or, to put my thought in another form, the universe is a unitary fact, and that all-comprehensive, all-including, infinite fact, I recognize as God."

These are but a few of the great many quotations I might make from a great many sources.

We do not believe in a God, seated upon a great white throne, ruling the universe after the manner of an earthly monarch. That is the narrow conception of the crude theology of the "Dark Ages;" it is the stage setting of a burlesque. We do not believe in a god with form and shape, for that implies limitation. We do not believe in a and who delights in having angels throw down their crowns before him, nor one whose vanity can be flattered by the chorus of the "saved" shouting Holy! Holy! Holy! These ideas simply show that those religionists who draw comparisons between the Infinite Ruler of the universe and the kings of earth, conceive him to be possessed of their selfishness and love of adulation.

We do not believe in a cruel, jealous or revengeful god, such as we find depicted in the Old Testament; because the very things which, on the one hand, men are commanded not to do, and against which our higher natures revolt, he, on the other hand, commanded his servants to perpetrate upon their fellow-kind. We do not believe in a blood-thirsty god, who maintains his majesty with premeditated slaughter. For example, let me quote you Deuteronomy 32:42, called the "Song of Moses," in which God is made to say:

"I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh; and that with the blood of the slain and of the captive, from the beginning of revenge upon the enemy."

We do not believe in a god of curses, such as is set forth in Deut. 28, beginning with verse 15. What a terrible list of curses it contains! Jesus said, "Bless and curse not." If Jesus was God, then God is not "the same yesterday, to-day and forever," for his views on cursing seemed to have changed most wonderfully.

Jesus taught a higher and nobler way as a guide for even frail and fallible men. He sought to establish the brotherhood of man kind and urged his hearers to put vengeance out of their hearts. He said, "do good to them that hate you and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." The doctrine of humility has never been very popular with organized ecclesiastical authority, therefore, he came under the displeasure of the scribes and Pharisees. He had laid bare their hypocrisy and denounced their selfishness as well as the oppressive measures they enjoined upon the people. So it is with all true reformers; they are bound to bring down upon their own heads the hatred and enmity of those entrenched powers which revel in wealth and worldly honors through the tribute that is paid them by intimidated and superstitious men.

We believe in God, whose being is co-extensive with the universe, "whom no man hath seen or can see," as Paul says in his first letter to Timothy. The God we believe in can not be brought down to the compass of vision of any finite being, whether it be man or spirit, angel or archangel.

A Biblical query says, "Can man by searching find out God?" If we are to believe the contents of many religious books, we would be persuaded that the writers had not only found out God, but that they also knew all his intents and purposes from everlasting to everlasting. The search after God is the eternal, overshadowing occupation of our mind and soul. I do not mean that we shall strive and strive until we shall at length find God at a central point in the universe and there behold him as a personality. The universe can have no center. This is an unthinkable proposition. What I mean is, that we shall probe the secrets of nature and seek to discover the laws of God, physical and moral; so that through knowledge we may be enabled to attain to a higher state of existence—that we may work upward out of the grosser elements of our environment into the more rarefied and more spiritual conditions which always lie just beyond us.

We shall never SEE God as we do an object, yet the spiritually-minded already PERCEIVE God here and now. Their deep joy and sweet peace is not diminished because they do not see; their souls sense his presence and feel their kinship with him, even as Jesus did when he said, "I am in the Father and the Father in me."—John 14:2.

Spiritualists believe in Infinite Intelligence, and that Intelligence they conceive to be spirit, or as the Bible somewhere puts it, "God is spirit." It is the function of science to discover the operations of Infinite Intelligence in nature, and, therefore, in so far as true religion requires the pursuit of knowledge, it must be scientific. It may be asked, why do not Spiritualists adopt the term "God" instead of "Infinite Intelligence?" It is because the term "God" has been used to designate a being, or rather an imaginary being, to whom acts and commands have been attributed which could not possibly be those of Infinite Intelligence. They do not wish to confound Infinite Intelligence with the God who could deliberately decide to create man, then repent of having done so, and then invent the unjust "plan of salvation," whereby merely the few elect are saved and all others are condemned to eternal torment, whether they be innocent babes untouched by actual sin, or those, to use the language of the Presbyterian Confession of Faith, "who never heard of Jesus, be they never so diligent to frame their lives according to the light of nature and the law of that religion they do profess.

You have often heard it said by Christian ministers at funerals of children that God took the child because the mother loved it too greatly. Does anybody believe that such funeral sermons ever brought comfort to a broken mother heart? Or that they inspired love for the God with such fiendish jealousy? Those who clothe their God with such attributes find the material in their own natures. We believe in Infinite Intelligence—a God that is too great to be jealous—not a God that goes peering about the world like a detective to seek out the loving woman, whose soul is crowned with the ecstatic joy of motherhood, and ruthlessly plunge into her happy heart the blade which leaves a lasting scar.

Then, too, if it happens that the child is not christened, there are those Christian ministers who will tell the mother that her child has gone to perdition; and there are other Christian ministers who will tell her that even if it was christened, but outside of their church, it is lost nevertheless. This thought, added to the pain already inflicted, is sufficient to drive a mother mad or convert her into a mere thing, which neither pleasure nor sorrow further affects. If in the depths of her misery she meets a Spiritualist who tells her that she may hear from her lost one through a spiritual medium, the minister tells her, "She must not, for Spiritualism is the work of the devil, that the spirits which return are purgatorial influences which God permits to return to tempt and deceive us." And yet they would have us believe that their God is a God of Love.

How much more comfort, reason and inspiration is there in the knowledge embodied in these simple lines:

"How sweet is the thought that the angels can come,
With their tokens of love from their beautiful home;
They whisper to us of that radiant shore;
Where pleasures unsullied shall be evermore.

"We feel their sweet presence by day and by night,
While journeying on to the region of light;
And when we arrive at the heavenly goal,
They'll welcome us into the home of the soul.

"A little while longer below we must wait,
Ere they will swing open the evergreen gate;
And give a view of the flowery way,
That leads to that haven of infinite day.

MOTHER.

A Paper Read at Harmony Grove Camp, Cal. Woman's Day, 1908, by John W. Ring.

Mother.

"If I were hanged on the highest hill,
I know whose love would follow me still,—
Mother o' mine.

"If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
I know whose love would come down to me,—
Mother o' mine.

"If I were damned of body and soul,
I know whose prayers can make me whole,—
Mother o' mine."

Woman attains the dignity of her sex when she becomes a mother; her superiority is indicated in the fruits of maternity. Religious mythology deprives Christs, Saviors and Messiahs of a natural father, but woman is exalted by becoming the vessel to receive the overshadowing of the gods, and bear the Christs, Saviors and Messiahs of the ages. In fact so intimately asociated with the Christs have become their mothers, that in many instances their divinity has been declared, and they share a degree of worship, along with their divine offspring.

Mother gives the richest fruits of her soul, along with the tissues of her body, to build the child she bears. Her hands direct and protect. Her influence so impresses the child that man seldom becomes so depraved that the mention of mother,—the soothing lullaby of childhood, the prayer at her knee, the admonitions given at leaving—and all the charm that mother wove about her boy,—will arouse him, and prove that Mother is the hub around which the human family moves.

Mother inspires the father with her fidelity and patience. Mother cheers the girls and boys in the tasks of childhood; soothes the peevish, heals the wounded,—with but a kiss,—and alleviates the sorrow, pain and woe, as far as the magic of her presence or word, may reach.

Mother's possibilities are infinite. A majority of the men styled great, have been raised, comparatively altogether, by their mothers. They frankly attribute the strength and courage which has enabled them to achieve marked success, to the influence of mother. Can woman crave any higher "right" than motherhood? What is social position, wealth, or even suffrage, compared to that broad avenue of possibility afforded by maternity? The age of woman as a chattel is past, and the age of her right and privilege to select the father of her offspring is really at hand; therein "woman's right" find an acme. Her "right"—privilege—it is to form, by thought, the recognized potent force of creation,—the life which she bears and rears, until it expresses the ideal, which she held always above her seeming possibility of attainment. Thus by thoughtful motherhood each ago proves better than the last; the race progresses and the earth is made sweeter, purer and cleaner.

Mother's strength is something more than strength of muscle, it is strength of heart. Men possessed of mother's tenderness are declared the bravest; the gentle, heartful, woman-like men are leaders, the world over. Wisdom is cold and accomplishes but little, save as it is warmed by the heart. Power of thought becomes low and useless, unless accompanied by the heart. Strength becomes brutal, unless accompanied by heart.

Woman is ruled,—and she rules,—by heart. She more fully expresses the divine, because she is heartful. It has been wisely said, "God must be a woman, because expected to forgive so much." Woman's crowning achievement is life,—motherhood—presents to the world, the pure inside of her great throbbing heart; and who sees knows that the heart is the seat of life.

Mother loves, because it is lovely to love. No thought of reward, no fear of censure,—just to love; for love saves the world. The babe may have grown to manhood, may have forgotten mother's tenets, and by continued transgression become a sot, with face bloated and besmeared; but as he lies there in the ditch, mother sees him and recognizes a mother's boy. The jeering crowd pauses, in respect, when mother approaches and covers the distorted features, from their gaze. Her heart sees past, and through, the environment over which he never learned to rule; her heart denies the sin in order to claim, the sinner,—ah, no, the baby boy, who having grown to manhood has gone astray. Let the rude officer for a moment forget himself and ask, "Who is this drunkard?" and hear the mother, "Oh, sir, he is some mother's boy. Once he was a bright-eyed darling, pillowed on the breast of a loving mother. She looked into the fount of his soul,—his eyes,— and read no prophecy of transgression. As she nestled him close to her fast beating heart, she prayed, as only mothers pray, that he might be strong enough to resist temptation and honor the world. Take him now in his weakness, protect him, even as mother would protect you if necessary,—and he will do better, when once himself and he thinks of mother."

Mother,—magical word, that rouses the very best in one's being. The spring which, when touched, sets love, charity, pride, hope, devotion, and all that distinguishes us as divine beings, in action. The picture in Memory's corridors, that blends into every other picture. The great mount in the midst of Life's Valley, to which we climb for rereshment and invigoration. In the morning of life, when our anxious gaze is directed to the eastern horizon, tinted with hues of radiant promise, mother's heart baptizes us with heaven's own benediction. We pass into the graver responsibilities of life with the impress of her great love warming our hearts with kindliness; and with that we achieve true greatness. At the zenith of the busy day of life, when experience compels us to behold possible ruin and defeat as placed against triumph and success, nothing is more cheering or inspiring than the presence of mother, with her counsels, of wisdom! Aye, of heartful devotion, to that which is right; or if she has slipped from the tenement house of flesh, we crave her spirit presence, to just touch the fevered brow. As if by magic, the weight of suspense is removed, then with heart we trust even as she trusted.

When twilight shadows lengthen and the gathering shades of night grow deep, when we hear the muffled oar of the boatman, to bear us ON,—some way the very darkness is radiant with the morning it holds, for we think of the many loves awaiting our coming. Foremost among them is the sainted mother. In life with joy and cheer, mother adds luster to the scene; in life with pain and tears, mother cheers and comforts. In death we humbly cast our destiny on the love and mercy of God, whom we feel confident can be no less loving, tender and forgiving than Mather. JOHN W. RING.

TAINTED MONEY.

Some Interesting Reflections Thereon.

Tainted money from the viewpoint of Warren W. Hilditch of Yale university means money with bacteria. He used the most soiled money he could obtain from railroad, trolley, and theater ticket offices, banks, drug stores, and individuals. Some bills were more worn than others, soft, cracked, and soiled, with frayed edges. The numbers of bacteria present in the bills ranged from 14,000 to 586,000, with an average for twenty-one bills of 142,000. There seemed to be no connection between the amount of dirt and the number of bacteria present. The cleanest bill he used had next to the highest count, 405,000. The bill that looked most soiled had but 38,000. When a bill has been in circulation for a short time and has become cracked and its peculiar glaze worn off, the bacteria easily cling without the presence of dirt and grease. He inoculated guinea pigs, but none of them gave any indication of even temporary illness. Mr. Hilditch does not believe that money is dangerous as a trasmitter of disease. He thinks that money constitutes an unimportant factor in the transmission of disease. But he does not regard his experiments as conclusive. In order to obtain any conclusive evidence on this point it would be necessary to make a careful study of hundreds or even a thousand bills from hospitals and private sick rooms, drug stores, and various other sources. A bank teller said: "If one stops to think, money can't be a common means of tramission, for if it were there wouldn't be so many of us alive to-day; the escape from sure death of those whose duty calls for the constant handling of money is certainly not merely due to chance."

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

Infinite Intelligence.

It is Vigorously Assailed by Channing Severance of California, Presenting an Exceptionally Complex Problem for the Reader to Solve to His Own Satisfaction.

Mr. William Strong is a believer in Infinite Intelligence, which is a convertible term for God, and he believes this vague and indescribable product of his mental faculties runs, controls and directs all the affairs of the universe, not, he says, in an arbitrary manner, but by laws, and everything that occurs takes place at his time. Here we have a positive assertion and as far as I can see, nothing else; for no attempt is made to show what Infinite Intelligence is, nor how it is applied to natural laws under which Nature does all her work. "Everything" is all inclusive and permits of no exception, hence, his God under either name, must BE RESPONSIBLE for all that occurs everywhere. He is quite certain God sent his son, Jesus, into this world, and of course having, or being Infinite Intelligence, he knew before he sent him all that would follow his advent; and being the governor of all things, he caused everything recorded on the pages of history since that time, if we accept Mr. Strong's premises and reason therefrom.

We have had many religious wars, and one that lasted thirty years after the Reformation, and but for God and his governing power, I infer there would have been none; and the same can be said of all the wars in which mortal man has participated. There is no escape from these conclusions; and the man who believes in Infinite Intelligence, must BELIEVE THE WORLD AS WE SEE IT TO-DAY, is what this Intelligence has decreed it should be. It has also been in the dark and bloody past just what Infinite Intelligence wanted; and the INQUISITION, which tortured, imprisoned, burned and DESTROYED MILLIONS of human beings, came "at his time" and inflicted the greatest curse on the world ever known. Therefore, if we are to believe in such a directing force in human affairs, we must endow it with anything but the characteristics of love, mercy and justice.

The way the world has been run and is now, makes it impossible to ascribe to the laws of Nature, or the intelligence back of them, anything that borders on those three characteristics. An Infinite Fiend could not have done worse in shaping and controlling the affairs of human beings, than has been done since historical records have been kept. Man was made a fighting animal, and the propensities of his nature under laws established and used by Infinite Intelligence, have compelled him to murder his fellows in war, until no man can even guess the NUMBER OF MILLIONS OF MEN SLAIN IN BATTLE.

And the age of wars has not yet passed; and if we can believe the late Bishop Potter, never will pass, for not long before his death he proclaimed his belief that wars would be known as long as the human race exists. If they are, and this indescribable something, called by Mr. Strong INFINITE INTELLIGENCE, is really RUNNING THINGS, what can we see to admire, love or respect in such an evil force or power. Nothing; and I have no more use for the new God than I have for the old Jehovah. Both are of the same kind and character, only by applying the word INFINITE to Mr. Strong's God, his personality is destroyed.

When we look at the world and consider by the light of reason what we see, that faculty, swayed by human sympathies, cannot fail to condemn as heartless and cruel much that takes place in Nature's methods of doing business, and if Nature is really controlled by such an unthinkable thing as Infinite Intelligence, then that Intelligence must be denounced by every thinking man with a heart, as the generator of needless pain and misery in unlimited quantity.

Every natural calamity, like those terrible twisters or cyclones that sweep over the country, killing human beings and destroying their homes; every tidal wave like the one that recently engulfed a portion of China killing 10,000 people; all the earthquakes, volcanoes, and climatic conditions that produce famines and have destroyed millions of our race, must be attributed to Mr. Strong's Infinite Intelligence, if he is not mistaken in his assertion that Nature acts in response to his will and wishes. You cannot make him the author of THE GOOD THINGS in this world without compelling him to be accountable for the EVIL ONES, and to shut one's eyes to the EXISTENCE OF EVIL while trying to be an OPTIMIST, is to practice a species of self-delusion.

We know this world is full of IMPERFECTIONS, yet Infinite Intelligence has had an eternity of time in which to make it otherwise, but has not done so, and no signs exist to indicate any effort is being made to do so by the old God with a new name. Scientific men are kept busy counteracting the evils that afflict the human race, for disease and death lurk in the footsteps of all who walk this earth, and continual effort is required to escape from natural evils and calamities.

The man who fails to guard against the DESTRUCTIVE FORCES of Nature will soon fall a victim to them, and as ONE QUARTER of the people born on earth die before attaining the age of six years, and ONE-HALF before they see sixteen years, we see very clearly how hard Infinite Intelligence makes it for the average infant to reach maturity. One of the meanest things he or it has done this year was to afflict Chicago with such fearful heat that IT KILLED forty babies in one day, and yet those who feel impelled to pray and worship, who want to be deluded with the idea that we are being cared for and protected by some force or power back of Nature, never refer to these things if they give them a passing thought.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker during the past few years will remember the case of a prominent Spiritualist lecturer, into whose stomach Infinite Intelligence put a tape worm forty-three feet long, causing him much suffering from poor health. Well, I heard a tape worm story recently that beats that by many feet, and I can't help thinking that if these lovers and admirers of Infinite Intelligence had one of those divine pets in their interior, absorbing their strength and impairing their vital forces, they might lose some of their love and reverence for the author and designer of tape worms.

The press of recent date records the death of a man who had a cancer in one of his eyes, and while those intelligently constructed instruments of torture are bad enough in any other part of the body, what an act of indefensible cruelty it was to place it in that sensitive organ, and yet, had the man committed suicide to escape his refined agony, Infinite Intelligence would have tormented him in the next world because he did not live until the cancer killed him. Verily "mortal man is between the DEVIL AND THE DEEP SEA" at all times, and considering this fact, what child-like powers of reason one must have, who can repose in confidence on the belief that this universe is under the control of an Intelligence that doeth all things well, and has special regard for mortal man, his welfare and happiness.

Now let us try to analyze Infinite Intelligence. What is it made of; for if it is something, it has substance, though as invisible as gas. Those who have read M. L. Sherman's Gospel of Nature, must admit the soundness of his argument for the atomic particle, and the probability that nothing exists in the universe or the infinite realms of space, not composed of these particles. When you reject them as the basis of all substance, both visible and invisible to the physical eye, you reach a CONDITION OF NOTHINGNESS, and reason tells you so; for all substance is particled and can be increased or diminished. Therefore there is nothing to make worlds or gods out of but atoms, and to talk about an Infinite God or an Intelligence, is to talk about an infinite aggregation of atoms. Outside of them what can there be? We can conceive of nothing, and the conclusion forces itself upon us, that the natural characteristics of the atom, with their inherent tendencies of attraction and repulsion, explain as far as any explanation can be reached, all the mutations of matter, seen and unseen. To suppose there is a God separate from and superior to these atoms, which must in the very nature of things have always existed, and that he could impart to them any power or tendency to act, not inherent and always present in them, is TO SUPPOSE THE IMPOSSIBLE. Therefore, what we see and call Nature, which is all that endless space contains, is an infinite COMBINATION OF ATOMIC PARTICLES, working under natural laws, without plan or purpose, for there is not, and cannot be, as far as reason is concerned, any grounds for claim otherwise. As Zeno affirmed, "there is no God but Nature, no destiny but fate;" and whether one is in a material or a spiritual world, natural laws or modes of motion must decide everything; for Infinite Intelligence is as much a myth as the Jewish Jehovah.

Not only has it done this, but is has strengthened the eyesight so that spectacles in many cases have been entirely abandoned.

"Actina" is so simple in construction and so logical in application that it at once appeals to the common-sense mind as well as to the most scientific. One of our noted expert chemists states—"Actina is an up-to-date method of treatment; cannot possibly do harm but can only prove beneficial."

So confident are we that the "Actina" is capable of relieving or curing the different forms of eye disease or strengthening the eyesight so that spectacles may be abandoned, we will gladly send you one on trial with full directions which you can thoroughly test for two weeks. If at the end of that time you are willing to part with it, send it back and no charge will be made. General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES OF YOUR POEMS sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Has anyone a "Life of Oberlin the Pastor?" If so, write to this office stating price.

Dr. G. B. Warne arrived in Chicago last week, and started immediately for the Spiritualist Convention at Minneapolis, Minn. He also has an engagement to lecture in Kansas City, Mo. His report with reference to Lily Dale Camp is very encouraging. The course of the management there with reference to fraudulent mediums will make it the most popular place of resort among the whole list, unless the others follow suit at once. There are several camps that need renovating.

J. C. F. Grumbine's new address is 1890 Beacon St., Brookline, Mass. Lecture services begin September 6, in Faelten Hall, 30 Huntington Ave., Boston, at 11 a. m. and continue through the season.

The next semi-monthly social of the Fraternal Daughters will be held at the home of Mrs J. Staner Adams, 438 So Winchester Ave., one-half block from Ogden avenue and Harrison street, on Wednesday afternoon and evening of September 9. An excellent supper will be served from 6:30 to 8 p. m. None should fail to come."

Mrs. M. J. Field writes from Salt Lake City, Utah: "I am sending you a new subscriber. I cannot express to you how much I value The Progressive Thinker. I only pay one dollar a year, but during that year there are many, very many of its numbers, any one of which is well worth the dollar. I am glad that the price is not according to value received, or I might not be able to take it. I hope I will be able to be the means of sending in more subscribers.

The Progressive Spiritual Society opened its doors on Sunday, September 5, with Mrs. Hilbert, the pastor, in charge, and Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bloom to lend their able assistance; 183 E. North avenue, the same old location at present. It is to be hoped this meeting will attract a large audience every Sunday to hear the truth expounded.

Correspondent writes: "The Chicago Spiritualists' League will hold its first public meeting of the season October 3, hall not yet decided upon, but will be announced by posters and programs later.

R. W. Tennant writes at the Universal Occult Society, 77 E. 31st st., "We had another short but very interesting talk from M. Mansell, the purport of his remarks being to focus all our forces, towards the true and good spirits, and for all Spiritualists to try and live the true life, so that we would always be a good example for the cause of Spiritualism. He was followed by messages from various mediums."

Rev. Edna McCarthy writes: "I am visiting friends in Kansas City and will be pleased to make engagements for the coming season with societies wishing an experienced speaker and message bearer. I will go to any part of the country. I can furnish reference if required. Engagement not limited by time. Address me at No. 1304 Kansas City, Mo."

A. Gothson writes from Pine City, Minn.: "It is with great pleasure I report the good time we had at Mr. Fritzen's home, August 23. Mr. Fritzen, president of Band of Peace Spiritualist Society of Minneapolis, had invited the pastor, Mrs. S. M. Lowell, to give lectures, and Mrs. Griffen to give spirit messages at his beautiful summer residence at the head of Pokeyama Lake. In the afternoon Mrs. Lowell gave an eloquent address, followed by spirit messages by Mrs. Griffen. The subject for the afternoon lecture was 'How can we Better Ourselves for the Future Life?' This subject was given by Mr. John Norstrom, formerly an orthodox preacher and political lecturer, but who now seems to be a "red hot" investigator of Spiritualism. Mr. Norstrom has read all my books and the next step I will try to have him take is to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker. The subject was handled with the grace of our 'pioneer, Mrs. Lowell, and it was very satisfactory to even the most skeptical. Of course, people with no education can hardly understand a lecture of this kind. In the evening we had a social meeting at the same place. It was also well attended, and several were set to thinking."

Mrs. John Campbell of Moose Jaw, Sask, wants someone to locate in that place and start a meeting. She will assist, and thinks that success can finally be achieved. Address her in care of box 141.

W. J. Colville has recently addressed 5 excellent audiences in the Universalist Church, Bradford, Pa. On Sunday evening, August 30 he spoke, by request of the truly liberal minded minister, Rev. F. Bingham; on "New Wine and Old Bottles;" on Monday, August 31, on "The Coming Race; on Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 31, and September 1, interesting meetings were held in the schoolroom for answering questions. Many topics were profitably discussed. The local press gave excellent reports and commented very favorably on the entire proceedings. Mr. Colville is now lecturing daily in New York, at Studio Hall, 421 W. 57th St., near 9th Ave., at 3 and 8:15 p. m.

Titus Merritt writes from New York: "The First Association of Spiritualists think of opening September 12, to get in good running order for Dr. J. M. Peebles, on Sunday, October 4 and 11, at Elk Hall, 8th avenue and 59th st."

BEAR IN MIND that the Editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

TAKE NOTICE.—Correspondents are required when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on one side of the paper only, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

Frederick M. Stoller, alias Prof. Kyro, a South Chicago hypnotist, was held to the grand jury yesterday by Municipal Judge Torrison, on charges of embezzlement, larceny by bailee and operating a confidence game. The complainants against him were Mrs. Roxie Bonner, 109 111th place, and Mrs. Malida Miller, 272 90th street.—Chicago News, Sept. 3, 1908. Is this the Prof. Stoller who held Spiritualist meetings on the South Side?

Titus Merritt writes from New York: "Dr. J. M. Peebles will address the First Association of Spiritualists of New York, at Elk Hall, 8th avenue and 5th street, Sunday, October 4, and 11. Dr. Peebles, the world renowned speaker. He finds the great cause of Spiritualism advancing in all parts of the world. He is an advocate of true Spiritualism and is in tune with the Infinite.

The Austin Publishing Company of Rochester, N. Y., desire a copy of the Discovered Country, by Mr. Petersilea. Address the firm as above.

Harriet Boulton Byers, secretary, writes from Louisville, Ky.: "At a meeting of the official board of "The Church of the Soul," on September 1st, 1908, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: J. W. Byers, president; J. Franklin, vice-president; Harriett B. Byers, secretary; Tillie B. Gunwald, treasurer; trustees: A. S. Allen, Jacob Baur, Louis Imhoff and M. Gace. Mrs. Tillie B. Gunwald, pastor, Mrs. India Smith, assistant pastor. Our church opened September 6th. We hope to do a grand work this year as our church is self-sustaining, and the people seem anxious to hear the truth. Our dear pastor has just returned from camp, and I am sure she has many good things to tell us."

Louis H. Freedman, M. D., writes: "Wanted—to hear from good speakers and test mediums who are not engaged for the fall. Kindly give full particulars as to salary required, ability and references. Address me at 1012 1-2 Main St., Ft. Worth, Texas."

The well-known lecturer, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie of British Columbia, was in the city last week. Her many friends will be glad to welcome her back again. She will speak for the society in Toledo, Ohio, the last two Sundays of September, and for the Grand Rapids, Mich., society the first Sunday of October. She will visit Erie, Pa., Buffalo, Port Huron and Battle Creek the week before the National Convention, after which she will return to her home at Naramata, B. C. Last Sunday she lectured before the Golden Rule Society, of this city, to a large and interested audience.

A DOG AND CHILD.

Graphically Illustrating Different Phases of Life.

The following verses were suggested by an account of a childless woman of wealth who, losing her pet dog through death, caused by old age, run the gauntlet of her grief, holding funeral services over its remains, reciting poems at its burial, it is said, and going into mournful retirement, and canceling all her social engagements for the season.

The lesson intended to be conveyed by the following verses is to be read between the lines, which is this:

While it is all very well, and quite right, to care for pet animals, it seems a sad, even a wicked thing for a childless and wealthy person, especially a woman, to lavish her whole care and affection on a dog or other animal, however "faithful", when neglected children are starving, dying or existing amid moral degeneration of them:

Flora was dying, the doctor said,
As slowly, sadly he shook his head,
And watched the death-dimmed eyes.
A woman her darling's couch bent o'er;
Her eyes were wet and her heart was sore,
Her bosom rent with sighs.

Her love as strong for the dying one
As rays that reach from the noon-day Sun,
And clasp the melting wave.
No want had entered her loved one's life,
Nor care, nor sorrow, nor sin nor strife;
But love nor gold could save.

A learned man came to the place from God;
And whispered "Hope" o'er the rough-heaved sod,
And written a poem read.
But she, bereaved of her loved one, wept,
And doleful winds from the hushed sea crept,
To mourn beside the dead.

This not a child of her yearning heart,
That mourned its loss from the world, apart,
'Mid endless grief and wide;
Whose soul went out through the mists alone,
O'er realms unthought, to the great Unknown;
IT WAS A DOG THAT DIED.

In consequence of going to press on last Saturday, Labor Day being on the Monday following, many interesting items will necessarily be left out of this issue. They will come too late.

Closing Exercises at Lily Dale.

The closing exercises here for the season have been benefited by a perfect summer day. "Old Glory" of heroic size floating near the entrance was flecked with the golden sunbeams. Music from the orchestra in its last concert was wafted on zephyrs laden with the perfume of thousands of flowers in all colors of the rainbow, that add so much beauty to charming Lily Dale. The Spiritualist, the Christian, the Agnostic and the New Thoughtist (Webster, please pardon us) are here to-day on a common platform. Believers in everything or nothing are equally welcome.

There has been little ceremony in the closing. The proverbial set of resolutions of mutual admiration, which our chairman, Mr. Lillie, says "don't mean anything," were conspicuous by their absence.

Rev. Geo. H. Brooks lectured in the morning on Spiritual Unfoldment, and was also test medium of the day. He succeeded in getting acknowledgment of recognition from most of the people receiving tests in the audience, and even out of it, for he shouted out a message describing spirits accompanying a lady and gentleman walking outside the railing of the auditorium.

Aug. 31.—Breaking camp is the order, or rather disorder, of to-day's program at Lily Dale. Nearly half the population has already joined the exodus. The pretty cottages have a pathetic look still displaying the names that suggest bygone joys, such as the Temple of Peace, The Bower of Beauty, We Two, The Simple Life, Restville, etc.

Mr. G. H. Brooks does not claim to see, but to "sense" the presence of spirits. He describes them, however, as though they were really present to his physical sight.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow, known as the mill girl medium, lectured in the afternoon on Economic Freedom. Her political views will hardly be adopted in this campaign, but though radical in the extreme from our present economic standpoint, the measures of amelioration she advocated are at least in the air, from which her controlling spirit evidently absorbed them.

The evening closed with a "Love Feast," all the workers being represented on the platform in a mutual admiration society, with short speeches galore.

The treasurer's report was gratifying. Having started the season with almost a depleted treasury, it had swelled to the cheering sum of over $700, with more to follow. This in the face of hard times and political disturbance was encouraging to both spirits and mortals. For although "filthy lucre" is said not to be a passport in the spirit world, it is like the proverbial salt on a bird's tail, necessary to entangle them in the environments of earth.

There are heavy expenses in keeping up such a trysting place as beautiful Lily Dale, and we congratulate the management on their success in doing so.

We are pleased to note the improvement in Sister Carrie Twing. Her lectures here were beautiful heart to heart talks, and she also gave tests. She was complimented publicly by Brother Colville for not wearing black for her husband, whom she so sincerely loved.

Meetings are continued in Forest Temple daily and several after camp socials are coming.

MATTIE McCASLIN.

No clothing warm—not even a name!
Its small life ebbing fast.

No doctor comes with his skill to save
THIS dying one from the cruel grave;
Some mother left alone;
No costly shroud for the little form
That lies so white in the heedless storm,
That bears away its moan.

No minister comes, soft words to say,
A poem read o'er THIS poor clay;
And not one tear is shed
As they cart it off to a lonely spot,
And bury it there without a thought,
Among the unknown dead.

THIS not a woman's pet dog that died,
Without a care in the world so wide,
And not a bell to toll;
That lived and suffered through one short day;—
'Twas only a CHILD—a "cast-away!"
A POOR, WRONG'D HUMAN SOUL.

FORGET AND REMEMBER.

Forget each kindness that you do,
As soon as you have done it;
Forget the praise that falls to you,
The moment you have won it;
Forget the slander that you hear,
Before you can repeat it.

Remember every kindness done
To you, whate'er its measure;
Remember every promise made
And keep it to the letter;
Remember those who lent you aid,
And be a grateful debtor.

Remember all the happiness
That comes your way in living;
Forget each worry and distress,
Be hopeful and forgiving;
Remember good, remember truth,
Remember heaven's above you,
And you will find through age and youth,
True joys and hearts to love you.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

A New and Valuable Book.

Rev. E. W. Sprague of Detroit, Mich., who, together with his wife, served the National Spiritualists' Association for thirteen consecutive years as missionaries, traveling from place to place visiting a large majority of the States of the Union, holding meetings and seances, giving lectures and exercising their mediumship from the public rostrum; has written a book entitled: "A Future Life Demonstrated, or Twenty-six Years a Public Medium."

The book contains a brief sketch of his early life, his ancestry, opportunities for education, development as a medium, etc. The book is replete with detailed records of spirit manifestations, spirit phenomena, spirit communications, tests and messages which were given to hundreds and in the presence of thousands of people thoughout this great country. Also many of his experiences with other mediums of different phases of mediumship, "mind-readers," etc., all of which are intensely interesting as well as educational.

In this work Mr. Sprague claims to have demonstrated that the work of "mind readers" is produced by spirits. His tests as applied to that phase of occult phenomena seem to leave no doubt of his claim.

He also emphatically claims and aims to prove that a future life is as certainly demonstrated by Modern Spiritualism, as is the law of gravition or the daily revolution of the earth.

Mr. Sprague's wide experience both with his own well developed mediumship and that of Mrs. Sprague, as well as of many other mediums with whom he has come in contact in his experience of more than a quarter of a century, gives strength to his claims. He claims that if these recorded facts do not demonstrate a future life for mankind, it is useless to look for accurate proof of anything, or to try to demonstrate the simplest fact as being absolutely true.

The book contains over 300 pages of closely printed matter, also excellent portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Sprague. It is handsomely bound in cloth.

The price of the book is $1.00, postage paid. Address,

THESE MODERN TIMES.

Spiritual Methods Explained by Comparison With Material Methods.

How they teem with externalized wisdom in utilitarian measures, beyond those of former centuries. The strides in mental unfoldment and ability to receive and make useful the new ideas, is due to this, that this is the third great spiritual era of our present eternity. In all former world ages, inspiration has been heaven's methods of replenishing the mortal mind-realm and forcing changes of thought and conduct as the world was in need of the samem.

In former times, all inspiration given through seers and prophets was in symbols to meet the status of the people to whom it was addressed, and the emergencies to befall them because of their lack of complying with the rules of life and true conduct. Things were carried forward from age to age without discernment of what was symbolism and what the truth so put forth and thus, truths and their symbols were confounded and much war, blood-shed and human tyranny can be traced to these causes. In these modern times, this is better understood and while there are many who study Spiritualism and all available psychic phenomena, from a purely mortal standpoint, in the interest of self and of science, yet do the majority seek to learn things spiritual because it is food for the spirit, and they realize that the knowledge gained from the ministering angels is of great timely and eternal benefit. It is the divine birthright of all mortals to be spiritually instructed by inspiration and angel ministry. All can bring themselves enrapport with God's Spirit by thinking pure thoughts and living pure and useful lives, and though it seem sometimes the reverse, yet it is true, that all humanity is returning from delusion and seeking for the truth that makes it free from its sense-bound conditions; free to return to God the Father, as children who ask guidance and repose in His sheltering care without fear of danger and doubt of safety amid seeming dangers.

Then, too, in these modern times inventions have come, to be put to use, so that the heretofore unknown can be explained by the known and rightly comprehended. One very important invention of this kind is the telephone. We have learned by experience with this instrument, that messages are often missent because the wrong number is called, or the wires are crossed, or are down, etc., and we cannot send or receive messages. Again, central does not understand the call—it does not sound distinct and clear. Now compare this with the receiving of spiritual messages by the same method, that is, by telephone or telegraph, operated by spirits on the brains of the medium. The mortal brain is the most wonderful of all telegraphic or telephonic stations. Now it often happens that spirit operators wish to send messages, but they cannot make connection with the right brain cells, the brain being confused by worry over mostly trivial worldly or domestic matters, or some other spirit is en rapport with the same brain on other lines, so it happens that messages sometimes become confused, due to the fact that the law governing these delicate operations is not rightly understood and heeded. But the angels are at work to give the brains so attuned, other inventions more delicate in construction and more powerful in operation, to teach mortals the mental inter-activity between mortals and immortals, and cause them to see, to hear, therefore to understand the processes. All this belongs to these wonderful modern times and to this special spiritual era.

It is acknowledged by the leading Spiritualists that the investigation of the phenomena by trained minds and the application of scientific methods have done more for Spiritualists' belief than all others combined. Lake Brady Camp Meeting.

Sunday, August 30, Mr. W. V. Nicum from Dayton, Ohio, occupied the rostrum for the Lake Brady Spiritualist Camp Association. He was greeted with an appreciative audience morning and afternoon, the large seating capacity of our auditorium was well tested, while Brother Nicum presented to his attentive listeners facts not to be dislodged from any persons' mind who dares to think. His addresses were interesting because of a character that they could be received by all, as practical and as a guide of instruction for our every-day lives.

Your correspondent conducted the last service of the camp, supplementing the address of the afternoon given by the speaker with spiritual messages.

All declare this camp season has been a success. All accounts are settled, and a small sum left in reserve for another season, when the management, without doubt, will have additional talent for next season. All talent of this season have done good work, and are held in high esteem by all who have enjoyed our summer school at Lake Brady.

Many have been made conscious of the truth, that they were in touch with their spirit loved ones, through the mediumship of your scribe. She often feels an inexpressible gratitude to those who have been her inspirers, for now nearly 31 years, as a public medium and lecturer, and yet in the meridian of her life with the ripened fruit of experience, she never felt more capable than to-day, to do the real work, to advance the cause of Spiritualism and humanity. She can be addressed at Lake Brady, via Ravenna, Ohio, R. F. D. No. 4, care of I. L. Clark, until further notice. Can be engaged to officiate for societies and on funeral occasions.

MARY E. WARD.

Harmony Grove Camp, California.

I depended on another to write up our Harmony Grove camp meeting, but seeing nothing as yet, will at this late date ask space for a short item.

The camp just ended has certainly been a very successful one in every respect. The association tents were all occupied during the entire camp, and at times we could have rented more if we had them, which makes me think the company should prepare a number before another camp opens. We had a fine corps of workers, both lecturers and message mediums, who worked together and harmonized so nicely that it seemed like one large family of brothers and sisters.

This was my fourth year as secretary and camp manager, and it does me proud to know that the camp has gone ahead in the way of improvements during that time, more than it ever had before. It is also a great satisfaction to me, now that I have declined the secretaryship any longer, to know that the camp is absolutely free from debt, and has a few dollars in the treasury to begin with another year.

Mrs. Prior in Melbourne.

Some of the best lectures ever given by Mrs. Prior were the concluding ones of the season at the Temperance Hall, which terminated on July 19, after seven weeks' occupancy, instead of the month, as at first contemplated. On July 5 the subject was "The Lesson of the Temptation," when a splendid address was given from the standpoint of advanced thought with no personal devil, but the war constantly waged between the higher and lower nature. July 12, "Hast thou chosen the better part," had the incident of Martha and Mary in the Gospels as the text. July 19th, "Witches and Witchcraft; Mediums and Mediumship," gave immense scope as the history of the divers classes of mediumship was traced through the Old and New Testaments. Services were held on July 26 at the Lecture Hall at V. A. S. Rooms, the subject, "In My Father's House are Many Mansions," proving most interesting. From South Africa, South Australia, Tasmania, Ballarat, Bendigo, and various country districts in Victoria urgent requests have reached Mrs. Prior for lectures, and, at latest, visits to Ballarat and Bendigo were being arranged.

In addition to lectures and "questions answered" at V. A. S. Hall on alternate Sunday afternoons, Mrs. Prior has had most successful "Demonstrations of a Future Life" at V. A. S. Hall on every Tuesday and alternate Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock. These are among the most remarkable expositions of clairvoyant power witnessed in Melbourne, and intending visitors should not delay.—Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia.

James S. Fetterly was born into earth life May 21, 1835; in Ontario, Canada; into spirit life, July 22, 1908, at Tacoma, Wash. Mr. Fetterly was a staunch Spiritualist and read The Progressive Thinker for many years. He was also a member of the G. A. R. The writer preached his funeral from the beautiful text taken from "Ghost Land," and uttered by the spirit Constance: "The death sleep of earth is but the waking life of eternity." The floral tributes were more than beautiful, and many friends, as well as his six children, rejoiced that he had conquered death and gained the victory and is now out of bondage. Blessed is he who has passed "the gate" and "views Eternal Life" on the inner archway.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Emanuel Brant:—Q.—What is agnosticism?

A.—Prof. Huxley adopted this word derived from the Greek name of the "Unknown God," agnosto Theo. By it is understood by agnostics, that the nature of God is unknown, presumably unknowable, and the known and knowable is the only desirable field for the exercise of the human mind. It would be supposed that such belief would lead to humility and a sense of mental limitation, for the unknown is an infinite reach across which the keenest intellect sees but a narrow border. So little is known of the boundless unknown; so little demonstrated; we see only with such faint morning light, we are abashed at the narrowness of our view. Yet the agnostic, instead of being negative, as he claims, and honest in declaring his ignorance of what he does not know, is THE MOST POSITIVE AND ARROGANT. What he does not know is "the unknown." Huxley, himself, was one of the most bigoted of men, setting the fashion of deciding what was unknown, and because unknown to him, unknowable. Those who hold a lingering belief that some portion of this unknown realm might be made known were set down by him and his disciples as weak and superstitious. The man who decides the knowable from the unknowable, must have an intellect equal to a god's. He must know all that is possible to know, that he may decide what cannot be known. The majority of agnostics take just this position, and are as intolerant and bigoted as the church members in their zeal.

It is pleasing to set out with the thought of accepting only the demonstrated, and known, but we go no more than a step into the corridors of Nature before we find that if we take only the known we shall have a scant reward. We find that nine-tenths of all that passes as science—demonstrated knowledge—rests on the authority of man, and is simply their opinion. We find a goodly portion speculations and dreams. Of the truth we must accept that on authority, and its demonstration an authority. In other words, we have to take almost all the so-called "known" on faith—not in God, but the weaker reliance in men.

There is one fact to which attention should be called, a fact that is never mentioned by agnostics. All the great discoveries in science and the arts have come through the intuitions; they have been inspirations. They have been given to men who went out into the "unknown" with faith.

James Fletcher:—Q.—Are the seances of Mr. Bailey, the Australian medium, who is retained by Stanford, brother of the Stanford who founded the Stanford University in California, held under test conditions?

A.—The conditions are stated by those interested in these circles as being all that science demands. I have received the information from a correspondent, a staunch Spiritualist and of unimpeachable truthfulness, that they are not.

To this circle held at the residence of Mr. Stanford, over 6,000 articles have been brought and dropped in the midst of the members. Tigers' skins, live birds from the tropics, birds' nests with birds thereon, Indian wardrobe, blankets, Assyrian tablets, plants, flowers and numerous other articles have been brought by the spirits and dropped into the closed seance room. If true it is the most wonderful of all alleged Spiritual manifestations. Setting aside the matter of "test" conditions, the great number and variety of these "apports," as they are called, would seem to forbid the medium from producing them. It would be impossible for anyone to gather in all Australia such a collection, and yet a local newspaper asks for a demonstration, by way of bringing a daily paper from London, and have it arrive before the mail. It seems that there is nothing opposed to Spiritual laws in this request. Surely it is not more difficult to bring a newspaper from London to Melbourne, than a tiger's skin from India, through the heart of Africa, or heavy tablets from the ruins of Assyria. Time may be required, but tropical birds were brought which could not have endured a long passage. A San Francisco paper might be selected. The mail is 30 to 40 days in transit. If a spirit could carry a paper in 20, it would be sufficiently ahead of the mail to prove the contention, and place the matter beyond discussion.

Will the Stanford circle ever receive this absolute proof of the statements it makes? If it should, it would prove more than all the overflowing museum of "apports" it has collected.

The medium, Mr. Bailey, is under spirit controls, a fluent speaker, and it would be exceedingly interesting if the spirits cannot bring the newspaper to have their reasons for not being able.

C. H. Pratt and F. A. Druf:—Q.—Will you give the per cent of criminals in penitentiaries and in insane asylums with reference to their early religious training?

A.—The statistics as published in reports of these institutions are unreliable, and in some instances the officials state that the difficulties are so great that the distinction is omitted. Of course the statements of the criminals have to be taken and this is found, it is said, to be unreliable, probably, however, it is because it is so damaging to the claims for the benefit of church influence.

Some time since all the available statistics on this subject were given in this department. Religious excitement sends more victims to the asylums than any other cause. Quite ninety per cent of all criminals had early religious training. The Catholic portion, about one-third, are all bred and reared in that church, and subject to its influence. If any one thing is taught more forcible than another by the criminal record, it is that the so-called religious influence and instruction does not lead away from crime. It may be unqualifiedly stated that to-day there is not a Spiritualist, Freethinker or Agnostic, or one who has given his life to true science within the walls of any prison in the world.

There are more criminals in the ranks of the Protestant clergy in proportion to their number than in any other class. There has been published a thick volume, containing recent instances of their derelictions.

The rare exception, when a bank president or a saving trust magnate fails is to describe him other than a rigid church member, or perhaps a Sabbath-school superintendent.

When men like Rockefeller are taken as model Christians, and their blood-money accepted for the church without question, what may be expected of those taught thereby?

Henry Dant:—Q.—Will you give a brief account of Oliver Cromwell?

A.—English history gives no instance of a more able man, and he seems to have entered the arena as a direct interference of providence. He was an independent Presbyterian, and in the turmoil of the period in which he was born (1597) arose from obscurity to a rank superior to king, and brought the order of law out of chaos.

He commanded the army that defeated Charles, and was member of the court which condemned him to death. He crushed the uprising of the Scots in favor of Charles II. at Dunbar, finishing at Worcester, and assumed the title of Lord Protector. He refused the title of king, which was offered him. He died in 1658.

PASTOR SAYS DEVILS FLEE.

Evangelist Claims Authority Over All Evil Spirits; Followers Have Fits When "Power" Comes.

"We can cast out devils and heal the sick by laying on hands."

Thus claim M. S. Lemans and H. L. Trim of Cleveland, Tenn., who are preaching nightly at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The services are interesting to the uninitiated. It is claimed by the preachers that when a sinner is touched with the pentecostal tongues of flame he speaks in unknown tongues, and there is no gainsaying that a number of those seeking the "faith" have been visited by a trance or some form of mental excitement that for the time causes them to act as if they were affected by some unusual exhilaration.

Mr. Trim claims that he sees visions, and has very plainly been shown his mansion in the sky, which he describes as very fair and beautiful.

No physician is called when one of the flock suffers illness. One of the members was very near arrest in Knoxville because he would not allow a doctor to prescribe for one of sick children.

When asked regarding the claim of his being able to cast out devils, one of the evangelists stated that there was no question of his ability in this direction.

Right here is another phase of Spirit Return showing as often stated in The Progressive Thinker its kaleidoscopic characteristics. It is becoming generally known throughout the entire world, and the question arises, does it belong to any one special sect or cult? Is it not, like the air we breathe to become the heritage of all humanity?

DIVINE WRIGHT.

Sister's Spirit Made Him Die.

St. Louis, Mo.—Heeding the call of his sister's spirit, demanding that he carry out the suicide pact they had made, Lawrence Pohlman, 29, is dead to-day.

Pohlman's nerve failed him at the time the girl carried out their death agreement, but later he was equal to the occasion. Pohlman killed himself in the same room and in the same manner adopted by his sister, Amelia. Placing his head on a gas stove he turned on the four burners, threw a blanket over his head to insure effective work of the fumes, and had been dead several hours when found.

Three weeks ago Amelia killed herself by inhaling gas. Recently he told a friend that "Ever since her spirit has come to me, saying, 'Keep your promise!' Every night she comes and tells me how nice it is in heaven. 'Keep your promise!' is always her advice."—Chicago American.

NEED OF MORE SPEAKERS.

Emphasizing the Good and Needed Work of the Morris Pratt Institute.

There is considerable uneasiness in some parts of the country because of the lack of sufficient speakers to fill the demand. One well known Spiritualist, who is the president of a local Spiritualist society and also the president of a State Association, told me he did not know where to look for talent to fill his rostrum. He mentioned the fact that many good workers were passing to spirit life, and others were being engaged by societies by the year; that he had reached the end of the list and yet his program could not be made out because he could not find speakers to fill the dates. Today I learned that he had engaged one speaker to serve his society next year, thereby enabling him to have good talent every month of the season.

This may be a good omen. It may be that societies will be driven to engage permanent speakers and that better satisfaction both to societies and speakers will result; but this will not remedy the lack of speakers.

There are a few first class new speakers who have come into the work during the last few years, but not half enough to fill the places of those who have passed on to their reward in the higher life, and it is sad that such is the case.

Now the question is, what can be done to remedy this lack of speakers. I feel certain the remedy lies in the fact that the Spiritualists own and carry on the Morris Pratt Institute at Whitewater, Wisconsin. This school is already supplying a few well qualified speakers and will be able to supply many more as soon as the Spiritualists furnish the necessary funds to carry it on to its full capacity.

Last year it gave diplomas to several graduates who are now ready to fill engagements. One of them lives in this city. She is a talented young woman and was a semi-trance speaker just entering work at the time she entered the Morris Pratt Institute, and her two years work at that institution was of great benefit to her. She is a fearless and competent advocate of the truths of Modern Spiritualism, and the training she received at that school prepared her for the better use of her inspirers. It is a pleasure for me to state she is now qualified and ready to fill any Spiritualist rostrum in the land; and that any society or camp meeting association, looking for good talent, will make no mistake in securing her services.

I desire to see her well established in the work, for Spiritualism is in great need of such as she. Any society or community wishing her services can address her as follows: Miss Lina M. Schanbacher, 255 Canfield Ave., West, Detroit, Michigan. When once she has been heard she will receive other engagements and the people who hear her will begin to understand better the value of our Morris Pratt Institute, and I trust will contribute more freely to its support.

This school has come at the proper time to supply the greatest need of our great cause. I would suggest that all Spiritualists take pains to inform themselves regarding the good work of the Morris Pratt Institute and lend a helping hand in extending its usefulness.

OF INTEREST TO WOMAN.

Items that Demonstrate Which Way the "Wind is Blowing.

The committee on the revision of the consitution in Holland has reported in favor of giving women proportional representation and making them eligible to Parliament. In Holland qualified women have long had municipal suffrage.

Miss Rose Becker has been appointed a Claim Agent and United States Pension Attorney for Missouri. She has been a well known business woman in St. Louis for a number of years, being both a Notary Public and an insurance agent.

All women employed in the postal service in Norway are now to receive the same pay pay as men. Norwegian women struggled for this point for many. Almost immediately after they were granted full Parliamentary suffrage they gained their point. So much for direct influence.

A woman dispensary agent has been appointed for Talequah, the the Capital of the Cherokee nation. The recommendation was presented by the district inspector, O. H. P. Brewer. The young woman is Mrs. O. A. McNair, and she is said to possess unusual business ability. She says she will conduct the agency strictly in the interest of the public morals.

The endorsement of equal suffrage by the American Federation of Labor is one of the greatest victories it has ever won. There is now pledged to its support an organization of 2,000,000 men nearly all of them voters. There are 37 state branches and 27,000 local unions and the Federation has central unions in 570 cities.

Lady Henry Somerset calls attention to the fact that 2,584 different petitions for woman suffrage have been sent to Parliament, one of these the longest petition that has ever been received by Parliament on any subject. English women have recently held the largest public meeting and the greatest procession in the interest of the demand for suffrage that has ever been held for any cause.

WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe Replies to Mrs. Humphrey Ward.

Mrs Julia Ward Howe, president of the New England Woman Suffrage Association, has sent a letter to the London Times, in reply to Mrs. Humphrey Ward's recent attack upon the equal suffrage movement in America. Mrs. Ward said that the movement in this country was strong in the second and third of the nineteenth century, but is now almost extinct, owing to the organized opposition of women. Mrs. Howe says:

"Nothing could be further from the facts. In the second third of the nineteenth century the movement was small and unpopular. It has grown steadily in numbers and strength ever since. The change of sentiment in its favor among women has been especially marked. The National American Woman Suffrage Association grows grows in membership every year, and its annual income has risen from $2,544 in 1892 to $25,662 in 1907.

"Of the 46 states of the Union, there are anti-suffrage associations in only 4, and small anti-suffrage committees in 4 more, while there are Suffrage Associations in 32 states and several territories.

"In New York, at the time of the last constitutional convention, the suffragists secured more than 300,000 signatures; the anti-suffragists only 15,000. The woman suffrage petitions presented to the recent constitutional convention in Michigan bore 175,000 signatures. There were no petitions on the other side. In Chicago, not long ago, 97 organizations, with an aggregate membership of more than 10,000 women, petitioned for a woman suffrage clause in the new city charter, while only one small organization of women petitioned against it. In every state where petitions for suffrage and remonstrances against it have been sent to the legislature, the petitioners have always outnumbered the remonstrants. On the only occasion when the government took an official referendum among women on the subject (in Massachusetts in 1895), the women's vote was in favor of suffrage 20 to 1.

'Of the women in America who take any lively interest in woman suffrage either way, the vast majority are in favor."

Mrs. Howe quotes a large amount of testimony to show that woman suffrage has worked well in practice. She adds:

"Mrs. Ward ascribes all the defeats of woman suffrage bills to the organized opposition of women. In most of the states where such defeats have taken place, there was no anti-suffrage organization of women at all. In the few cases where these organizations existed, there is no reason to think that their influence turned the scale. Whittier said years ago that the men who were opposed to equal rights for women merely used the opposition of a few women as a cloak for their own hostility. This is equally true to-day. The great obstacle to woman suffrage is the inertia of conservatism, added to the strenuous opposition of the liquor interest and all the vicious elements."

ALONE WITH MY THOUGHTS.

An Impressive Poem Written in Compliance With the Wishes of Edgar Allan Poe.

To the Editor: I have been stopping at Lily Dale for the past four weeks, and to say that I had an enjoyable time, would be drawing it rather mildly. While there I visited Mrs. Greenemeyer, and many of my friends in spirit life came to me, and one among them was Edgar Allan Poe, who wished me to write a Poem with the title of "Alone With My Thoughts". I complied with his wish, and the result of my effort you will find enclosed. If you consider it of sufficient merit to have a place in your paper, you will kindly publish it. It is as follows:

Alone with my thoughts in the twilight,
When the fringe of the shadows appear,
I give scope to my contemplation,
And the long ago friends hover near;

They come in the garments of angels,
To extend to me greeting of love,
And assure me that there is waiting,
A home in the mansions above.

Alone with my thoughts in the silence,
As the deep'ning darkness obtains,
My vision grows clearer and clearer,
And more real its impress remains;

I again clasp the hand of affection,
That had long ago vanished from sight,
And hear as of old the sweet voices,
That come in the shadows of night.

Alone with my thoughts I see clearly,
On the banks of the heavenly shore,
The many dear friends that have entered,
The gates of the so-called death's door;

They speak of the glories celestial,
Awaiting the children of earth,
Pronouncing in words not mistaken,
That death is the deathless birth.

Alone with my thoughts I am carried
Far away from myself, and the strife,
That for eighty long years has beset me,
Through the strenuous struggles of life.

Will care for its product, "The soul,"
And I trust in God's hand to protect me,
When I finally come to the goal.

Alone with my thoughts in contentment,
I have not a misgiving or dread,
I know that his unstinted bounty,
Will in some way provide daily bread.

I know that His love is unbounded,
That it will not grow less to the end;
My faith in His justice unbroken,
I know He will prove a true friend.

Alone with my thoughts I am waiting,
'Till the pale horse and rider appear,
And I have no choice in the dating,
Be it distant or be it just here;

I know that the fiat is changeless,
And absolute justice must stand,
For the love of God is sufficient,
To meet every human command.

The Orthodox Trinity.

The Subject Considered in the Light of Reason.

TheFather, Son and Holy Ghost,
All three in one are uppermost
In superstition's aged creed,
In which are kept alive, indeed,
Religion's fundamental claims,
Asserted once with rack and flames,
And used, in requisition brought,
To force and make religious thought,
Until man's reason won the fight,
And three-make-one no more is right;
No matter what the claimants say—
The Truth is mightier than they.

A desire to know the Truth is innate, and only a knowledge of the Truth can satisfy the inquiring mind. We know many things intuitively; but a knowledge of cause and effect can only be granted by way of Reason. It is the court of inquiry that enlightens understanding, and makes possible the utmost advancement of the human race in knowledge, wisdom, and civilization.

As reason is the crowning gift of God to men, so it must be his first and supreme duty to use it in passing upon the merits and truthfulness of whatever is presented for acceptance or belief.

The Trinity doctrine has been in court a long time, and Reason has labored long and hard to find some facts in the case to justify its claims, which have been significantly weakened thereby, until the patience of the Judge is well nigh exhausted. Exactly whence, or just how the idea originated is not clear in detail. It is, however, known that the ancient Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, and Hindoos all had their triads of gods, and even Plato is credited as recognizing three original and existing principles personified in three gods united with each other in an ineffable manner in the creation and generation of beings and things; so that the Trinity idea is hardly original with the Christian religion. It seems, however, to have become a pronounced and most vital claim after the Council of Nice, 325 A. D., under Constantine, assembled for the very purpose of settling the dispute which had grown fierce between the presbyters of two principal factions respectively headed by Arius on the one hand and Athanasius on the other; both recognizing the Divinity of Christ, but disputing as to his nature and substance; Athanasius and his followers craiming that the Father and Son were consubstantial, that is of the same substance, and after much wrangling, with the favor of the Emperor, the Catholics succeeded in carrying the Council, and the Athanasian trinity was established, and has since been common stock in all the Christian Churches. Arius and many others were exiled and variously condemned as heretics; but their strength was altogether too great to be silenced, and the battle continued; and so evenly matched were the parties that sometimes one received the Imperial favor and again the other. The son of Constantine, the successor of his father, recalled the banished presbyters and reinstated them in their offices, only to be again routed by their unitring opponents; and intrigue and cunning so encouraged discord as that many new systems of religion arose, and the state of the public mind is described by Bishop Hilary, as quoted by Gibbon, the great historian, thus:

"It is a thing, equally deplorable and dangerous, that there are many creeds among men, as many doctrines as inclinations, and as many sources of blasphemy as there are faults among us; because we make creeds arbitrarily, and explain them as arbitrarily. The Homoousion is rejected and received and explained away by successive synods. The partial or total resemblance of the Father and of the Son, is a subject of dispute for these unhappy times. Every year, nay, every moon, we make new creeds, to describe invisible mysteries. We repent of what we have done, we condemn those who repent, we anathematize those whom we defended. We condemn either the doctrine of others in ourselves, or our own in that of others; and reciprocally tearing one another to pieces, we have been the cause of each other's ruin."

It will thus be seen that the Trinitarian doctrine was wide of agreement or satisfactory sanction, and came about through much angry discussion and arbitrary force. The show of passion was evidently far greater than that of reason; and a wrangling priesthood, of an illiterate age, with the aid of a great despot, established the fundamental Article of the Orthodox religion, viz: that the Father, Son and Holy Ghost are one. And Cardinal Gibbons tells us that they are perfectly equal to each other—that the second person in the Trinity is perfect God and perfect Man, that He, Christ, is the true God. And we are told by both Catholic and Protestant that a belief in this is essential to salvation; and fear among the unreasoning has no doubt made many conversions, and still fetters the ignorant and superstitious in blind devotion.

But before Reason can accept this Article of Faith it must be shown to be founded on truth. Is its enunciation a fact? Nearly one-half the Nicene Council dissented. A large majority of the bishops of Asia supported the Arian cause. The matter in dispute has never been settled in the court of reason or anywhere else, and science accords it no recognition whatever. The church has settled it only by dogmatic assertion, and by declaring it heresy to disbelieve. And, now, since all the priests and prelates concerned are unable to settle it intelligently, having only their own inventions and conjurings to offer in support against scientific averment to the contrary, what shall we conclude other than that the riddle waits solution, or rather that it is an absurdity impossible of intelligent belief?

Another effort is made by Emanuel Swedenborg, who in 1745, at near the age of sixty, claims to have had his spiritual sight opened, and to have received light from the other world on the subject. And he tells us that: "The Divine, from which are all things, is the Father, the Divine Human is called the Son, and the proceeding Divine the Holy Spirit". Here again Reason is inadequate to the task, and we are asked to confide in the mediumship of Emanuel. He enters the different heavens of the realm beyond and finds the inhabitants there discussing the same questions as are discussed here, alike there in amphitheaters, churches, and in various theological schools and places of assembly. But we are struck with the fact that his innumerable interviews with enlightened spirits resulted only in strengthening his own preconceived notions. In perusing his voluminous works we find him having free intercourse with the highest dignitaries of the Church, listening to discussions and himself discussing theological questions as naturally and as zealously there as here; and it is noticeable that he succeeded in winning over all disputants to his side of every question; and we wonder at his invincibility and cleverness with the departed doctors of Divinity, gone before; and, too, why he does not meet with the Son of Man in his extensive journeyings; for as surely as he ascended into heaven he ought to be there, and the most reliable informant concerning himself. And so it turns out that his supermundane proceedings and aids are valueless in clearing up and removing the difficulties in the way of a rational belief; and the same incompatibility with logic and reason meets us still; and convincing evidence is wanting as much as ever; for whether Emanuel was in an ecstatic or trance state communicating with his own subjective self or with the souls of others, matters little, since his visions, intercourse, and informants indicate nothing superior to himself, or to the possibilities of his subjective mind influenced by auto-suggestion, or prior impressions and influences. And though Swedenborg's rendering of the Trinity is ingenious and his resources marvelous, he nevertheless fails, as all other have done, to satisfy human reason.

In consulting Saint John on the subject, we read: "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was nothing made that was made". This is the Trinitarian text that requires us to believe that Christ was with God in the beginning; indeed, that he himself created all things, and that he is the true God; although descended from heaven through the mediumship of a Virgin, so that Mary became the Mother of God, or of his "Divine Human", without knowing a man. Now this is plainly so incredible as that no man ever has or can understand it as other than a priestly invention, and perhaps imposition, as the Jews to this day affirm. And notwithstanding carloads of papers and books have been written on the subject, the question remains unsolved, a dogmatic claim, barren of proof, and, serving only a blind faith, is fast becoming useless, and getting ready, I can but think, for retirement to appear no more in the arena of thoughtful devotion.

My own views on the subject, after much historic search, is that it is a myth, or conception, born of the imagination in an earlier and consequent unlettered age of the world; and, therefore, altogether impossible of verification as a Divine revelation to man. History informs us of many trinities or triads of imaginary gods springing from man's endeavor to solve the mysteries which confronted the childhood understanding of the human race and urging every resource for answer.

The Jewish people were surrounded by other nations worshipful as themselves. The ancient Egyptians had their harmonious and beautiful Trintty; other nations had theirs, and because of intercourse, religions become more or less mixed and the Jews, often in captivity, or in commercial or other relations with their neighbors, very naturally, indeed, must have absorbed some of their ideas; and with the Platonists at Athens in frequent and almost continuous intercourse with the bishops at Alexandria, altogether, unwarranted, and I believe impossible without stultifying Human Reason.

No matter about blind faith; if light dissolves it let it go. Truth will more than cover the loss; for it is Infinite Goodness, revealed to man by way of Reason—the reward of search and the soul's greatest satisfaction.

Truth is what we want, and no matter about Mr. Preacher, the Bishop or the Pope. Neither is endowed with any special favor or power to penetrate the invisible. Reason is more to be trusted than they, and deserving of far greater respect, because God-given. Let us be free to think and reason, just as constituted to do, and without fear, which is our bounden duty, and in no other way can we get nearer God, and learn more of his handiwork, and of the heritage and destiny of men.

DREAMING BY THE DAISIES.

In our garden is a corner
Where some daisies gaily bloom;
Right in midst of fragrant roses
Mother's hand for them made room.

Oft I wander with my dolly
To this lone and lovely spot;
Down we sit beside the daisies,
Dreaming in the sunshine hot.

To me, too, then comes a dreaming,
And I fancy that I see
Little fairies upright standing
Where the daisies ought to be.

Sweetly smiling, they are nodding
To each other, as if fun
Furnished them the fierce ambition
Of the glowing, burning sun.

Faint, I hear them coyly whisper
To the roses, blushing red:
"Watch us, giving an impression
To that child there in our bed."

Then it spoke into my hearing:
"Child of earth, be ever true;
Care not what the world may offer,
Let no guile come near to you.

"'Pureness' be your watchword ever;
'Gentleness' your steady guide;
He will lead you up the mountain
Whereon towers wisdom's light.

Germs of Mind in Plants

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

Love and Life as Science Sees Them.

A Rather Startling View in the New York World of the New Materialism That Reduces All Religion and Romance, Fame, and Affection to a Matter of Vibrating Atoms.

Ernst Haeckel recently declared to one of the new school of anti-materialists in Germany that as science and human nature were traveling it was but a short cry to the time when even our emotions—and their result, our ideals—shall be almost mathematically accounted for.

You have but yourself to look around you or read the popular literature of the day to see it—Science and the New Thought are mowing down our ideals day by day. Under the microscope of the laboratorian or the withering pen of philosophic scorn men are declared to love no longer, to have ceased to hold religious beliefs, to possess no friendships, to be incapable of ideal art, to laugh no laughs that come from happy hearts, to feel no joy for joy's own sake nor genuine pain for grief.

Every phase of men's emotions or aspirations is reduced to the level of a soulless atomicization; men love because they are attracted by some atomic process to women who more less respond, man on the same principle being the positive, woman the negative pole, and their joint loves being, consequently, a simple matter of more or less romantic polarization, or polarized romance—you can take your choice. Think, then, O infatuated youth who are paying your addresses to the Only Woman in the World—you have said so, you rogue!—that when you throw yourself on your marrowbones before her aggravating little toes to vow the eternal vows that have been vowed wholesale since vowers began to vow, it is all owing to the fact that the naughty little charmer happens by the merest accident in the world to possess a certain number of cubic feet containing a specific number of billions of atoms which respond electrically to a certain number possessed by yourself. On this assumption, then, your will, however great you may be, is not your own will—but the will of Matter, as Hoffmann taught—and you are only a machine or an ambling emanation of earth or matter endowed with a given amount of objective mental direction—doing exactly what Matter, or Nature, intended that you should do, and acting only relatively on your own account. The love of you twain is not ideal, for you are simply—silly pair!—both in a state of attraction, or attractivibility, or attractability. So there you are, and you can't disprove it or cavil at it if you accept the conclusions of scientific rationalism or materialism as it is ladled out to us nowadays.

If so, then, is it any wonder that there are so many unhappy marriages, when everything, as we are asked to believe, depends on the chance of your body being charged with atoms to a sufficiently high degree to awaken a response in a woman whose chances of being atomically responsive are so painfully exiguous? If you remember sufficient of your algebra to do a sum in what used to be called "Permutations and Combinations," just calculate the chances you really possess of meeting your mathematical affinity in a world containing something like fifteen hundred million atomic souls.

And, according to this way of looking at things, you cannot have any pure friendships. Either your friendship is the result of your politic gregariousness, man being gregarious because he wishes to protect himself, or else it is the result of a process similar to that which operates in the case of Love—only in a less pronounced degree. Your conventional friendships are, if scientific hypothesis is right, only a matter of convenience. Like certain women who cannot persuade themselves that they have done wrong, even when full proof is given them, you will not readily admit to yourself that you like a certain being because he brings certain advantages to you that you would lack without his friendly assistance. If you have, however, a faculty for looking into your heart with anything like analysis, you will very soon convince yourself.

As for Religion, on how low a plane do we find it prostituted by the scientific man. Formerly—well, it does not matter very much what many of us formerly aspired to, or for what reasons we (possibly) said our prayers. Nowadays your religion is a scientific phenomenon which postulates your own interesting personality as being part of no less important a personage than God. You are shown to be part of Nature, and Nature is intelligent matter, of which you are a more or less distinguished expression. This is what is called the theory of "vital romance," or something that is inherent in you. You are taught that you are a part of the all-pervading zeus (Pantheism this) and of course you wish to be on the best possible terms with all of which you constitute a part. However, if you have much soul in you, you cannot very well help feeling sorry for Zeus.

Why, again, are you charitable, or why do you pity your suffering fellow? Simply because you see the possibilities of matter being limited in the suffering being or the starving man. You help either of them in order to restore matter—of which you are an expression—to its pristine potential—that is, if you care enough to do so. So, then, there is no poetry in smiles, no joy in laughter, nor tragedy in tears. Even mother's love has been reduced to its scientific common denominator, and women are shown to weep for their dead young because these are part of their flesh and they are lost—part of the matter to which they both belong. And, says your scientist, if you think mother's love is so beautifully ideal, just consider the cat. The love of the cat is, scientifically, more sublime, for the unthinking animal sometimes eats her superfluous young in order that she may not be robbed of them, and because, deluded cat, she thinks she is returning them safe to her own being.

Then consider the artist, or the literary man. If the scientist is right, you may write works bubbling over with the most delightful literary fancies, not because you have any ideals, but because Matter sometimes expresses itself in this way—ponderable matter, just mark. You are a literary man just because you must express what matter thinks. Chance, again, you see. Nature endowed you with a certain intellectual momentum which, of itself, must work along lines prescribed, not by you, but by Nature or Matter, of which you are the fortunate instrument.

You write poetry like "Locksley Hall," or prose like Bacon—the man who wrote Shakespeare, you may remember—not because you have any wondrous ideals, or great will power, or any lofty conceptions, but simply because in your "innards" there is a poetical machine or a mechanical power of expression that is ever in travail, and forces you to express yourself in more or less tuneful numbers—probably less.

And this, note, gives the lie direct to the statement of Gray that mute, inglorious Miltons peopled the dark cells of our village churchyards.

"No, sir," says the scientist; "if these poor corpses had, while in life, been Miltons, they could not have been either mute or inglorious.

Alas, too, for the poor artist. According to the scientist, he is one for whom the objects of his vision have become, owing to the sensitiveness of his optic nerves, so many mental or visual obsessions. These his intellectual "demon" forces to place on record. He is the victim of a more or less pronounced frenzy, which declares itself in colors. Genius, then, does what it must, and talent does what it can.

Of course it is clear that the gifted person is none the less a human curiosity, and therefore to be envied—perhaps. This, however, is beside the point, which goes to show that there is nothing ideal in any really great worker, and that the honest mediocrity who toils and toils and produces only the ephemeral is in the end the truest and most conscientious idealist. However, the theory has its uses, grossly material and discouraging though it be. We have all met the men and women who "feel it in them" to perform wonders. For the scientist's part, they may seek the shore of ultra-Styx, since for him they have no existence as possible prodigies. They have no potential, he would say, and if they had they would have performed and never taken the trouble to promise.

It is all very sad, indeed, and when I see the little men in the crowded streets playing moral football matches for what is called "success in life," I cease to wonder that men stand up to preach the simple way of living, since everything is Chance. I see the flaw in this quite clearly, however. For, according to the foregoing and the scientists, the men who preach the simple life preach it because the complex life lies not within the dynamic energies of their own peculiar "demons." Here, then, you have the philosophy of modern life that is gathering its dark shadows upon the generations to come, for this is, indeed, how the world is traveling—according to science. —James Grant, in New York World.

OCEANIDES

A Psychical Novel.—Price Paper, Cover, 50 Cents.

This great novel is written with a distinct purpose, to set forth certain phases of spirit life and experience, as related to the gifted and inspired author. The question of soul mates or of the united male and female constituting the completed ego or angel, is advanced as a vital truth of spirit experience in the higher realms. The work radiates a good spiritual influence, and is very interesting.

It is a spiritual book for Spiritualists, and interesting for everyone.

MARY ANNE CAREW

Wife, Mother, Spirit, Angel.—Neat Cloth Cover, Price $1.00.

This great work relates the experiences of a young wife and mother, early called to the portals of death. It is very realistic, and the narrative is charmingly natural, and beautiful in its tone of sweetness. It brings that other world very near to us; the comfort it brings to those bereaved of the dear ones of the home and family, is beyond one's power to describe. All readers will be charmed with it as well as spiritually aided and uplifted.

CHESTERFIELD CAMP.

The Defeat of Mrs. Millspaugh as Secretary, Does not Augur Well for the Camp.

The annual election of officers of the Chesterfield Camp Association was held yesterday afternoon and resulted as follows:

President, Thomas O'Neill, Chesterfield.

Vice-president, James Millspaugh, Chesterfield.

Secretary, Mrs. Lydia Jessup, Chesterfield.

Treasurer, Henry Bronnenberg, Chesterfield.

Trustees, J. M. Walker, Alexandria, and Joseph Keicher, Richland township; Dr. C. B. Pendleton, Middletown; Michael Bronnenberg and Rebecca E. McKee, of Chesterfield, and Sylvester J. Louiso, of Anderson.

Mrs. Flora Millspaugh, for the past 17 years secretary of the Association, was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated, it is claimed, through the united efforts of mediums who combined against her. Mrs. Millspaugh believes in Spiritualism pure and simple, but has no use for horseplay in the practice of mediumship. She does not believe in laying down the bars to anybody and everybody who professes to have a wireless and direct connection with the spirit world, but would eliminate the fakirs if she had her way. This disposition to elevate the practice of mediumship and thus secure a better class of mediums for the Indiana association, is said to have had considerable to do in bringing about the defeat of Mrs. Millspaugh for re-election.—Anderson Daily Bulletin.

If reports be true that come from the Chesterfield camp, there is still great need of purification there along the line of mediumship. The defeat of Mrs. Millspaugh as secretary on above grounds will not add to the reputation of the camp.

Those camp meetings that cater in any sense to the questionable or fraudulent element, will gradually go down. Such a fate is inevitable. One medium, whose honesty and integrity has never been doubted, informed us he was approached on the grounds by a medium who offered to furnish him with tests, a most shameful act.

The Anderson Morning Herald says:

"Mrs. Millspaugh, who has been secretary at various times during the past seventeen years of the camp meetings, did not appear much disappointed by her defeat. She continued to maintain her opinion, which, she said, was that there are so-called mediums in camp who ought not to be allowed to practice there. She was very frank about her idea of mediums and denied that she disapproved of mediumship. She contended, however, that some of the so-called mediums conduct a dishonest business. The mediums well understood Mrs. Millspaugh's opinion and they pooled to defeat her."

Queen City Park Camp, South Burlington, Vermont.

Our camp is very prosperous now, the present speaker being W. J. Colville, with Helen Russegue and Clegg Wright coming before the week is ended. One of our finest platform test mediums, Mrs. Effie I. Chapman, is with us, and also Mrs. Welton, who conducts very satisfactory circles. Among people of note with us at present may be mentioned A. F. Hubbard, Mrs. Abbie Crossett, Mrs. Eva E. Ames (whose exquisite poems often appear in The Progressive Thinker), Mrs. Corler, clairvoyant, Mrs. Dr. Nichols, and others.

Enthusiasm is at flood tide. C.

Niantic Camp, Connecticut.

Sunday, Aug. 16, was a pleasant day and the people congregated in the auditorium under our new canopy, donated by the ladies of the Aid Society, to listen to our speaker, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, of Boston, Mass. She was with us a few days last year, and so endeared herself to many that she was hired for a few days longer this year, the result being she spent two Sundays with us to the satisfaction of all.

Tuesday, Aug. 18, she gave a seance for the benefit of those who wished, on the healing phase of her mediumship, with messages from our arisen loved ones. Her last one was a flower seance; each person bringing a flower so marked as to be easily recognized by its owner, laid on a table before her which she did not touch until she had delivered her message and it was recognized. In the midst of her readings she was interrupted by the spirit of a man who was so overjoyed, she said he was shouting "Hallelujah! Praise God!" and so on. She told him he must sit down and try to keep quiet and she would speak for him later, which she did. He said he went out in India. She asked him his name and he gave John Henry. A lady in the audience asked if the last name was Porter. The response quickly came, "Yes, yes," which relieved the medium, as she was held by this spirit to be recognized by this lady who knew him but was no relative and she did not know what had become of him, but knew he went to India as a missionary probably.

Sunday, Aug. 23, was a lovely day, and the people came in from New London, Norwich and surrounding country, to hear Dr. B. F. Austin, of Rochester, N. Y. The hour arrived for our services to commence, and as Dr. Austin had not arrived, President Thompson called Mrs. Cunningham to the chair, who responded and said she would give a short address, then fill in the time with messages, but as she concluded her remarks Dr. Austin was seen in the distance, hastening to us. It seemed he started from New York on the train and when he got to our little town of Niantic, it being service time in the church and blue laws revived by the ministers, there was no team at the depot, and he had to walk. One woman who heard the explanation said, "Let the women vote, then." And as we are a woman's suffrage person we felt to cheer that voice for freedom, and laws for justice to that part of the human race which equally bears and suffers her part in this battle for life and bread.

Dr. Austin took the stand, and delivered an address on "The Operator on the Other End of the Line."

Dr. Austin is giving stereopticon views of the auras of different characters of many, and views of the planet Mars, with its canals, flowers, etc.

Sunday, Aug. 31, our camp is virtually closed, and many are looking homeward as the last few days have been very near the frost line, with high winds, and we feel to say it has been a very pleasant camp life experience to all as far as I have learned.

MRS. N. H. FOGG.
Southington, Ct.

Lake Pleasant, Mass.

The convocation has just closed and considering the times, it was a success in every way. Every speaker and medium did excellent work and the meetings were well attended. Mrs. May S. Pepper-Vanderbilt once again scored a success with us by attracting the largest audience of the season and satisfying them as to the validity of her marvellous psychic powers. Mrs. Vanderbilt is now with the Maine camps, and in October will serve the societies at Poquoncks and at Norwich, Conn.

The annual election of officers resulted as follows: W. A. Hale, president; W. W. Lee, Mrs. A. S. Waterhouse, Mrs. T. U. Reynolds, vice-presidents; Albert P. Blinn, secretary (15 consecutive years Mr. Blinn has been elected to this office); Byron Loomis, treasurer; W. A. Hale, K. D. Childs, L. F. Crafts, Geo. W. Edwards, Wm. Critchley, F. C. Bryant, H. S. Streeter, and W. W. Lee, directors.

A Dweller on Two Planets

OR, THE DIVIDING OF THE WAY

A Story of the Great Atlantis.

One of the Most Remarkable Books of the Age.

Physical Science was much farther advanced in Atlantis, 12000 years ago than it is to-day. As understood by the Poseidii (Atlanteans) the prime principle upon which it was based—"Incal Malixetho," i. e., God is Immanent in Nature—was FIRST; to this they appended "Axte Incal, Axtuce Mun", translated: "To know God is to know all worlds whatever." They held that but One Substance existed, and but One Energy, the one being Incal (God) externalized and the other His Life in action in His Body. Applying this principle to their scientific work they accomplished through it aerial navigation without gas or sails, circumnavigating the globe in a day; conveyance of sound with reflection of the sender; heat and power conduction to whatever distance without material connection; transmuted metals; obtained, by electrical action, water from the atmosphere. These and many others were in common use. (Some of the things approach re-discovery, but the reader must remember that this book was finished in 1886, when the modern world knew them not. It knew not the cathode ray till 1896).

The book is endorsed by Prof. E. L. Larkin, the great astronomer and scientist; he regards it as one of the greatest books of the present age. Address

MRS. M. E. M. OLIVER,
415 North Fremont Ave., Los Angeles, Cal. Price, postpaid, $2.15.

JOHN W. RING AND J. W. CHISM.

In the second proposition, Mr. Chism affirms that all spiritual gifts ceased with the Apostolic age—Mr. Ring denying. This is a nicely cloth-bound volume, with title in gold letters and in addition to the discussion has a short biography of both disputants. Will be found intensely interesting. Price, $1, postpaid.
